TO THIS

THIRD EDITION.

TH E present edition of Sir John Strange's Reports has been printed from the original one in folio, without any alteration either in the text or in the marginal references made by the first editor. Owing to misinformation I did not meet with the second edition, which is in octavo, until I had proceeded so far in the present undertaking as to have committed part of the work to press. Upon examination however, I have found my mistake not to have been of any material consequence, as there is nothing that is to be met with there, which has not been inserted here. It differs indeed from the first only by pointing out additional cotemporary reports of the same case, in which it is not always accurate; by referring to some decisions more recent than those of our author, and by adding a few notes, which so far as they have been preserved, are distinguished in the present edition.

The edition now offered to the Profession will be found to differ from the two that have preceded it in the following circumstances: Many of the marginal abstracts of the several reports have been altered where they did not seem to express accurately the facts, or the event of the case. Several have been likewise added of points and opinions left unnoticed by the former editors; and both these alterations and additions have been transferred into the index, in which a number of references between such titles as correspond in their subject have been also inserted.

In the notes which have swelled these volumes so much beyond the size of former editions the reader will find some which add a value to the book it could not have otherwise possessed. They are printed in italics, and may be relied upon as authority. Did I conceive myself at liberty to indulge my personal feelings, I should hasten to declare the quarter from whence they originated, and the circumstances under which they were communicated. But I am compelled to silence, lest I should wound the goodness to which I stand so much indebted. A wish to give encouragement to industry is ever most warmly felt by persons who are most eminent for talents, erudition, and virtue. High station can not repress this desire, but adds the merit of condescension to that of benevolence.

In the remaining notes, it has been my first object to clear up those few passages in which the author, from his conciseness, is liable to the imputation of obscurity, and to mark those still fewer places in which he seems to have fallen into error. I have therefore endeavoured to point out such variations between him and other contemporary reporters in their statements of the case, or detail of the judgment, as appeared to me to be material. To enable me to do this, I have had the present work carefully compared with all the printed reports of the same period, and caused those places in which the same case is to be found in other books, to be noted in the margin. I have had the benefit likewise of a collation of some of them with a manuscript of great authority, through the friendship of a Gentleman not less noted in the profession for his learning and candour, than for his amiable conduct in private life.

My next object has been to point out such changes as have been made in the law by subsequent acts of the legislature, and to shew how far the reports given here have been confirmed or illustrated, or over-ruled by more modern decisions. With this view I have cited in the notes such cases as go directly either to establish or overturn them, and have in general marked them as such. I have also put down, without remark, such as I have conceived to support or impugn by the principle of their determination, or by the reasoning of the Judges, the authority of that case upon which the note is intended as a comment. But it will, I trust, be found that I have not used this liberty immoderately, or quoted many cases which do not bear, with some degree of closeness, upon the question at which they are pointed. Where nice distinctions between the original case, and other determinations, arise from such minute alterations of circumstances as might sometimes confuse the more inexperienced, and even partially escape the memory of the more learned part of the profession, I have thought it most convenient to state these expressly. By this means I have endeavoured to insert most of those decisions which may be thought material to the general subject of the report, and yet to avoid perplexing the reader by betraying him into an examination of cases which might not prove immediately apposite to the point under his contemplation. In some instances I have exceeded this limit, and ventured to state the leading principles of distinction upon particular branches of the law, and to arrange the principal authorities to be met with in our books upon the subject, as they seem to come under them. I have not been without some hope that these abstracts may be of use even to gentlemen established in the Profession, by enabling them to find speedily what the pressure of business will not always permit permit them to search for minutely through the several books of reports. But should I have flattered myself too far on this head, yet as the paging of the former editions is preserved, my efforts, although they may not be considered as making the present edition superior to those that have preceded it, cannot be supposed to render it inferior.

Such is the plan upon which I have endeavoured to execute this edition. In submitting it to the judgment of the Profession, I can not but feel a considerable degree of solicitude. I am aware that in the labour of an editor, there is a degree of tame perseverance and patient correctness, which in its most successful efforts is held beneath approbation. When a writer's situation is such, perhaps his wisest shelter from censure is in the concealment of his name, for that which mankind estimate but meanly, if well performed, they will condemn vehemently if imperfectly done. I can not hide from myself, much less from gentlemen better versed in legal investigations, that many of my inquiries will seem less accurate than those of more fortunate diligence, and that many of my opinions may be condemned as erroneous. But in judging of my deficiencies, it will, I hope, be considered that the cases reported in these volumes are very numerous, and the nature of the law contained in them extremely various. That a work of such length must either be continued at seasons, when the mind is in very different states of energy, or be procrastinated in its conclusion to a period distant and uncertain. That if I have attempted more than falls strictly within the province of an editor, in order to render the book more perfect, and have failed; still the attempt was laudable in its conception, and had it been well executed, would have been of service to the Profession.

P R E F A C E

TO THE

FIRST EDITION.

THE profession of the law is already so overburthened with reports, that I think it necessary, that every man who prepares any thing of this kind for the press, should give some very particular reason for his doing so. And my reason is this :

Having during the first years of my attendance at Westminster-hall been pretty diligent and exact in taking and transcribing notes ; I soon found, it introduced me to the honour of having them borrowed and transcribed by several of the Judges, and others. By this means they came into the hands of a Gentleman, who had a servant so corrupt, as clandestinely to make several copies, and sell them to persons, who had not the honour to deliver them up, when the villainy was detected. This put me under an apprehension, that I should soon see some of them in print. And as many of them were only arguments in causes never adjudged, and therefore of no use to the publick ; I thought it necessary to select these which were

were actually adjudged, and collect them together, that I might at ever so short a warning have it in my power, by printing a genuine, to suppress a surreptitious edition. With this view I caused my clerk to transcribe such cases, as I thought would be proper; and if no accident happens, that obliges me to publish them in my life, they will remain to be dealt with, as they who come after me shall think fit.

I. STRANGE.

Having during the first years of my study, since at 17, I began to peruse the law, and exact in taking and transcribing notes, I soon found, it introduced me to the honour of having them borrowed and transcribed by several of the Judges, and others. By this means they came into the hands of a Gentleman, who had a servant to corrupt, as clandestinely to make several copies, and sell them to persons who had not the honour to deliver them up, when the villainy was detected. This put me under an apprehension, that I should soon lose some of them in print. And as many of them were only arguments in cases never adjudged, and therefore of no use to the publick; I thought it necessary to relate these which Clark versus Elwick.

MR. Reeve moved the last term, That one of the witnesses to a submission to arbitration might be obliged to make affidavit thereof, in order to make it a rule of court pursuant to the stat. 9 & 10 W. 3. c. 15.

Rule made upon a witness to a submission to arbitration, to make affidavit of the execution.

10 Mod. 332. S. C. Barnes 52. 34 P. in C. R.

The Solicitor General insisted, that affidavits are voluntary; but the reason of the witness's refusal in this case was, because the award was unfairly made, and they had no other remedy but this to prevent the submission being made a rule of court. per Curiam, The hardship of this particular case will not at all vary our rule, which must be a standing method for the future: the act of parliament has appointed but this single way by affidavit; and we will not suffer a witness to evade it by his refusal. We force a witness to a bond by subpena; and every witness does by his signing undertake to prove it when required. And Hill. 6 Geo. Singleton v. Bradley, there was the same rule upon my opposing it.

Reg. Cause & Carr - Payne 550.

Bayley versus Jenners.

A person qualifying himself after listed shall be taken to be doing duty, and discharged upon common bail.

REEVE moved that defendant being a trooper might be discharged upon common bail; it appeared he was listed 16th May, and arrested 19th; and the question was, whether he had ever performed duty; and the affidavit went no farther than his learning to ride. The plaintiff insisted, that this is not doing duty as the act requires, but only in order to do duty.

Cur⁹, It is doing duty, he receives his pay, and must be discharged upon common bail (1).

Dominus Rex versus Wyndham.

Andr. 272.
Abr. 515.

THE defendant Sir William Wyndham being brought up by the Lieutenant of the Tower, Serjeant Pengelly, Mr. Jeffries, Mr. Reeve and Mr. Hungerford moved, that he might be admitted to bail, and offered several arguments to induce the court to bail him, which with the answers given thereto by Sir Joseph Jekyll, Mr. Attorney and Solicitor, are comprized in the opinion of the court, which was delivered the last day of the term ut sequitur.

Parker C. J. This is a commitment by the secretary of state for high treason generally; it has been moved on behalf of Sir William Wyndham, that he might be admitted to bail. I shall take notice of the arguments on both sides, and of the particular circumstances of this case, which have been laid before the court, with as much clearness, as the little time we have had to consider of the matter since it was spoke to, and the extraordinary business of this day, will permit me.

3] It has been admitted on all hands that the court has a discretionary power in this case; and I think the arguments which have been made use of by the counsel for Sir William Wyndham are upon these five points :

1. Exception

1. Exception, That the commitment is, that he shall be kept safe and close; it has been insisted, this is more than can be justified by law. This exception is offered without any authority to support it, and is against an infinite number of precedents. But admitting this were a good exception, the consequence would not be that we should discharge Sir William Wyndham, but only quatenus his being kept close. The keeping him safe, is only by way of admonition to the officer, to put him in mind of his duty, and the punishment which he must undergo in case of an escape. The common process which goes to the sheriff, commands him to take the defendant et eum salvo custod.

Safe and close in a commitment is only by way of direction to the officer.

2. Exception has been taken, That the charge is not said to be upon oath; and if a secretary of state might commit people without oath, the whole nation would be their tenants at will. In answer to this, I must observe, as I did before, that the precedents are many of them so, and no authority has been cited in support of the objection. The not mentioning it to be upon oath, is not conclusive, that it was not upon oath. In Ferguson's case this exception was over-ruled, Trin. 2 W. & M. and it was held in Kendal's case, that an imprisonment may be without oath; and also in the House of Lords, that commitments may be without oath. If a man be taken with treasonable papers, he may be committed, and any magistrate may commit super visum, without oath.

Commitments may be without oath.

5 Mod. 78.

3. Exception, That the commitment is generally for high treason; and it has been urged, that some particular species of treason must be expressed, and that it must have so much certainty, as to appear to be high treason to the court. 2 Inst. 52, 591. I think this opinion is not to be maintained. We presume a magistrate does right, till the contrary appears; and it has never been held necessary to express the overt act in the commitment. My Lord Coke puts the case of treason contra personam Regis, and admits that to be sufficient (1).

Commitment for high treason generally, is good. N. B. This exception had been over-ruled before in this term in the case of Mr. Harvey of Combe.
3 Vin. Abr. 334. Pl. 9.

4. It has been argued in favour of this last exception, that the habeas corpus act supposes the crime to be specifically mentioned; because it provides, that no person shall be committed a second time for the same offence, after he has been once bailed; the consequence of which is, that the court must judge by the two commitments whether the offence be the same. This argument will appear of little weight, if we consider how easy it is to vary the expression in the second commitment, and yet keep close to the principal charge. Suppose a man is committed for levying war against the King, and after he is discharged, is again committed for compassing the death of the King: these two facts appear very different upon the face of the commitments, and yet he that is charged with the one, may likewise be charged with the other; and if this objection should be held good, the consequence would be, that a man may be committed as often as the secretaries of state can vary the expression; for several species of treason may be the same fact.

5. The case of Kendal and Roe, 1 Salk. 347. 5 Mod. 78. has been relied upon by the counsel for Sir William Wyndham as a case in point. But I am of opinion, it will not come up to that now before us. They were committed by a warrant dated 24 Oct. 1695. being charged with assisting to the escape of Sir James Montgomery, who was guilty of high treason. Exception was taken, that the treason of Sir James Montgomery was not expressed in the warrant; and the fact he was committed for might not be high treason, tho' mentioned to be so. The case did not turn upon that single point, for it was held necessary, that Sir James Montgomery should be averred guilty of, and committed for high treason. And because both those particulars were not expressed in the warrant, the defendants were admitted to bail. A commitment, it is true, for stealing fruit generally would not be good, because if it was upon trees, it would be no felony. 2 Inst. 52.

1 Anders. 297.
Rush. Collect. 3
Car. Semb.
Palm. 558.

There is a case in Anderson, which was to be a direction for the future in making commitments, which is entered in the council book. In Crofton's case, which is reported in 1 Sid. 78. 1 Keb. 305. it was resolved that a commitment for high treason generally is good. Vaug. 142.

I think I have now taken notice of all the exceptions taken to the commitment. The next thing relied upon is the illness of Sir William Wyndham, which appears to be a distemper incident to the family. We are of opinion, that this is not ground enough singly, to induce the court to admit Sir William to bail: for it must be a present indisposition, arising from the confinement (1); and so we held this term in the case of Mr. Harvey of Combe, who stabbed himself after his examination; and was refused to be bailed, because his illness was from an act of his own. But I shall not enlarge upon this head, since we are all of opinion, Sir William Wyndham ought to be bailed. There have been four terms passed since his commitment, and one assizes in Somersetshire, out of which county it has been hinted the ground of the complaint against Sir William Wyndham arises; and therefore there being no prosecution against him, he must be admitted to bail, himself in 10,000 l. and four sureties in 5000 l. each.

A year's imprisonment without any prosecution, inducement to the court to bail. Salk. 103. 2 Sid. 179.

Vernon versus Goodrich. In C. B.

THE plaintiff declares, that whereas she is possessed of an house in Ipswich, to which water was conveyed by a leaden pipe from the conduit house; the defendant nevertheless has placed quadam epistomia vocat. stopcocks in canali plumbeo predicto, and thereby hindered the water from coming to her house, and that the defendant has diverted great quantities of water, by which she lost the use of her house.

Where the plaintiff declares upon a possession only, and the defendant pleads liberum tenementum, the plaintiff must shew a title in the replication; and must not barely rely on traversing the defendant's title. Yelv. 147. Poph. 1. Salk. 335. 4 Mod. 424. Com. Rep. 7.

The defendant pleads, that at the time in the declaration, et diu antea, he was seised in fee of half an acre of ground, being his garden, and lying between the conduit house and the house of the plaintiff: and being so seised, he placed the said leaden pipe in his said garden, ad utend' ill' ad ejus beneplacitum; and therefore he fixed the said stopcocks, prout ei bene licuit, quae sunt eadem, &c.

Demurrer inde, et pro causa, quod materia praed' non est placitabilis in barram actionis praed', sed tantum in retardationem responsionis ad inde habend', donec legalis titulus ad aquam praed' per ipsam (the plaintiff) ostensus fuerit.

Selby Serjeant pro quer. That the plea is ill. It is not sufficient in this case for the defendant to say, it is his freehold; for that may be true, and yet the plaintiff be intitled to the watercourse. Where the plaintiff prescribes for separat. piscar. it is not enough for the defendant to say, it is his freehold. 17 E. 4. 6. b. 7. a. 10 H. 7. 24. b. 18 H. 6. 29. b. 34 H. 6. 28. a.

That the plea should not be generally in bar of the action, but only till the plaintiff shew a title. The defendant has given no answer to the diverting great quantities of water; and therefore he prayed judgment for the plaintiff.

Branthwayte Serjeant contra. That the plea is a good plea: formerly the plaintiff must have set out a grant or prescription; but it is since settled, that to say generally he is intitled, is enough against a wrong-doer. But it is still necessary to set out a grant or prescription, when the action is against the owner of the land; and as this is laid generally, it is enough for the defendant to shew he is not a wrong-doer. 1 Vent. 274, 319. 2 Vent. 186, 291. A plea to a common intent is good. And we may as well bring the matter of law before the court, as a jury. But it not being shewn for cause of demurrer, the plaintiff cannot take advantage of the plea's amounting to the general issue. 2 Saund.

We have pleaded liberum tenementum. And if the plaintiff has any title, she may shew it in her replication. And by her demurrer she admits she has no title. If the trespass was in another place, she may shew it by new assignment.

King C. J. It is hard to say here are two charges. The wrong is the stopping the water, the carrying away is only aggravation. This declaration is upon a possession, which is only good against a wrong-doer, and therefore the plaintiff must shew a title. The defendant claims the soil, out of which the plaintiff claims an easement; and therefore she must shew her title. If it had appeared in the declaration that it was the defendant's soil, and the plaintiff had not prescribed, the declaration would have been bad (1).

MR. Solicitor General moved, that the defendant, being a gunner might be discharged upon common bail.

Baines contra. The gunner is appointed by warrant, and is in the nature of a commission officer, he receives 1*s.* per diem pay, and takes an oath; and a gunner is so much esteemed, that it is very difficult for him to get leave to lay down his post.

Solicitor Gen. He is listed as common soldiers are, and is liable to all the penalties in the act of parliament as common soldiers are.

THIS was a writ of error coram vobis, and the error assigned was, that one of the defendants, being an infant, appeared by attorney. The plaintiff pleads, that he was of full age; to which the defendant demurred, and shewed for cause, that the plaintiff has shewn no place where the defendant was of age.

Where the plaintiff replies full age of the defendant, it is not necessary to lay a venue as it is of a release.

This is an order for the removal of one Ferrer from the parish of Holy Trinity to Shoreditch: by which it appears, that Ferrer was bound as an apprentice to one Truby, with intent that he should serve Green; which he did for three years. Difference between apprentices and other servants.

But we are of opinion the justices have done right in sending him to Shoreditch, where the service actually was. It is the same thing as if Truby had turned him over to Green; in which case there would have been no question, but he had gained a settlement in Green's parish. If the master removes out of one parish into another, the apprentice gains a settlement if he lives there forty days. The turning over an apprentice is like the assigning any deed. In this case Truby was only a trustee. There is a great deal of difference between apprentices and other servants; for apprentices are not presumed to become chargeable, because the trade and mystery they learn is their estate. Therefore the order must be confirmed (1).

Garner versus Anderson.

Declaration in replevin amended after plea in abatement.

Pal. 3 Geo. 2.
On the authority of this case the parish was amended, inter Lord Gage and Robinson, after the same plea in abatement.
Cited Cun. 42.

IN replevin out of the county court, the plaintiff declared for taking his cart and four horses in Nightingale-lane in the parish of Stepney. The defendant pleads in abatement, that he took the goods in Nightingale-lane in the parish of St. John Wapping, absque hoc that he took them in Nightingale-lane in the parish of Stepney. Et pro retorn' habend' he sets forth his title to the goods as a deodand.

Hall Serjeant moved to amend the declaration, and alledged the place to be in the parish of St. John Wapping; for the one side of that lane to the causey is by act of parliament in the parish of Stepney, and the other side in the parish of St. John Wapping, and the goods were taken in that side of the lane which is in Wapping. The fact was, that a servant of the plaintiff's was driving a cart, and by chance he run over and killed a child; upon which the defendant seized the cart and horses as a deodand, and the servant was tried for the murder, and found per infortunium.

C. J. In the case of Leper v. Germain there could not be any amendment, because the commencement of the suit was wrong, and nothing to amend by. [14]

Reeve pro quer' argued, First, That the two devisees Edmund Miller and Robert Sharrock take only estates for their lives as tenants in common, with cross remainders for their lives; and that the devise to their next heirs male is a remainder in contingency only, and not executed. If it had been to them for life, remainder to their heirs male, it had been an estate-tail executed.
 1 Co. 66. Archer's case. Where by a devise to Robert Archer for life, and after to the next heir male of Robert, and to the heirs male of the body of such next heir male, it was adjudged, that Robert took only an estate for life. (1st), Because he had an expreſs estate for life devised to him; and (2^{dly}), The remainder was limited to his next heir male in the singular number; though that second reason given in Archer's case was denied for law, because heir is nomen collectivum, and one can have but one heir at once, and this shall go from heir to heir. Cro. Eliz. 313. 1 Roll.
Abr. 822. K. pl. 1. Owen 148. Clark v. Day. Yet Archer's case is good law; the true reason of that judgment was, because the words of limitation to the heirs male of the body of such next heir male were added to the heir; therefore heir was con-ſtrued to be designatio persone. 1 Vent. 216, 232. In the case at bar it is limited, by expreſs words, That they shall have but for life, and then consequently the heirs shall take as purchasers.
 2^{dly},

2dly, The words equally to be divided being added to the heirs male, as well as to the two devisees, prove the intent of the testator to be, that the heirs male should take as purchasers, and not by way of limitation. Had the devise been to the two devisees and to their heirs males, equally to be divided, these words equally to be divided might have been applied to the two devisees; but here it being twice repeated, the last must be rejected, if the heirs are to take only by way of limitation. These words in a will make a tenancy in common. 3 Co. 39. b. 2 Rol. Abr. 89. Salk. 390, 391. 1 Vent. 376. 2 Vent. 365.

The rule will be objected, when the ancestor by any gift or conveyance takes an estate of freehold, and in the same gift or conveyance an estate is mediately or immediately limited to his heirs in fee, or in tail, that always in such case his heirs are words of limitation of the estate, and not words of purchase. As to that rule, it only holds place where the remainder is executed, and not when the remainder is in contingency. 2 Rol. Abr. 418. H. pl. 5. Litt. Rep. 258.

[15] 3dly, The proviso in the will for the devisees to forfeit on cutting down timber, proves the devise to be but an estate for life; for if it is an estate-tail the proviso is void. 1 Vent. 216, 232. King v. Melling. Such an argument from the proviso is a forcible one.

Show v. Weigh,
p. 798.

Pollard v. 125.

Secondly, Whether the two devisees shall not have cross remainders for their lives by implication, with a remainder to their next heirs males in contingency only, and not executed; so that after the death of the one the survivor shall have an estate for life in the whole, and not the heir male of the person deceased. After their deceases in the will shall be taken jointly, (that is) after both their deceases it shall remain to their next heirs male. Such a construction shall be made in the case of a will, but in the case of a conveyance at common law such words may be construed distributively, so that after the decease of either, his part shall remain to his next heir male. 5 Co. 7. Wyndham's case. The words of a will shall be always followed, except the intent of the testator appear in the will to be contradictory to the words. 2 Jones 172. Raym. 452. Holmes v. Meynell, a case in point. 4 Leon, 14.

If they take but an estate for life, the fine and recovery by Robert Sharrock was a forfeiture of his estate, and a right of entry was given to the other devisee (the lessor of the plaintiff) which is sufficient to preserve a contingent remainder. 1 Vent.

188. Trin. 6 Anne, Tuckerman v. Jeffery. That was a devise to two femes, Elizabeth and Jane for their lives, equally to be divided between them, remainder to the heirs of Jane. Jane died, and Elizabeth survived; and the question was, whether Elizabeth should have the whole during her life, or the heir of Jane have that part immediately whereof Jane died seised? And the court held, that Elizabeth and Jane were joint-tenants, and that consequently the survivor should have the whole during her life, and the heir of Jane have nothing till the death of Elizabeth. Therefore this construction answers the words after their deceases, and does not destroy the authority of the case of Holmes v. Meynell.

Devise to A. and B. jointly for life, remainder to the heirs of A. they are joint-tenants, and the survivor shall have the whole for life.

Vide Co. Litt. 124. a. ed. Harg.

Thirdly, The following part of the devise, If either of them depart this life without issue, then I give the same estate to the other of them for life, cannot make it to be an estate-tail executed. 1. Because an express estate for life is only devised to them. 2. If it is an estate-tail it must be by implication, which is contrary to the rule of law, That no implication shall be allowed against the express words of a devise (1). Cro. Eliz. 313. Owen 148. Moor 593. 1 Roll. Abr. 839. pl. 4. 11. which reports do differ.

C. J. And neither of them right.

Reeve. Those words cannot create it an estate-tail, by reason of the intervening contingent remainders to the next heirs male of their bodies. Cro. Eliz. 315. Cordall's case. Where upon a devise to Edward Cordall for life, remainder to his first son, remainder to the heirs of the body of Edward Cordall, he then having no son, it was resolved, that the estate-tail was not executed, for the possibility of the mesne estate intervening, and therefore it was disjoined during the life of Edward Cordall; though that case has been denied for law. 2 Saund. 386. And it has since been adjudged, that the remainder shall be vested,

[16]

(1) Vide Langley v. Baldwin, of Coventry, 3 Term Rep. 83. Doe v. Applin, 4 Term Rep. 82. Denn v. Puckey, 5 Term Rep. 299. from which cases it appears, that in a will, the law will raise any estate by implication, and depart from particular limitations which clash with others, where it is necessary to effectuate the manifest general intention of the testator, otherwise not.

till the contingent remainder comes in esse, and then the estates shall be opened and disjoined for the letting in of the contingent remainder, because they were all created together by the same conveyance. 11 Co. 80. Lewis Bowle's case. 1 Sid. 83. 1 Lev. 36. 1 Saund. 386. 1 Vent. 345.

If they are jointenants for life, the question will be, what the fine, recovery and deed of partition have done. They cannot affect the remainder, whether contingent or executed, nor alter the quality or quantity of the estate devised. The deed can amount only to an agreement, of what lands each party shall receive the profits. Though it is recited to be, to the end that each might know his part in severalty, yet the deed is only, that each shall hold the lands according to the limitations of the will.

The recovery is found in hac verba, and appears to be no more than the history of a recovery. It is in the preterperfect tense, J. C. petiit, and not petit.

Eyre J. That cannot be taken advantage of here.

Reeve. The fine and recovery are not of the same manor, as the deed to make the tenant to the præcipe. The one is de manerio de Gayton Welball, and the other is de manerio de Gayton in Welball; and though the jury find the lands in the fine and recovery to be the same as in the deed, yet they do not find the manor to be the same. The fine and recovery are void, for there is no tenant to the præcipe; for the recovery is had and judgment given, before the teste of the writ of seisin, which is 6 November, and seisin delivered the 24th, and the deed is expressly found not executed until the 26th. And the finding the deed executed before the recovery had at bar, being contrary to the record, is void. 11 H. 6. 42. The finding a person dead, who appeared in court at the trial, was held to be a void finding. And therefore he prayed judgment for the plaintiff.

Branthwayte Serjeant pro defendente, admitted that this was a tenancy in common; but he argued, that it is an estate-tail, and not an estate for life only. The words equally to be divided between them were only shew, that the testator intended a tenancy in common. Cro. El. 695. Leuven v. Cox. Archer's case was adjudged but an estate for life, by reason of the limitation upon a limitation, (viz.) to the heirs of the next heir male, which limitation is not in the case at bar (a). The intent of the testator will be best made out, by construing this an estate-tail; for he plainly designed the estate should go in the family. Though it is expressly given to him for life, and after his decease to his next heirs male, yet it is an estate-tail. Carter 170. 2 Lev. 58. 3 Keb. 42. 1 Vent. 214. 225. Pollexfen 101. *King v. C. J. That is certainly so, you need not labour that construction.

Brantbwayte. The partition alters the quality, though not the quantity of the estate. For the intent of the deed was, for each party to enjoy in severalty. Bishop of Sarum v. Phillips, 11 W. 3. rot. 377. termino Mich. in B. R. On a writ of error of a judgment in C. B. in a quare impedit, where the plaintiff sets forth, that A. and B. were jointenants of an advowson in gross, and by deed agreed to present by turns, and as tenants in common; and it was adjudged, that this deed amounted to a partition, and so the part allotted to B. descended to his issue; and a grant from the issue, under which the plaintiff claimed, was held good. Tenants in tail may make a partition, and thereby bind their issue if it is equal, if unequal, it will bind themselves only. As to the exception, that there is no tenant to the precipe; it is sufficient if there be one at any time before the judgment. Show. 347. Salk. 568. And therefore he prayed judgment for the defendant.

Reeve replied, Here is no tenant till after judgment. An advowson may be parted, so as to present by turns; but by this deed they agree to continue seised of the same estate.

C. J. The partition will not alter the estate, it only alters the right of survivorship. The difference in the names of the manor is not material (1). It appears there is no tenant made by deed, till after judgment. But the fine being levied, and no use declared, the recovery being immediately suffered of the same lands, and the writ of entry brought against the conuzee in the fine, shews that* the intent of levying the fine was to make a tenant to the precipe. The devise intends an estate-tail. After their deceases are but words of form; for if one devises to A. for life, and after his decease to B. for life, yet B. shall take the estate if A. forfeits, enters into religion, or becomes incapable to enjoy it;

If a fine is levied, and no use declared, and a recovery had immediately against the conuzee, the fine shall be taken to make him a tenant to the precipe. Salk. 676 (2).

The writing cross the face of a bank note is properly called an indorsement.
3 P. Wms. 419.

THE indictment sets forth, that 19 Feb. 1714. Joshua Odams being employed and entrusted by the governor and company of the Bank of England, to make and sign bank notes, made and signed a bank note for 100 l. payable to James White, or bearer, 90 l. whereof was 22 Feb. 1714. paid to the bearer, and indorsed upon the said note, which indorsement the defendant 1 Mar. 1714. erast contra pacem, &c.

The defendant pleads not guilty, and the jury find this special verdict.

That

That Josbua Odams was employed, and made the note as in the indictment set forth, and that 90*l.* thereof was paid and indorsed prout, &c. That the defendant 1 Mar. 1714. with a certain liquor to the jury unknown, totaliter expunxit et delevit the words, letters and figures of the indorsement. That from the time of making the act 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 20. to 28. November 1697. the method of the company was, to write the indorsements upon the backsides of their notes in black ink. But that ever since, the method has been, to write the payments upon the face of the notes, cross the writing in red ink; which last mentioned writing has always ever since been called and esteemed an indorsement upon such notes, sed utrum, &c.

This cause was argued at Serjeants Inn, in Fleet-street, before all the Judges. And the question was, whether the fact found by the jury would come within the general words of the indictment, and could properly be called an indorsement?

The defendant's counsel insisted, that the word indorsement signified a writing upon the backside of any deed or paper, 2 Mod. Cas. 86. Salk. 375. and that it being found, that the words razed out by the defendant were wrote upon the face of the note, he was no ways guilty of the fact in the indictment.

But it was held by all (1) the Judges, That the defendant was guilty. For the writing upon the face of the note was of the same effect as an indorsement, and being introduced by the company in the room of writing upon the backside, and always accepted and taken to be an indorsement, was within the words of the indictment.

Accordingly at the next sessions of oyer and terminer, King, C. J. of C. B. delivered the opinion of the Judges; and sentence was pronounced against the defendant; who was afterwards pardoned, upon condition to transport himself to Minorca.

(1) It is stated in the note at that the Judges differed in opinion upon this case, the end of the report in P. Wms.

Dominus Rex versus Dawson.At Serjeants Inn in Fleet-street before all the Judges.

Fabricavit in an indictment denotes forgery, and evidence of altering or razing will be good.

Indictment for that the defendant tali die anno et loco a bank note for the payment of 520 l. fabricavit et contrafecit. Upon not guilty the jury find a special verdict.

That Conrade de Gols being a person entrusted and employed by the governor and company of the Bank of England, 16 January 1715. made and signed a bank note for 220 l. which note was delivered to the defendant unaltered, who erast et alteravit the said note, by turning the word two into the word five, whereby the said note, which was made only for 220 l. purported to be a note for 520 l. by colour whereof the defendant had and received of the Bank 520 l. sed utrum, &c.

[20] The counsel for the defendant insisted, that the facts found in the verdict were not included in the general words of the indictment, fabricavit et contrafecit. That this was not counterfeiting or making a note, but only altering a note made. That this must be admitted to be a crime within the words of 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 20. concerning the Bank. But as the indictment is not for altering or razing, they prayed judgment for the defendant.

But the Judges were of opinion, that the indictment is well enough, for this was a plain forgery, if not a counterfeit, and fabricavit would denote as much.

Accordingly at the next sessions King C. J. of C. B. delivered the opinion of the Judges, and sentence was pronounced against the defendant, who was pardoned, upon condition to transport himself to Minorca.

Elwell versus Quash & al'.

The warrant of one executor is not sufficient to enter judgment against the other.

THERE were three executors, one of which gave a warrant of attorney to confess a judgment against himself and his co-executors, pursuant to which a judgment was entered against all the executors de bonis testatoris for the debt, and against the executor, who gave the warrant, de bonis propriis for the costs.

Upon

Upon motion to set this aside, it was held to be ill, for executors may plead different pleas; and that which is most for the testator's advantage shall be received. 1 Roll. Abr. 929. A. 1. B. 5.

So Paf. 1 Geo. in C. B. (a) Baldwin v. Church, one executor (a) 10 Mod. 323. pleaded a good plea, and the other a bad one; and on demurrer judgment was given in C. B. for both the defendants, but reversed on error, and a new judgment given for the plaintiff against one executor only. This is really estopping the others from saying they are not executors, and being without their knowledge, it may be subjecting them to a devastavit for the paying of other debts.

In an indebitatus assumpsit the day is not material, and the alledging a different time in the replication is no departure. 20 Mod. 348. Gilb. Cal. 279. S. C.

PARKER, C. J. delivered the resolution of the court.

This is an indebitatus assumpsit, laid 16 January 1706. The defendant has pleaded actio non accrevit infra sex annos. The plaintiff has replied a bill filed 23 January, 12 Ann. and that the cause of action arose within six years before. The defendant has demurred generally, and it has been insisted on by his counsel that the replication is a departure, there being seven years distance between tween the day in the declaration, and the filing the bill as set forth in the replication.

But we are all of opinion notwithstanding that the plaintiff must have judgment. This being only a parol promise, the time alledged in the declaration is only matter of form, not of substance; and not being a departure in a material point, is only a defect in form of pleading, which not being shewn for cause of demurrer pursuant to the act for the amendment of the law, the defendant cannot take advantage of it. If a verdict had found the promise, or the filing the bill to be another day, that would not have vitiated the proceedings. 1 Lev. 110. 1 Keb. 566, 578. Hob. 164, 199 (1).

If the day had been substance it would have been a departure; and so it was adjudged in this court, Pas. 1 Geo. Stafford v. Forcer (a). That was upon a promissory note dated in 1704. The defendant pleaded actio non accrevit infra sex annos; the plaintiff replied a bill filed 12 Ann. and after a verdict the judgment was arrested, because in that case the day was material. If the day in this case should be looked upon as such, it would be in the defendant's power in almost all cases to fix the time and place. As where the plaintiff brings an action of assault and battery in London, the defendant pleads he made the assault in Middlesex, and that afterwards the plaintiff released all batteries except in London. By this he would make the place material, and the doctrine of bringing transitory actions where the plaintiff pleased, would fall to the ground, if the defendant should be allowed by artificial pleading to make the time and place matter of substance. Vide Co. Litt. 282. b. Tel. 114.

DE B T upon a bond. The defendant craved oyer of the bond, et ei legitur, &c. petit etiam auditum conditionis ejusdem scripti, et ei legitur in hac verba, scilicet ; which appears to be for the defendant and two other obligors, joined in the bond, to pay money at a future day, quibus lectis he pleads payment at the day by the other two obligors, and an acceptance by the plaintiff in satisfaction. The plaintiff, protestando that the other two did not pay, for plea says he did not receive in satisfaction modo et forma ; and thereupon issue is joined, and a verdict for the plaintiff.

Sir William Thompson moved, that a repleader might be awarded, for that this is an immaterial issue, the payment, and not the receipt, being proper to be put in issue.

Reeve of the same side. The bond being no where set forth in the oyer, but only the condition ; it does not appear upon the record, that the two persons who, it is pleaded, made the payment, were bound in the bond : for the action against the defendant is quatenus upon a single bond, and then this payment will amount to no more, than a payment by a stranger, which will make the issue an immaterial one.

Sir Robert Raymond contra. It must be admitted, that there can be no payment in satisfaction, without a receipt in satisfaction : and therefore the denying the acceptance, is an argumentative issue, and will be good after a verdict. Styles 239. in Mich. 7 W. 3. Young v. Rudd. Indebitatus assumpsit for apothecaries' wares ; the defendant pleaded the delivery of a beaver hat, which the plaintiff received in satisfaction ; the plaintiff, protestando that he did not give it in satisfaction, pro placito saith, that he did not receive it ; and this was held a good issue. Vide Hob. 178. Sty. 239, 263.

As to the second exception. If that be wrong it is amendable. The oyer is at the plaintiff's request, and should have been set out by him, which he neglecting to do, shall not take advantage of his own default. Admitting the payment is not by the two obligors, obligors, but strangers, yet where the defendant admits the plaintiff's cause of action, and pleads matter which is not a legal discharge, if issue be joined upon that, and a verdict against him, the plaintiff shall have judgment. 5 Co. 43. Nicoll's case.

C. J. Although payment by a stranger be not a legal discharge, yet acceptance in satisfaction is. Suppose a man owes me 100 l. upon bond, and another 100 l. upon another account, and he pays me 100 l. I may apply it to which I will (1); and though he paid it in satisfaction of the bond, yet if I did not receive it as such, it will be no discharge of the bond. And therefore in these cases the acceptance is the clearer issue. There are two requisites to work a discharge, 1. Payment; and 2. Acceptance. And a traverse of the acceptance, is an argumentative denial of the payment.

Payment by a stranger not good, but acceptance is. If a creditor has different debts, he may apply the payment to which he will. 2 Mod. Ca. 123. 2 Chan. Ca. 83.

Pratt J. If by necessary consequence the replication denies the plea, and a verdict pass, the court may give judgment. There can be no payment in satisfaction, without an acceptance in satisfaction. And if the plaintiff says, that he did not accept in satisfaction; the consequence is, that it was not paid in satisfaction.

No payment in satisfaction without an acceptance.

UPON not guilty in ejectment on the demise of Richard Wood, the jury find this special verdict.

That John Wood being seised in fee of the premises in question, by his will in writing 28 July, 8 W. 3. 1696. devised the same to his cousin Edward Bazill for life, and after his decease to the issue of his body; and in default of such issue, to his two nieces Margaret and Susannah Wright, and to the issue of their two bodies lawfully to be begotten, and for want of such issue to the right heirs of Edward Bazill for ever. That Edward and Margaret (two of the devisees) died in the life of the devisor without issue, and that Susannah also died in the life of the testator, leaving one daughter Margaret the now defendant, who is also heir at law to Edward Bazill, and born 10 October 1702. That afterwards the testator died, and the defendant entered, upon whom Richard Wood the lessor of the plaintiff as heir at law to the devisor entered, and made the lease to the plaintiff, sed, &c.

Branthwayte Serjeant pro quer' argued, That the devise to Susanna is void by her death in the life-time of the testator. For every will must be construed as an instrument whereby the land must be conveyed, and then such a construction must be made upon the will, as would be made upon a deed; except in this particular point, that the party may not be forced to use such particular formal words, as must be made use of in a deed, (so that the words be sufficient to shew the intent of the devisor) because the law supposes a will to be made by one inops consilii; but however that intent must follow the rules of the common law. It is a general rule, which holds as well in the case of wills as of conveyances at common law, that by necessity there must be a donee in esse of capacity to take the thing given at the time when ought to vest; and if there be no such person in esse, the gift is void. In this case there is no person capable to take the land, the devisee dying in the life-time of the testator, at which time nothing passed.

It may be objected that here are other words issue of the body which are descriptio personæ that is to take. As to that objection, those words issue of the body, are only named as words of limitation expressing the quantity of the estate which the devisee should take, and are not named to be immediate takers; for if so, other persons will take the estate whom the devisor neither knew nor intended should take.

The making and commencement of every will must be considered, and not the consummation, (the death of the testator) which is founded upon the commencement. At the making the will Susanna had no issue; and therefore the testator could not intend, that the issue which should be born after the making the will should be a purchaser. In Brett and Rigden's case, Plow. 345. it was adjudged, that where a devise was to Henry Brett and his heirs, and Henry died in the life of the testator, the son and heir of Henry should take nothing by the devise; and that lands purchased after the making of a will do not pass by a devise of all his lands, because the law respects the commencement and intent of the devisor. And as to an objection that may be made, that this case differs from Brett and Rigden's case, this being an estate-tail, and that a limitation in fee; Hartop's case, Cro. El. 243. was a devise to Thomas Hartop and the heirs males of his body, with remainders over; Thomas died, leaving issue in the life of the devisor; and there it was held, that the estate cannot vest in the heir, because it never vested in the ancestor; for the word heirs was a word of limitation, and not to give an immediate estate; for if it was to vest in him, it must vest in him as a purchaser, and that was not the intent of the devisor; which case was then held not to differ from Brett and Rigden's case, Cro. El. 422. Raymond 408. 2 Lev. 243. 2 Jones 135. Pollexfen 546. Wherefore the devise being void, he prayed judgment for the plaintiff.

Reeve contra. That the word issue is a good word of purchase, either of a present estate, or of an estate by way of remainder; and not a word of limitation in a deed or conveyance at common law. And if so, it shall be the same in the case of a will, unless some certain intention of the devisor may be found in the will to alter the same. And therefore he argued, That the defendant might take either as jointenant for life with her mother and her aunt, and she being the survivor will have a good title; for if A. devise to B. and to his issue, and B. has no issue at the time, B. has has an estate-tail; because the intent of the devisor was that the issue should take; and therefore whenever it is demanded what estate such a devisee has, it depends upon the circumstances of the family, whether the devisee has issue at the time of the devise or no. The devisee is not of necessity to be in esse at the time of the devise, therefore a devise to an infant en ventre sa mere, is good. So a devise to B. his eldest son for life, and after to the eldest issue male of C. for life, is good, though C. had no issue at the time of the devise and death of the devisor, 1 Roll. Abr. 612. pl. 3. Limitations of uses have been coupled in the same construction as has been made on wills; therefore if a man make a feoffment in fee to the use of himself for life, and of such wife as he should afterwards marry for her life, and after he takes a wife; they are jointenants, and yet they come to their estates at several times. Moor 96. 1 Inst. 188. a. But he did not insist much on this point, it being adjudged contrary in Wild's case, 6 Co. 16. The reason of the judgment in Brett and Rigden's case, "That lands purchased after the making of the " will do not pass by a devise of all his lands," depends upon the words of the statutes 32 and 34 Hen. 8. "that every person, having lands, may devise them." So that if the devisor has not the lands at the time of the devise, it is out of the words of the statute, and all his lands, is no more than all he then had. Pollexf. 547. (Except there be a republication after the purchase. Salk. 237. Pollexf. 548. 1 Vent. 341).

Flow. 344. b.

Secondly, The defendant may take by way of remainder for life. And for that Wild's case, 6 Co. 16. is strong in point, for there it is adjudged, that by a devise to a baron and feme, and after their decease to their children, they having children at the time of the devise, the baron and feme take but an estate for life, with a remainder to their children; and that a devise to B. and to his children or issue, he having no children at that time, is an estate-tail; the devisor intending that the issue shall take; and as immediate devisees they cannot take, not being in rerum natura; and by way of remainder they cannot take, for the gift was immediate to them and to their use; by which case it is proved, that if the gift is not immediate, as it is not in the case at bar, there being future words, "and to their issue lawfully begotten," the defendant may take by way of remainder for life. But he would not insist much on this point, it having been settled, that by a devise to B. for life, and after his decease to the issue of his body lawfully to be begotten, B. took an estate-tail, and not an estate for life only, with a remainder to his issue. King v. Melling, 2 Lev. 58. 3 Keb. 42. 1 Vent. 214, 225. Pollexf. 104. 1 Sid. 47. Carter 171. Secus in a deed. Pollexf. 583. Where an estate is limited to A. for life, remainder to his first son in tail; for there A. is only tenant for life, and the son takes by purchase.

Thirdly, The defendant has a good title as issue of the body, though the devisee died in the life of the devisor, admitting the devise creates an estate-tail. This point has never yet been settled, for the case of Brett v. Rigden was of a devise in fee, which differs from a devise in tail. Hartop's case was adjudged on another point, and in the case of Fuller v. Fuller, Moor 353. the court was divided; and Popham said, that by a devise to B. and the heirs of his body, if B. was dead at the time of the devise, the heir should take as a purchaser. If a man has issue three sons, and devises his land to the eldest in tail, remainder to the second in tail, &c. if the eldest dies (having issue) in his father's lifetime, his issue shall have it, because peradventure the devisor did not know of the death of his son, who perhaps was beyond sea, or otherwise absent. The statute de donis takes more care of the issue in tail, than of the tenant in tail himself, quod voluntas donatoris in charta sua manifeste expressa de cetero observetur. There has not been one judgment whereby this point has been settled.

Fourthly, Which he chiefly relied on, admitting this to be an estate-tail, and the same construction ought to be made on this estate, as upon an estate in fee; the defendant has a good title, being found heir at law to Edward Bazill, by virtue of the remainder limited to the right heirs of Edward; which limitation is valid in law, though the first devise in tail should be void by the death of the devisee in the life of the testator, for the intervening estate limited to Margaret and Susanna prevents the consolidation of the two estates of Edward; for the estate limited to the right heirs of Edward is a distinct estate, independant on the estate-tail before devised to Edward. Litt. § 578. If a lease for life be made, remainder to another in tail, remainder over to the right heirs of the tenant for life, the tenant for life may grant over the same remainder to another by deed. This limitation to the right heirs of Edward is a new created estate, and does not depend on the other estate; for those words, right heirs, are in this case words of purchase, and not words of limitation.

It may be objected, that it is a rule in law, "That when the ancestor by any gift or conveyance takes an estate of freehold, and after an estate is thereby limited mediately or immediately to his heirs in fee or in tail, that always in such case his heirs are words of limitation of the estate, and not words of purchase." To that objection he insisted, that this rule of law extends only to such cases, where the ancestor takes the estate limited to him; so that if the ancestor never takes the estate, that rule can have no force. And in this case Edward never took any estate, and then then the defendant as heir at law to him shall take the estate as a purchaser. That the reason of that rule depends upon a supposition that the ancestor takes the estate, is proved by 1 Inst. 22. b. 319. b. 376. b. 1 Co. 104. a. Shelly's case. 11 H. 7. 74. per Hankford. And therefore, if the devise to Edward and to his issue be void by his death without issue in the life of the testator, yet the remainder to the right heirs is good, being a distinct remainder: and no case proves, that a good remainder shall be tacked to a void devise, so as to avoid the remainder; wherefore he prayed judgment for the defendant.

Brantbwayte replied, First, That the defendant is found not to be in esse at the making of the devise, and therefore she cannot take as jointenant; for all jointenants must be in esse when the estate should vest. Were they to take as jointenants, they could only take an estate for life, which construction would overthrow the intent of the deviser, which it is plain was to pass an inheritance. It is a constant rule, that a devise to one and to his issue in a will creates an estate-tail, without considering the circumstances of the family at the time of the devise, whether the devisee had then issue or not; though the word heirs may be necessary in a deed; so is Wild's case, and that case cited by My Lord Coke out of Bendlow, is expressly against the opinion for which it was cited.

3 Lev. 408.

Secondly, That the defendant shall not take by way of remainder the same answer proves, for then they would take only estates for life, when the deviser intended a fee-tail.

Thirdly, The devise is void by the death of the devisee in the life of the testator, for the issue cannot take as claiming from one who was never seised; the issue in tail does not claim per formam doni by virtue of the statute de donis only, but also by descent from the donee in tail.

Fourthly, The heir cannot take it as a purchaser, for on a limitation to one and to his heirs, the construction has always been, that the heir shall never take as a purchaser, without that distinction, when the ancestor takes the estate and when not.

C. J. Had it been limited to Edward Bazill only for life, remainder to another for life, remainder to his right heirs; this remainder in fee must have vested in Edward, drowning the first estate for life, and making his heir to claim by descent. Wild's case is very oddly reported, and has mistook the judgment of that case cited out of Bendlow as it is reported in Bendlow, and in 1 Anderson 43. pl. 110. Where an estate is limited to one and his his issue, it amounts only to a description of that issue, for issue is more properly a word of description, than of limitation. There can be no question but that by this devise to Edward and to his issue he has an estate-tail, because it is limited over, and for want of such issue then to another. A devise to one and to his issue, is not restrained to the first son, but extends to all the issue in infinitum, (for issue is nomen collectivum) descending from the devisee. I can see no colour of difference between an estate-tail and a fee-simple, and I believe the report of that said by Popham in Cro. Eliz. is mistook. The statute de donis has nothing to do in this case, because the tenant in tail never took the estate. He that takes by purchase must take at the time when the estate should vest. The defendant cannot take by descent, because the ancestor never took it.

C10. EL. 423.

Powys, J. Litt. § 578. makes strong against the defendant; for if the estate limited to the right heirs of Edward Bazill by the intervening estate-tail is distinct, and may be granted over by Edward Bazill; that proves, that heirs was meant only as a word of limitation, and not as a word of purchase, for else it could not be granted over by Edward, preserving his first estate. And the reason why it may be granted over is, because in judgment of law every man carries his heirs in his body.

Pratt, J. differed from the C. J. and conceived, that there was a difference between an estate-tail and in fee. The case of Brett v. Rigden must be allowed for law, that the devise by the death of the devisee, living the testator, is void; and the reason is, because the deviser had no intent in the devise to benefit any person but the devisee, for he did not know who would be heir at law to the devisee. A man has power by the statute to devise his lands, but he cannot raise such an estate as is inconsistent with the rules of law. When a man gives his lands to one and to the heirs of his body, it is plain that the deviser designed to benefit, not only the devisee, but also the issue of his body, thereby altering the common course of descent; therefore it is provided by the statute de donis, quod donatoris voluntas, &c. giving a benefit to the issue in tail, thereby intending to perpetuate the estate in his own name, and so intending a benefit to himself after his death. The issue are intended to have a benefit, though they were not in esse at the time of the devise, for the intent of the deviser was, 1st, for the devisee to take it; 2^{dly}, his issue, not considering how they should take; and then though the first devisee cannot take it, dying in the life of the testator, yet so far as the will can take effect, (which it may do in the issue) it must take effect. If it is limited to one man, remainder to another, though the first limitation be frustrated by the death of the party, yet the other remainder is good (2). Devise to an infant en ventre sa mere is good, by way of an executory devise; though the child is not born in the life of the testator (3): if the child is born, it is good by way of an immediate devise. Though a will cannot take effect in omnibus, yet as far as it can, it must take effect. Issue is more properly a word of purchase than a word of limitation (4).

Upon this an ulterius concilium was granted, and the cause argued a second time, and this term Parker C. J. delivered the resolution of the court.

Resolution of the court.

C. J. The question is singly, whether the devise be subsisting, or not? If it be subsisting, the title is with the defendant; if not, with the plaintiff.

The case of Brett v. Rigden must be allowed to be good law; in which case it is resolved, that there must of necessity be a grantee or donee in esse capable to take, when the estate ought to vest, and that a devise to Henry Brett and his heirs (Henry dying in the life of the testator) could not take effect in the heir; and heirs in that case were only named to create an estate in fee in Henry, and not to make the heir take immediately by purchase but mediately by descent, and by Henry's death the estate fell as much with respect to the heirs as himself.

The case at bar has been distinguished from that in two particulars.

1. That the devise to Edward Bazill and his heirs is not an immediate devise, by reason of the intervening estates.

2. That a devise to Susanna Wright and her issue, is different from a devise to her and her heirs.

First, We are all of opinion that the intervening estate makes no difference (5). His heirs are words of limitation, and therefore like the case Brett v. Rigden; the only difference is in the thing devised, one being an estate in possession, and the other a remainder. Litt. § 578. 1 Inst. 319. b. In this case the ancestor never took the estate, which he ought to have done, to make it vest in him in remainder. Shelly's case, 1 Co. 93.

Secondly, If Susanna had survived, she would have an estate-tail; the words issue of the body create an estate-tail in her, and are as good an expression for an estate-tail, as the word heirs of an estate in fee (6). Issue of the body being therefore words of limitation, the devise of the estate-tail is void by the death of Susanna in the life of the devisor. The difference as to this between an estate in fee and in tail is not material, for if I devise one estate to A. and his heirs, and another to B. and the heirs of his body, it is in the power of B. to make this last estate as large as the devise to A. in fee.

It will be of dangerous consequence to alter resolutions in these cases, it is removing the antient land-marks; and the authority of Brett and Rigden's case is not to be contested, which is not materially variant from this. But admitting it to be so, yet Hartop's case, Cro. Eliz. 243. was of a devise in tail, and there it was held, that the devisee dying in the life of the devisor, the devise could not take effect in the issue; and in the case of Fuller v. Fuller, Cro. Eliz. 423. all the Judges agreed with the resolution in Hartop's case, although prima facie it may seem as if Fenner and Popham were contra to Gawdy and Clench; yet upon nice observation it will be found, that they differed only with respect to the new publication, and not to the other point. Popham puts this case: If a man has issue three sons, and devises the land to his eldest in tail, remainder to the second in tail, remainder to the third in fee, and the eldest dies having issue in the life of his father, his issue shall have it without a new publication. But the reason is, because the heir of the eldest son was also heir at law to the devisor, and no intent appeared to disinherit any of his sons: and Popham said, it might be otherwise on a devise to a stranger (which is the case at bar).

If the devisor had died immediately after making his will, the effect would have answered the intent; for then the word issue would have been a word of limitation in all the estates, and if that were the sense at the time of making the will, it shall be taken to be so still.

(6) When the word issue shall when of limitation vide Shaw v. Weigh, post. 804.
operate as a word of purchase and

It was objected, that this is an estate-tail raised rather by operation of law than the intent of the party. (Answer) The law takes that to be his intent, for upon a devise to A. and to his issue, or after A.'s death to his issue, the law has always construed this to be an estate-tail. If A. has two sons and four daughters, and dies before the devisor, the eldest son, instead of having the whole would have but a sixth part, if it should be construed that the issue should take by way of remainder; whereas the intent of the devisor was, that the eldest son should have the whole during his life, which is a plain demonstration that the law takes such a devise to be an estate-tail. 1 Vent. 228.

The supposition of a kindness intended to the issue will be no argument in favour of the defendant, because it has been always thought that a devise to a man and his issue is a kindness to him, for by construction of law he carries his heirs in his own body. In this case the remainder man is more considered by the devisor than the issue in tail. The devise was for the sake of the father, that he made it so large, and for the sake of him in remainder that he made it no larger. He cannot be supposed to have had any particular affection for the issue, there being none in esse, at the time of the devise.

The plain use of the words was to give Susanna Wright an estate-tail. If she had lived she would have enjoyed it, but by her death the estate is determined. There is no difference between an estate in fee and in tail, for in both cases the devisee must be in esse.

The same answer serves for the remainder to the right heirs of Edward Bazill, who never took the estate, and therefore could not convey a descent to his heirs.

There is no inconvenience in putting the devisor in these cases to review his will; and the cases of Brett v. Rigden, and Harrop's case, are founded upon good reason and authority, and are not now to be over-ruled.

C. J. The defendant ought not to be allowed to assign this error in ejectment, for he comes in of his own accord, and prays to be made defendant, which the plaintiff cannot oppose. This is an abuse upon the court, and the attorney ought to be committed.

Infancy in defendant in ejectment and appearance by attorney ought not to be assigned for error.

Whereupon the attorney withdrew his writ of error, and the court gave him a fortnight to bring error in the Exchequer Chamber, upon the matter of law, and in the mean time execution to stay, and directed the record here to be amended (7), and the defendant made to appear by guardian.

Robert

Robert the first devisee died without issue in the life of the deviser, then the testator died, leaving a sister, who is heir general to Sir Robert the great grandfather; but the defendant Edward Barkham is heir male of the body of the great grandfather.

The question was, to whom the trustees should convey the surplus, whether to the sister, as heir general of the deviser, or to the defendant as heir male of the body of Sir Robert the great grandfather, remainder to the right heirs of the deviser.

This case was argued very largely at the bar. And Cowper Lord Chancellor took time to consider of it, and this term pronounced his decree.

Lord Chancellor. If the manifest intent of the testator expounded by natural reason, without regard to legal resolutions, were to govern in this case; I should think it would hardly admit of a question. But since there is an artificial reason in the law, which sometimes stands as opposed to natural (which is right) reason, and is founded upon the opinions and resolutions of Judges, and that taken and allowed to be law; the courts both of law and equity ought to submit to them, when they are fully examined and found to be thus settled; because otherwise the law would be an uncertain undetermined rule, and lawyers would not know how to advise their clients. I shall therefore inquire how far this court is hindered in the present case by the fixed rules of law, from pursuing the plain intent of the testator, which was no doubt that the conveyance should be made to the heirs males of the body of Sir Robert the great grandfather, and not to a female, who is heir general to himself, as long as there are any heirs males of the body of the great grandfather.

First objection.

The first objection insisted on was, that it has been often adjudged, that he who takes as a purchaser by the words heir of J. S. immediately, must be compleatly heir of J. S. and that no person can take as heir whilst his ancestor lives.

I answer, That this maxim, and the cases founded upon it, are very foreign to the present question; one main ground of the resolution founded on this rule is, that the term heir in a legal sense denoting the person who is to take after the death of an ancestor, cannot be used as a proper description of a person whose ancestor is living, for the terms of the description are not then verified. But in this case they are compleatly verified; the ancestor is dead, and the person who asks the conveyance, is heir male of his body, and as such he is allowed by all to be capable to take by descent: but they say not by purchase. What grounds grounds there are for that distinction will be considered hereafter; at present I shall only observe, that Edward Barkham having all parts of the description verified in him, his case is different from that of Chaloner v. Bowyer, 2 Leon. 70. where a devise was to the youngest son for life, remainder to the heirs of the body of the eldest; the youngest died in the life of the eldest, and the son of the eldest could not take. Why? because he answered neither part of the description, for he was neither heir, nor heir of the body of his father, while he was living; and this objection will hold in many other cases.

The second objection, which seems to stand in the way of natural reason is, that there are cases in which it is held, that none can purchase by the words heir male of the body of J. S. unless he be heir general as well as heir male. Second objection.

I have met with but few cases which can be urged with any colour of reason for the proof of this assertion; one is that of Counden v. Clerk, Hob. 31. in which it is said, that when the limitation is made to the heirs male or female of the body, they that will take must have both words verified in them, (that is) they must be both heirs, and also heirs male or female; and he gives this reason for it, that this is clearly without the letter and intent of the statute of Westm. 2.

In answer to the authority of this case,

1. I observe, that this was not the point then in question, but only an opinion of Hobart's (1), declared incidentally in the argument of the case, and therefore ought to have the less weight.

2. The

(1) Lord Hobart's reasoning seems to have been thus.—At common law, wherever there is a limitation to heirs who are to take by purchase, it is the heir general who is supposed the object of that designation, notwithstanding there are circumstances which shew that there exists a special heir to whom the land would go if it were transmitted by descent, thus, “if I give land in Gavelkind or Borough English to one for life, the remainder to the right heirs of J. S. the true heir

(i. e. the common law heir) shall take, and not the heir special by the custom.” After putting some similar instances of the law’s anxiousness to understand the term heir as applicable to the heir general, he adds, It is true that the statute of Westminster, in favour of the will of the donor, ordains that lands shall descend to the heir special who is described per formam doni. But the case here is not within that statute, 1. Because it applies merely to cases of descent, and not of purchase.
2. Because

2. The reason that is given for it is by no means satisfactory, or a good one; for the statute Westm. 2. is no ways pertinent to the question. The whole effect of that statute is, to prevent the alienation of estates which before were considered at common law as fee-simples conditional, and alienable after issue had; and how this is applicable to the question concerning the description of a purchaser, and whether certain words will be sufficient for that, I cannot imagine. The statute only governs estates when they are vested, but meddles not with the descriptions that are necessary to pass those estates. The words heir male of the body of J. S. were certain and known words of purchase at common law, and need not the aid of the statute to make them so.

3. By what Hobart says afterwards in the same case, it may well be concluded, that if it had been the point in judgment, he would have been of opinion, that a man might take by the description of the heir male of the body of J. S. though he is not heir general, but a female is: for he takes notice that in the case then in question, the heirs males were not restrained to any body, which (says he) might have had some colour of help from the statute de donis. This great man could not pass over his own assertion which he made before, without some remorse of judgment, if it was his assertion; but I rather take the words of the body to have been added by an unskilful transcriber of the copy. So that upon the whole I think, that case of Counden v. Clerk of very little weight in the present question; but the point there adjudged is doubtless good law.

Another case urged for the plaintiff is Skelley's case, 1 Co. 103. which is transcribed into his Co. Litt. 24. b. This is indeed an authority (such as it is) in point, that one cannot take as a pur-

2. Because the heirs males not being restrained; to any body, it is a mere fee-simple. It appears from the arguments of the counsel for the special heir in the present case, which are reported verbatim alike in Gilb. Eq. Rep. and Proc. in Chanc. that they contended that the case was within the operation of the statute de donis, and they claimed its protection. For they said it was quasi an estate tail in the grandfather Sir R. B. The words "heirs males of the body" operating, not only as words of purchase, but also as words of limitation, since the land would not revert back to the donor or his heirs, in case of failure of issue male in the son of the ancestor, in whom the estate first vested under that description, as it would if such son took absolutely by purchase; but would descend to the next heir male of the ancestor, in the same manner as if the estate tail had vested in and descended from him.

chaſer by the words heir male of the body of J. S. unleſs he be heir, as well as heir male. But in answer to this I obſerve,

1. That this point was not adjudged in Shelley's caſe; it is only the argument of counſel, which the court in delivering their opinion took no notice of.

2. The authorities in the margin of Co. Litt. which are cited to ſupport this caſe, are moſt of them very little to the purpoſe, and do by no means prove it. That of Huffſy in Bro. tit. Done 42. makes rather againſt this poſition; and that of Dyer 374. a. is only a ſhort ſketch of Shelley's caſe, and the leſs to be regarded, becauſe it differs from the elaborate report of that caſe by Coke.

Having thus far cleared the preſent queſtion from theſe two great authorities; there remains only one other, which I ſhould not think very material to be taken notice of, had not the counſel for the plaintiff thought it of ſo great moment, as to deſire a rehearing upon the diſcovery of it. It is the caſe of Starling (a) in this court, 8 W. 3. and was thus: A. deviſed lands to J. S. for life, and then to truſtees, in truſt to convey them to the next heir male of teſtator. And it was decreed, that the truſtees could not convey to the next male relation, becauſe he was not heir, which was certainly right, and the very point reſolved in the caſe of Couden v. Clerk, and in that of Aſſenburſt, which is cited in it; and the reaſon is, that the words heir male are not a ſufficient deſcription without adding of the body, and they are not answered, unleſs the perſon be both heir and male; nor are they ſufficient to paſs an eſtate by deſcent, any more than by purchaſe. Indeed in caſe of a will, the words of the body are ſupplied, ſo as to make it an eſtate-tail, in the perſon that takes it; but then the perſon that is to take it muſt be heir as well as male.

(a) Rep. by the name of Starling v. Eſtrich, Prec. in Chanc. 54.

Having now gone through all the caſes that were urged for the plaintiff, which I believe are all that could be urged; and it appears to me that many of the points in them are not pertinent to the preſent queſtion, and thoſe that were, gratis dicta, and the arguments of counſel, without grounds either from reaſon or former authorities to ſupport them; I ſhall now proceed to ſhew, that a man may take by limitation, or purchaſe, as heir male of the body of J. S. though he be not heir general, and that for theſe reaſons.

1. The law allows a man to purchaſe by a ſufficient deſcription, though neither his chriſtian or ſurname be part of it, and that the words heir male of the body of J. S. are a ſufficient deſcription of that particular heir, though he be not heir general.

2. The

2. The judicial authorities that a man may take as a purchaser by the words heir male of the body of J. S. without being heir general, greatly over-balance those that hold the contrary.

First, As to the first point, it is so certain a principle in law, that a man may purchase by other descriptions as well as by his name, that it has been adjudged the words abbot or bishop of a certain place, would be a good description, though the name of the person be mistaken. Co. Litt. 3. a. But to make a good description there are three things requisite, all which concur in the present case.

1. It must be true; it is true, that Edward Barkham is heir male of the body of the testator's great-grandfather, which is manifest, because otherwise he could not take an estate by descent as such, in case the great-grandfather had been seised of it to himself and the heirs males of his body, which all allow he would; and why he may not by purchase I cannot conceive, for the description is as true in the case of a purchase as a descent, and why should it not then be good as well in the one as the other. They say the statute de donis aids in the case of descent, but not in purchase; but I have already shewn that the statute does not at all relate to this point, for it meddles not with the descriptions that are to pass estates; and therefore if heir male of the body of J. S. be not a sufficient description, that special heir could not have any aid from the statute, and if it be a sufficient description, he does not want the aid of it. And the present case is the stronger, because the great-grandfather was dead at the time of the devise; so that the maxim quod non est haeres viventis, is not in the way, but all the words are immediately verified at the time of the devise. It is said indeed, they are not, because the male is not heir in this case; but the very stating of this matter will expose it as contrary to common sense and reason; for it is manifest the testator intended, that his heir general should not have these lands, unless he was a male also, and therefore he adds those words to restrain the general sense of the word heir, and to confine it to a special heir. If lands of the nature of Borough English at common law be devised to my heir according to the custom of Borough English, by this the testator must mean, his youngest son should take (a). But to prevent the taking in this case they would have you stop at the word heir, and then this special heir cannot take; but if you take all the words together, then he may, for the words the testator has used are plain, certain, and well known in law, to describe the person the testator manifestly intended should take by them.

(a) Hob. 34.
S. P.

2. The second thing requisite to make a perfect description is, that it be certain, and applicable to the thing described and no other.

other. And this is so in the present case, for Edward Barkham is heir male of the body of the testator's great-grandfather, and no other person is so.

3. The third requisite is, that it be expressed in proper words. This is not always necessary in a will, but here they are proper even in the case of a will, for the words heirs males of the body are the proper, and indeed the only words that can be used, to distinguish that special heir, from the general heir. Sometimes the word right is used with heirs, but improperly in cases of this nature.

Thus you see all the things requisite to make a perfect, certain description, concur in this case; and therefore since it has been proved, and indeed cannot be denied, but that a man may take by any other good description as well as by name, it evidently follows that he may take by this.

Secondly, I come now to shew that the judicial authorities that a man may take as a purchaser by the words heirs male of the body of J. S. though he be not heir general, do greatly over-balance those that hold the contrary.

The first case I shall mention is that of Burkett v. Durdant, Vide Salk. 679. 2 Vent. 311. which was adjudged in the House of Lords; and the case of James v. Richardson in Pollexfen 457. is the same. The case was thus: a man devised lands to A. for life, remainder to the heirs males of the body of A. now living, and for want of such issue remainder over; and it was resolved, that there passed an estate for life only to A. and that the remainder immediately vested in the heir male of the body of A. then living; because those words were a sufficient designatio personæ, who was intended to take; and this is a stronger case than the present, because the ancestor being alive, he could not strictly speaking have any heir; but those words being used in common parlance to denote the person who would take as heir male, if the ancestor were dead, that was thought sufficient. As for the words now living, I do not think they were very considerable in that case, for they only shew that the testator intended, that some body who was then alive should take.

The case of Long v. Beaumont, which was decreed in the House of Lords, Pas. 13 Ann. has not these words now living, and yet heir male of my aunt Long, was adjudged a good description of the person that was to take, though the aunt was still living, and consequently he was neither heir nor heir male, nor was was it certain he would be heir male of her body at the time of her death (2).

The case of Pybus v. Mitford was thus: (1 Vent. 372.) Mich. Mitford was seised of the lands in question, and had issue Robert by the first venter, and Ralph by Jane the second, and covenanted to stand seised to the use of his heirs males begotten of the body of his second wife; the question was, whether Ralph could take. The Judges, to support the intent of the party, raised a fine-spun notion of a resulting use, which indeed was very well laboured by them; but Hale in delivering his opinion insists upon the point now in question, and argued very strongly and clearly, that the words heirs male of the body of J. S. are good words of purchase; and puts the case of a gift to one and his heirs female of his body, and he has a son and a daughter, the daughter shall take. Litt. sect. 22. And by several other cases there quoted, he says it appears, that no regard is had whether the son be heir of the husband, if he be the heir of their two bodies; and then cites a case which was adjudged in Queen Elizabeth's time, which seems directly to the present question: a man had three daughters and a nephew, and he gives 2000*l.* to his daughters, and his land to his heir male; provided, that if his daughters troubled his heir, then the devise of 2000*l.* to them should be void; and it was adjudged that the limitation to his brother's son by the name of heir male was a good name of purchase; and says he, this agrees with Counden and Clerk's case, in Hobart.

These reasons and these authorities made so strong an impression upon Justice Widd, that he immediately declared himself convinced, and that he was of the same opinion with Hale; and for my part, I think they are sufficient to satisfy any reasonable man.

(2) In this case the devise was to the heirs male of the body of the testator's aunt lawfully begotten, which it was argued was tantamount to the words "then living," especially as the testator took notice in his will that his aunt had children living, having bequeathed a legacy to each.

But that "begotten," and "to be begotten," are tantamount, vide Co. Litt. 20. b. and note (3) ed. Harg. Cook v. Cook, 2 Vern. 545. Musgrove v. Perry, ib. 711. Hewett v. Ireland, Pres. Caus. 491. 1 P. Wms. 427. S. C. Gore v. Gore, 2 P. Wms. 33.

"of my lands, I mean my heir male, for ever." The testator died, and Daniel died, leaving issue one daughter only; and it was resolved, that John the brother of Daniel should take the estate by the description of heir male of the testator, though the words of his body were not in; but the testator's intent appearing so plain, that an heir female should not hinder the next heir male from taking, they gave judgment for the male.

Upon the whole I am of opinion, that the words heirs male of S. C. 2 Vern. the body of his great grandfather are good words of purchase, to pass the estate to him who is heir male, though not heir general. ^{729.}

1. Because common sense, natural reason and understanding, and the manifest intent of the testator, call aloud for this justice. 2. Because the legal authorities that are urged for the contrary opinion are of themselves but of very little weight. 3. Because the resolutions that have been in favour of this opinion, do greatly over-balance those of the other side (3).

The

(3) This case came before Lord Hardwicke upon a bill of review, November 1741, who affirmed this decree upon the ground of its being an exception to the general rule laid down in Shelley's case, 1 Rep. 103. and in Co. Litt. 24. b. "That to take by purchase under a limitation to heirs male or female of the body, the taker must also be heir general." But his Lordship considered that rule as having prevailed so long, that it ought to be supported although not strictly agreeable to natural reason. Vide Mr. Hargrave's note (3) Co. Litt. 24. b. and note (2) 164. a. where the reader will find all the authorities upon the point collected together, and a most ingenious defence of the rule in its most unqualified extent. Vide also Fearn's Cont. Rem. 4th ed. p. 60. p. 325. It should seem however that most of the cases there cited do not support the rule in its full extent, and that they may be good law although this rule is not so. For the limitations in these cases are "to the right heirs male;" the further words of description in the rule, and in the present case "of the body of J. S." being omitted. It is so in every report of Southcot v. Stowel except 1 Mod. 226. besides which the point was not there directly before the court. So also in Starling v. Ettrick, Præc. in Chanc. 54. Ford v. Lord Ossulston, 3 Salk. 336. 11 Mod. 189, 8 Vin. Abr. Dawes v. Ferrars, 2 P. Wms. 4. Præc. in Chanc. 589. and Gwynn v. Hook, 8 Vin. 317. pl. 13. note. The addition of the words "of the body" is not only relied upon as material by Lord Cowper in the present case, but by Lord Macclesfield in distinguishing that of Dawes v. Ferrars from it. His words are, "It not being said in the will heir male of the body or of his name, the granddaughter, who was his heir at law, might have an heir male though not of his name." All that is necessary to enable the special heir to take, is, that

The next inquiry is, how the trustees in this case shall execute their trust. And it must be observed, that though the testator directs the trustees, to convey the surplus to the heirs male, in the plural; yet that is well pursued by conveying to the heir male in the singular number, and to his heirs male; for so the legal sense of those words is, as was resolved in Shelley's case. And it is most properly expressed in the plural number, because then the words denote both the person to take, and the estate to be taken.

that he should be described by such express terms or circumstances as cannot be applicable to any other person, as is admitted by Lord Hobart in Cowden v. Clerk, and decided in the cases cited by Lord Cowper. If, therefore, the description "of right heirs male" may apply to two different persons, as it is put by Lord Macclesfield that it may, the heir general, who is the favourite of the law, is not to be disinherited where the intent "is merely conjectural and not certain." But the objection of uncertainty does not apply to the description of "heirs male of the body of B." for the testator uses the proper words to shew he means that a special heir shall exclude the heir general; and they are also sufficiently accurate to point out who that special heir is to be. It is true that the law will in general supply the words "of the body" in a devise to heirs male, and this at first sight seems to destroy the distinction taken between the cases cited and the present. But our courts appear in no instance to have either added or rejected words, unless where they were necessary to carry into effect the manifest intent of the testator certainly, although untechnically expressed. The opinion of the court of B. R. upon a case out of Chancery, Wilkes v. Palmer, 5 Burr. 2615; 2 Black. 687. seems to have settled this point in a case much stronger than the present. It was thus—A. settled some lands to the use of B. his eldest son for life, remainder to his (B.'s) sons successively in tail male, and after intermediate remainders "to the use of the heirs male OF THE BODY of the said A." He also settled by the same deed other lands to the use of himself for life, and after several intermediate limitations, "to the use of A. his heirs and assigns." B. died leaving one daughter. A. afterwards devised this remainder in fee, under the settlement, to his son C. for life, remainder to his (C.'s) sons successively in tail male, and for want of such issue, to the heirs male of his (the testator's) body begotten. He then died, leaving the daughter of B. his heir at law, and a son by his first wife, the heir male of his body, and D. a son, by a second wenter. C. next died, leaving a son, who also died without issue, and no recovery was suffered by either. The question was, Whether D. the son by the second wife, took by purchase under the description of heir male of THE BODY OF A. he not being heir general. The three Judges who composed the Court, certified, that in the present case D. took by descent under the deed as heir male of the body of A. But that if a third person had been the grantor, he would have taken by purchase, under taken. Let the conveyance be made to the person who is heir male of the testator's great grandfather, and the heirs male of the body of the great grandfather. In this I follow the law, which executes conditions executory as near as may be, where the words cannot be strictly pursued; and a court of equity ought to execute trusts, as the courts of law do things executory (4).

under the description of heir male of the body of A. and that he did so take by that description under the will. In Evans on the demise of Burtenshaw v. Weston, the court of Exchequer refused to apply this rule of Lord Coke's, in the case of a marriage settlement.

Har. Co. Litt. 164. a. It should seem, from a reference of Sir James Burrow's, 5 vol. 2628. as if the court of King's Bench had determined the same point between the same parties.

Indictment for that the defendant tali die anno et loco ten loads of straw and dung in communi strata sive alta regia via posuit et locavit et ibidem per decem dies remanere permisit, ita quod the King's subjects could not pass.

On demurrer it was objected, that the place where the nuisance was committed should be certainly alledged; whereas here the indictment runs that it was laid in one place or another; and being disjoined by the sive, the court cannot take communis strata, and alta regia via, to be the same. 2 Roll. Abr. 80. pl. 4, 5.

To which it was answered and resolved by the court, That strata signifies the highway, and that these are two expressions to denote the same place. Spelman verbo Strata: Corwel's Interpreter, Streetward and Streetgavel. So in the statute of Marleberge, which prohibits distresses in the highways, it is Nulli liceat distractiones facere in via regia aut in communi strata: In the glossary at the end of decem scriptores, there is an account of some travellers who happened to lose their way; and the expression is, a publica stratâ deviantes, which must certainly mean the highway. The court therefore held it well enough.

Then exception was taken, that the terminus a quo, or ad quem the way led, was not mentioned. To which the court answered, that in indictments for nuisances in the highway it is not necessary; for the highway is infinite, and leads from sea to sea (1).

We are all of opinion, the offender may be convicted, without appearing. The statute is silent as to the method of proceeding, and the law of England, it is true, in point of natural justice, always requires the party charged with any offence to be heard before he be condemned in judgment; but that rule must have this exception, unless it is through his own default: Were it otherwise, every criminal might avoid conviction. The law being so, the magistrate is bound to give some opportunity to the party to appear, and if upon such notice he neither comes nor sends a sufficient excuse, the magistrate may proceed to judgment. If this was not to be allowed, the consequence would be, that the offender would escape unpunished, because he would never appear purposely to be convicted, and that would be to make the execution of the law depend on the will of the offender.

Salk. 181.
 1 Mod. Ca. 47.

The rule of law that has been objected to is true, That acts of parliament, in what they are silent, are best expounded according to the use and reason of the common law. In the case of high treason (which is a much harder case than this) the party may be outlawed for his not appearing, and then he is liable to all the pains and penalties, as much as in the case of a conviction. So in real actions if the tenant makes a second default, judgment peremptory is given for the demandant to recover. In crimes of a lesser nature than treason or felony, and in personal actions, the outlawry exposes the party to greater punishment than if he had appeared and been condemned in that action; for he forfeits thereby his liberty, goods and chattels, besides other disabilities which he incurs. In corporations if a member of the body be summoned, and do not appear, he may lawfully be removed. 1 Vent. 19. 2 Keb. 488. 1 Sid. 14. 2 Sid. 97.

It is the constant practice in this court, in setting aside judgments, granting attachments, &c. to give notice to the party to come and make his defence, and if he neglects to make his defence, the court proceeds against him.

This act of parliament plainly designed a summary proceeding, and therefore the proceedings must be guided according to the summary proceedings allowed in this court. The solemn proceedings of the law before a man shall lose his life or lands need not be followed; and yet in those cases the judgment is, that he shall forfeit his life or lands, not for the crime as taken pro confesso, but the judgment is really for his absence. The proceedings therefore against a man in his absence are not against the common law. Many acts of parliament that appoint a forfeiture or penalty, do not give the justices power to bring the offender before them. There are many offences against acts of parliament, which are mere non-feasances or neglects, as not putting out of lights, &c. Now to require the offender to be brought before the justices and detained, will be a strange construction, for that detainer may be accounted a greater punishment than the forfeiture; and if in such a case the offender, to prevent further trouble, would send the forfeiture, why should not that be a sufficient authority for the justice to convict him, though he does not appear in person? To compel the offender to appear would be to no purpose; for if he does appear, the justices cannot compel him to make a defence.

An objection was made to the summons, that it does not particularize the place and hour, it is only licet summonitus fuit ad hoc tempus et hunc locum, sed default fecit. (Answer) The default entered by the justices implies the summons was to appear at that time and place, for otherwise it would not be a default; and where the legislature has given a power, we will presume the justices pursue that power, unless the contrary appears. If they did not make a proper summons, they are punishable for it by information. Post. 673. Rex v. Allinton, Hil. 12 Geo.

certainly good, for the offender may intrust his defence with another, and the justices cannot enforce him to appear in person. Orders confirmed.

Brampton and Crab.

AFTER a verdict for the plaintiff in an indebitatus assumpsit, and 22 shillings damages assessed, the defendant came into court, and suggested upon the roll, "quod querens nulla misas et custagia versus ipsum in hoc casu super veredictum illud recuperare debet, sed humillime petit idem defendens quod misa et custagia sua per ipsum circa defensionem suam in hac parte expensa per judicium hujus curia juxta formam statuti sibi adjudicentur, quia dicit quod" (setting out the act of 3 Jac. 1. c. 15. made for the recovery of small debts in the city of London, and which subjects the plaintiff to lose his costs, and pay costs, where the parties are citizens, and the damages under 40 shillings). Then the defendant avers, that at the time of making the promises in the declaration, et semper abinde hucusque, he was and is a freeman of the city of London, residing within the city, (viz. in such a parish and ward) using the trade of a cooper, and that the plaintiff was and is a freeman residing within the city, viz. &c. using the trade of a barber, and that the cause of action arose within the jurisdiction of the court of conscience, which was held every Wednesday and Saturday every week since the time of the promise. He likewise avers, that he was indebted to the plaintiff in no more than 22 shillings, and that he has expended so much in his defence, which the plaintiff ought to pay, juxta formam statuti præd.

After the inquest is taken by default, the defendant can make no suggestion on the roll.

*Boston & Campbell
5 Sept 1788*

[47]

The first doubt upon this suggestion was, whether the defendant should not have made it before the cause had so far proceeded as to a verdict, and whether it was not a matter pleadable to the jurisdiction of the court: but upon citing a case of Pennel v. Wallis, in B. R. Mich. 9 W. 3. where after verdict for 30 shillings, the defendant made such a suggestion, which was argued on demurrer, and held to be well suggested after a verdict, this first difficulty was got over.

But then it was objected, that it appeared the inquest was taken by default, and therefore the defendant was out of court as to all purposes but having judgment against him. After a default there can be no replender. Salk. 216. 1 Mod. Ca. 1. Salk. 579. 2 Roll. Abr. 430. pl. 4.

For this last reason the court held, that the defendant could not be received to make the suggestion, and so the plaintiff had judgment (1).

The sessions cannot set aside the assignment of an apprentice bound out by the justices.

Per Curiam : The sessions had no power to judge of the validity of a deed, or to hinder a man from assigning his apprentice. The covenant to provide for him is well performed, if the person to whom he is bound assigns him to another to provide for him. And apprentices bound out by justices may be assigned as well as others. Wherefore the order was quashed (1).

C. J. Upon the surrender to the marshal's court, non constat to the officer that there is any charge against him there, and by that means he will be discharged; and if he be surrendered there, he must be removed to this court; it will therefore be least trouble, to surrender him here.

The doubt in this case was, how these costs should be come at, whether by rule of court upon the affidavit, or by a suggestion of the matter upon the record; and for this purpose he quoted the case of *Walker v. There the defendant was collector of the land-tax, and the plaintiff being doubly taxed as a non-juror, and distrained, brought an Indebitatus assumpsit against the collector for the redemption-money. And though nothing of this appeared upon record, yet on affidavits of the fact the court directed a suggestion to be made, "Quia constat curiæ super examinationem quod, &c. ideo consideratum est that the nonsuit be recorded, and the defendant recover treble costs."

DARNALL Serjeant moved for a rule for 50 l. against the marshal upon the statute 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 26. for not giving a note testifying the defendant's being in his custody.

How the penalty against the marshal on 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 26. shall be recovered.

Per Curiam: The statute does not give us any power, it only says 50 l. shall be forfeited. This neglect is a contempt to the court, and therefore the marshal may be punished as used to be before this statute. You had a rule for him to own his prisoner, if he did not the court punished him to the plaintiff's satisfaction. The statute does not preclude us from punishing him, but only gives the plaintiff the 50 l. as a further satisfaction. The penalty may be recovered by bill against the marshal, but it is not in our power to make him pay it in a summary way. The chief intent of the statute was, that such note from the marshal should be good evidence in case of an escape, to prove that the defendant was at that time in actual custody. Take a rule for the marshal to acknowledge his prisoner.

ORDER of Sessions for the removal of a wife and three children from the parish of St. Andrew to the parish of St. Brides, setting forth, that A. about twenty-three years since married B. and lived with her five years in the parish of St. Brides, and had by her four children, two whereof were dead, and the other two provided for. That at the end of five years he went away from her, and married another woman, with whom he lived somewhere in England; but that he never saw his first wife B. from the time of his going away.

B. after the separation (having heard nothing for a long time of A.) married a second husband, by whom she had eight children in the parish of St. Andrew, who all went by the name of the second husband, five of them are dead, and the other three survive. And the sessions presuming that the second marriage of the wife is void ab initio, adjudge, that her settlement, and that of the three children, is in the parish of St. Brides, where the first husband lived, as deeming the children the legitimate issue of the first marriage.

The court quashed the order as to the children, and confirmed it as to the wife.

First, Because the second marriage and living with the second husband in St. Andrew's was void ab initio; and therefore the place of her settlement was where the first husband lived.

Secondly

Secondly, It being adjudged that the first husband had no access for seventeen years, no presumption shall be admitted but that these are the children of the second marriage; and they not being born in the parish of St. Brides, nor having ever inhabited there forty days, can have no settlement in St. Brides.

UPON Non fuit electus returned to a Mandamus to swear the plaintiff a capital burgess of Denbigh, the jury find a special verdict, That by the charters there are to be two bailiffs, two aldermen, and twenty-five capital burgesses; and the direction how the capital burgesses are to be elected is in these words: "And if it happen any of the said capital burgesses to die, or be removed, then it shall be lawful for the bailiffs, aldermen and capital burgesses for the time being, or the major part of them, Quorum unum ballivorum et unum aldermannorum duos esse volumus, to elect another." That 24 June 1 Geo. there was a vacancy by the death of J. S. and Michaelmas-day following the bailiffs, aldermen and burgesses met and proceeded to an election. That the two bailiffs and the major part of the capital burgesses for the election of Robert Salisbury Cotton and Davies gave gave their votes for the plaintiff, and the two aldermen and the residue of the capital burgesses voted for another.

Lutwyche pro quer' argued, that the question in this case is only, whether upon the words of the clause, Quorum unum bailivorum et unum aldermannorum duos esse volumus, the consent of one bailiff and one alderman to every election be requisite, to make it good. And he took the negative of the question; and argued, that the charter only required their presence; for if it should be thought that the election cannot be without their consent, it would be in a manner to vest the whole power of election in them two; which the charter never intended. In the common case of a quarter sessions a justice of the Quorum must be one, but yet the act of the majority binds him. 1 Inst. 250. 1 Roll. Abr. 514. Hob. 211.

Chefbyre Serjeant contra. Unless there be one bailiff and one alderman consenting, there can be no election. What signifies their presence, if they disavow the election? There is Serjeant Whitaker's case, Hil. 3 Anna. Salk. 434. By the charter of Ipswich power is given to the bailiffs, burgesses and commonalty to remove the recorder, quorum the two bailiffs duos esse volumus. Upon a Mandamus to restore Serjeant Whitaker, they return, that he was removed by the bailiffs, burgesses and commonalty, the two bailiffs being present; and it was objected and adjudged that their consent was as necessary as their presence (1). 3 Mod. 3. If they are present and dissent, how can the election be said to be by them?

C. J. This is like the case of the city of London, where the mayor, and common council have power to do acts; and yet the act of the majority of the common council is good, though the mayor dissents. In this case there is nothing required but the presence of one bailiff and one alderman at every election, and they have no negative voices; to which the rest of the court agreed, and a peremptory Mandamus was granted.

(1) This is a mis-statement: included in the major part. And the report in Salk. says, that the Court held, that though the bailiffs were only said to be present, they should be intended to be consenting either actually or as according to the report of the same case 2 *Ld. Sed per Curiam: After a verdict it shall be intended to be such common for which an ejectment will lie, as common appendant or appurtenant. And the general expression of Common must relate to that which is most usual, just as the word Tenure imports a tenure in socage. ORDER of sessions reciting, that the parish of A. is not able to maintain its own poor, nor any other parish within the hundred to contribute; therefore the justice at the sessions

The sessions may by virtue of 43 Eliz. charge parishes out of the hundred towards the maintenance of the poor by the name of tax other parishes in another hundred within the same county to the relief of the poor of the parish of A.

Reeve moved to quash it, and insisted that the 43 Eliz. c. 2. § 3. gives no authority to the sessions to charge people out of the hundred, till two justices have inquired whether any parish in the hundred can contribute. The first application to be to two justices, and the second to the sessions.

Sessions have an original jurisdiction to discharge apprentices.

C. J. I do not see to what purpose it would be for the two justices to make an order, only to adjudge that no parish within the hundred is able to contribute. We will presume the sessions is satisfied of that, and if the two justices should make such an adjudication, yet the sessions must inquire into the truth of it; and if no order appears which charges any parish within the hundred, it is a sufficient ground for the sessions to act. This is like the case of apprentices bound out by justices: for there, if there be any disagreement, the master and servant may go before two justices to make an end between them, and if the justices cannot, then to the sessions: but yet it has never been held, but that the sessions have an original jurisdiction, and the parties are intitled to be heard at the sessions, tho' they never went before two justices. Salk. 67, 68. 1 Vent. 174. Salk. 491. In this case if the justices had charged any parish within the hundred, that would have stopped the sessions from proceeding; and the sufficiency of the hundred depends on this, whether two justices have ever charged the hundred. If the two justices do not think the hundred able, (that is) if they do not adjudge it so. If two justices should adjudge the hundred not able, yet if other two justices adjudge the contrary, their charge would be good, and the sessions be ousted of their jurisdiction notwithstanding the first adjudication.

Eyre J. Here are two jurisdictions, that of the two justices, and that of the sessions, and both are original jurisdictions. They are different in all respects, for the two justices have no power out of the hundred, nor the sessions within it. There need be no appeal from an adjudication of two justices, for that would be to appeal from a nullity. Order confirmed.

The Parishes of South Sydenham and Lamerton:

ORDER of two justices for the removal of A. and his wife from the parish of Lamerton to the parish of South Sydenham, wherein the case was specially stated, That about 27 years since the mother-in-law of A. dying, he entered into a term of years in South Sydenham in the right of his wife, and lived upon it two years, but never took out administration to the mother.

That at the end of two years he removed to Lamerton, and took a lease for 99 years, determinable upon three lives, at the yearly rent of 7*l.* 10*s.* whereof 4*l.* 10*s.* lay in South Sydenham, and the residue, and also the messuage, lay in Lamerton, where A. has lived for 25 years. That the premises were of the yearly value of 13*l.* but in regard 7*l.* 10*s.* rent only was reserved, and 4*l.* 10*s.* of that lay in South Sydenham, and he had formerly lived there two years; therefore the justices adjudge the settlement to be there.

Glyde Serjeant moved to quash it, for a man may have a right to several settlements, and yet be settled in one only. The right of administration gave him no settlement in South Sydenham, for there must be an actual administration.

Reeve contra. The term is but a chattel, to which he is intitled without administration. The settlement was good at South Sydenham, but the question is, whether he has since gained any at Lamerton. The statute 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 12. requires him to take a tenement of the yearly value of 10*l.* what the value is, must be adjudged by the rent reserved, and that is only 7*l.* 10*s.*

C. J. If Lamerton be a good settlement, the order is wrong. The quantity of the rent is not material, but the value of the land. A tenant often pays a fine, and thereby lowers the rent, and yet the land is of equal value. And if a man should out of kindness settle another in a tenement of 10*l.* per annum value, reserving no rent, yet that will not alter the case (1).

The only difficulty is, that there is not in this case 10*l.* per annum in one single parish. As to that I am of opinion, that if such a person as this should take a tenement of 8*l.* per annum in one parish, and another of 3*l.* per annum in a different parish, that would not gain him a settlement in either (2) but if the tenement be intire, and the house in one parish (as this case is) and part of the land in another; yet this may properly be called a tenement of 10*l.* per annum in that parish where the house is. The law presumes that a person capable to be entrusted with the management of 10*l.* per annum is not likely to become chargeable; but is able to maintain himself. Two distinct tenement in two parishes, making together 10*l. per annum*, will give no settlement. But it seems to me to be otherwise where the tenement is intire.

Byre J. accord.

Pratt J. This man has fully satisfied the words of the act of Parliament. The mischief was, that the poor went to the parishes where were the best common and privileges; and when they had consumed that removed to another. The only way to remedy this was, to send them back again. Though part of the 10*l. per annum* lies in one parish, and part in another, yet the man is not a whit the poorer, or less able to provide for himself. There are considerable farmers who do not rent 10*l. per annum* in any one parish, and it would be hard to adjudge that therefore they gain no settlement.

Per Curiam: The settlement is at Lamerton, and therefore the order of removal to South Sydenham must be quashed (3).

ions of turning him out before the court. There does not so much as a power of turning him out appear.

Bootle contra. The writ does not command them to shew cause why they turned him out, but only to restore him, or shew cause. By the words of the statute he is ipso facto deprived upon a neglect to take the oaths; so no formal expulsion was requisite. Show. 274. 4 Mod. 52.

A mandamus does not lie in this case. Mandamus's are granted to restore people to publick offices, where the administration of justice is concerned; and if the place be a freehold, the party aggrieved may have an assize; if of a lesser nature, an action for the special damage. Mich. 2 Ann Vaughan's case. A mandamus to restore him to the office of prover of guns in the Tower was denied, because of a private nature: and Holt C. J. said a mandamus would not lie to restore a register of an ecclesiastical court, Show. 252. 3 Mod. 335. Show. 217, 261. 251. Mandamus denied for a proctor of Doctor's Commons. And in 1 Sid. 169. for a steward of a court baron; and in Stiles 458. for an usher. 1 Sid. 40, 29, 71. 1 Keb. 5. and in Show. 74. for a fellow of a college. Vide 1 Vent. 143.

Lutwyche replied. Though it may not lie for a master of a private school; yet it will for this, which is a free grammar school founded by the crown. The education of youth concerns the publick, and therefore the masters are required to take the oaths. A mandamus was granted for the clerk of St. Dunstan's; and in 1 Vent. 143, 153. for a sexton and scavenger. And it will be no answer to say, that an assize or an action may be brought; for the court grants mandamus's every day for freeholds, and the party has his election which remedy to take.

C. J. This is of a publick nature, being derived from the crown. I think the defendants were not obliged to shew cause why they turned him out, but only why they do not restore him. But still this return is insufficient: It is only that he did not take the oaths in actu præd' mentionat'; now he is not obliged to take the Scotch oath. They should have said, that he did not take the oaths of allegiance, abjuration and supremacy, or the oaths required to be taken by a school-master. The act excepts officers in the Fleet, &c. and therefore it should appear he is not excepted: for the party having no opportunity to plead in this case, the return ought to be certain to every intent. And though we grant a peremptory mandamus, that will not be final; for if he has not qualified himself, he is ipso facto deprived, and our granting a mandamus will have no effect.

Mandamus lies for a parish-clerk, sexton, and scavenger, for clerk of the peace (2). Show. 282. 2 Sid. 412. R. Raym. 277. 2 Lev. 12.

Under-sheriff's clerk cannot assign a bail-bond. 10 Mod. 288, S. C.

UPON a case at the assizes the question was, whether a bail-bond was well assigned by the under sheriff's clerk.

Parker C. J. said, he had had the advice of all his brothers, and they were of opinion, that an under-sheriff himself might assign a bail-bond in the name of the high-sheriff, it having been the constant practice ever since the statute 4 & 5 Ann. but that if the assignment was neither by the high-sheriff nor his under sheriff, it would not be good; and that being the present case, the defendant had judgment (1).

(1) "This case was denied to be law (as here reported) by Lord Mansfield in the case of Harris v. Ashley, Sittings in Middlesex, Mich. Term 30 Geo. 2. B. R. TROVER by an administrator for rum taken and converted in the intestate's life. Upon evidence it appeared, that the rum was taken in the intestate's life, but not used till after his death. And the question was, whether this evidence of not using it till the administrator's time would not overthrow the declaration of a conversion in the intestate's life.

Goods taken in intestate's life and kept till his death, though used afterwards, is a trover and conversion in the intestate's life.

Sed per Curiam : The time of using the rum lay in the breast of the defendant, who ought to have disclosed that matter by his plea : and the taking in the life of the intestate, and keeping it till his death, is a trover and conversion sufficient to maintain this declaration. Wherefore the plaintiff had judgment, this being a point reserved at nisi prius.

Dix versus Brookes.

THE plaintiff declares, that the defendant broke and entered his house, and assaulted his wife. After verdict for the plaintiff it was moved in arrest of judgment, that the wife should have joined in this action, and by her not joining the defendant pays damages to the husband, and yet the action for the assault will survive to the wife, and so the defendant be doubly charged. Besides, that here is no laying per quod consortium amisit, to intitle the baron only to sue and exclude the wife. Yelv. 89. Godb. 369.

Cork versus Baker. Ante 34.

THE defendant having brought a writ of error of a judgment in C. B. assigned for error a Clausum fregit original, and took out a Certiorari to verify his errors. The Custos brevium of the common pleas, instead of certifying the original, returned that there was such a writ in his office, but that the plaintiff in the original action, having entered a Ne recipiatur, he could not file the original, and consequently could not return it.

Upon this the plaintiff in error applied to this court. And a rule was made, for Mr. Yates, the deputy Custos brevium, to attend. And after counsel had been heard on both sides, the court delivered their opinions.

C. J. This practice of entering a Ne recipiatur is very new, and in my opinion very absurd. There may indeed be some colour to say, that if the plaintiff neglects to file his original in order to warrant his judgment, that then the defendant may stop the filing it; but that reason will not hold in this case, which is a Ne recipiatur entered by the plaintiff against filing his own writ, after he has had the benefit of it, by intitling that court to hold plea, and convene the defendant before them. Their authority is grounded only on the king's writ out of chancery, except they proceed by way of privilege. And, the statute which helps want of an original, never intended they should proceed without; but only went upon a supposition, that there had been one, which was lost; and therefore in all those cases where want of an original is helped, yet a bad original is not. 1 Sid. 84. Yel. 109. 5 Co. 37. b. Salk. 267. If this practice was to prevail, no bad originals would ever be filed, but judgments be affirmed upon presumption the original is lost when in truth there never was a good original at all.

Matter of fact relating to the proceedings must be fairly laid before the court that has power to examine into those proceedings; and will make the filazer, or the plaintiff, carry in and file the original, rather than the party shall not have justice done him; or withdraw the Ne recipiatur, if that was of any effect. When a writ is in the Custos brevium's office, it is filed in judgment of law, though the officer does not annex it to the bundle of writs. It is an unreasonable position, that as soon as the plaintiff has had the benefit of the writ, he should be suffered to stifle it. Every defendant has a right to reverse an erroneous judgment; and he that takes upon him to obstruct that, is guilty of a very great abuse; and in my opinion ought to be punished.

Powys J. To deny the means is to deny the thing.

Eyre J. The court having power to redress, has as incident thereto, a power to come at every thing which is necessary for their information. And the officers of C. B. are pro hac vice officers of this court; and we will not pray in aid of the common pleas, to make the officer do his duty. His return amounts to no more than this. He says the writ is not filed; why? Because I do not do it; though I am paid for it, and it is my duty to do it.

Pratt J.

Pratt J. The proceedings of the two courts seem to clash, and I shall always be very ready to pay a due respect to the court of common pleas. But that will never carry me so far, as to compliment them with our jurisdiction. And in cases where that comes in question, I think a man ought not to be mealy-mouthed, and in vindicating our own jurisdiction, we only act up to the rules of law and our own oaths. This court is superior to the court of common pleas, and they ought not to have laid an inhibition upon the officer, from filing this writ. When we are told, there is error in the proceedings, we must make all proper inquiries; and the party has a right to demand it of us. And when we issue a Certiorari, to return up this original; shall the officer say, there is such an one, but I will not file it? And can it be expected, that we shall stand still, till the truth of this is falsified in an action for a false return? Mr. Yates has endeavoured to trip up the heels of our jurisdiction, and therefore ought to be committed, unless he obeys immediately.

Mr. Yates refusing to alter the return, was committed. He immediately applied to the common pleas for a Habeas corpus, whither being carried, the return was read, that he was committed by the court of B. R. pro contemptu. And then Cheesbrey moved, that the return might be filed; which being done, he moved, that Mr. Yates might be discharged; and argued, that the commitment was too general, for that some cause of commitment must appear, to restrain a subject of England of his liberty. It is not so much as said to be a contempt upon confession, verdict, or examination.

Whereupon the court took time to consider, and look into the cases; and in the mean time the parties made an end of the cause, and applied to *B. And then a motion was made, that Mr. Yates might be discharged, which upon consent and intercession of the prosecutor, and an affidavit of his indisposition, and setting a small fine upon him, was granted. But the C. J. said, that if Mr. Yates had been there, he should have told him, that he must not think of giving such shuffling answers to the king's writ writ of certiorari; and that this court has power, if their commitments are questioned, to justify their own proceedings.

Dominus Rex vers. Marriott.

Conviction for killing a hare, ill, quia the witness swears generally a man is not qualified. 1 Sess. Ca. p. 125. No. 118. S. C.

Conviction before one justice for keeping a greyhound; reciting, that one William Toun came and informed, that the defendant, being a person not qualified to keep a greyhound, did nevertheless keep one at A. and another at B. and with them killed one hare at A. and two at B. and that he being summoned did appear, and being asked what he had to say, offered nothing in excuse, and ideo the justice convicted him.

Pengelly Serjeant objected, that the justice should set out, why the defendant is not a qualified person, as that he is not the son of an esquire, nor has 100*l.* per annum in his own or his wife's right. For he ought not to make himself the sole judge, but give the reasons at large. West's Precedents tit. Indictments, § 129. page 145. § 270. page 147. § 298. 1 Saund. 262.

Reeve contra. The conviction has pursued the words of the act, in saying the defendant not being qualified did so and so. The cases quoted are upon statutes where the express qualifications are mentioned, but the statute 5 Anna, c. 14. which gives the penalty, says only, "not being qualified according to the statute 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 25." The defendant at the time of the conviction might have shewn himself qualified, for there the affirmative lies.

In orders of removal it is sufficient to say, the person came to settle contrary to law, without adding, "not having 10*l.* per annum, &c." though those are the qualifications required by the statute; and an order is as much a judgment as this, and the same reason holds in both cases.

Pengelly. The statute 22 & 23 Car. 2. limits the qualifications, and 5 Anna the penalty; and both these must be considered together as one act. For where one statute makes the offence, and another inflicts the punishment; it ought to appear that the proceedings tally with both. Plowd. 206. Allen 49. Cro. Eliz. 750. This case differs from that of an order, for there an appeal lies, but here the judgment is final.

Plow. 51. a. b.

The Chief Justice seemed to think the conviction would be good, having followed the words of 5 Anna, and that if the defendant was qualified, he ought to have shewn it before the justice, justice, being summoned for that purpose. But then Eyre J. started an objection, that it was not the justice that had taken upon him to say the defendant was not qualified, but only the witness; for the conviction runs, that the witnesses being sworn, "dicunt et jurant et uterque eorum dicit et jurat quod defensus existens persona minimè qualificat" did such a day keep a "greyhound;" so that it appears, the witness has given the law to the justice, and takes upon himself to judge of the defendant's qualifications, and the justice is only made use of as an instrument to reduce the opinion of the witness into a conviction.

C. J. The existens, &c. should be the conclusion of the justice, and not the words of the witness; for he ought not to swear generally a man is not qualified, and such a general proof will not be good. This is only an invention, to support a conviction in general terms, which would be bad if the particular facts were alledged.

Pratt J. Where the justices have a summary jurisdiction, and no appeal lies (as in this case) we must keep them up strictly to the law (1); and I should be glad if we could make them set out the whole particularly. But in this case I think it cannot be understood, that the existens, &c. are the words of the witness, for it cannot be supposed that he swore in Latin, and therefore I look upon this as the substance of the evidence reduced by the justice into form. If words are set out in English, we keep the witness strictly to the words; but where they are turned into Latin, if the substance and effect of them be proved, is sufficient.

C. J. If ye render it in English, it is no more, than that the witnesses swore, that the defendant, not being a person qualified according to law, kept a greyhound. And we cannot intend, they swore negatively to every qualification (a). If any one of the qualifications had been omitted, the conviction would have been bad; and so it will be, when all are omitted. This is a record that the witness upon oath deposed so and so. I have seen all the qualifications negatively recited in orders of removal. (a) Vide note (3).

Eyre J. Rex v. Green (b), a conviction was quashed where the witness deposed de veritate præmissorum (2). In English depositions the effect is only set out, that the witness swore that, &c. (b) 10 Mod. 212. Contra Salk. 369.

(1) Rex v. Little, 1 Burr. 613. the conviction only set forth, that the witness was sworn de veritate præmissorum, but did not state what it was that he did swear.

(2) According to the report in 10 Mod. the objection was, that

And though this is only the recital made by the commissioners, yet it is as large as the words of the witness; and we must intend this evidence was taken in the same manner. The witness here cannot be indicted for perjury, in swearing the defendant was not the son of an esquire, &c. because he has conceived the matter in such general terms. I do not see how he could honestly swear this; for I believe had he been asked, as soon as he had said the defendant was not qualified, what the qualifications are, he could not have told you.

Adjournatur. And afterwards Pengelly mentioned two cases, Regina v. Hayward, Pasch. 12 Anne. There it was, "not being qualified, licensed, or authorized to keep any engine, &c." and it was quashed. The other was the same term, and quashed, because no qualifications were mentioned (3). And towards the end of the term this conviction was quashed; and the principal reason declared to be, because the witnesses had taken upon themselves, to judge of the qualifications (4).

(3) So Rex v. Jervis, and the Rex v. Crowther, 1 Term Rep. cases there cited. 1 Burr. 148. 125.
Rex v. Wheatman, Doug. 345. (4) Vide Rex v. Baker, post. 316.
 But the evidence need not negative every particular qualification.

Jones versus White.

Quære, whether the coroner's inquest may be given in evidence in an action?

UPON a trial at bar on a feigned issue out of chancery, where the question was, Devisevit vel non; to overthrow the will, the defendant insisted, that the testator was Non compos at the time of making it, which was the 29th, having shot himself the 31st. And amongst other circumstances the coroner's inquest, which found him lunatick, was offered to be read. But being opposed by the other side, the court delivered their opinions. Reg. v. Fontaine Morvan II. QB. 1034.

C. J. The plaintiff in this case is executrix, and the inquest for her advantage, since the personal estate is saved by finding lunacy; and therefore I think it may be read against her. In My Lord Derby's case an inquest post mortem was allowed to be given in evidence. If this be read, it will have very little weight, for it only finds him lunatic eo instante, 31st, which is no conclusive evidence, that he was so the 29th. Powys J. with the C. J.

Eyre J. This is a criminal matter, and ought not to be given in evidence in a civil proceeding. A verdict on an indictment of battery battery cannot be read in an action for the same battery. An inquest post mortem was in the nature of a civil proceeding, but this is criminal, for it might induce a forfeiture of the goods, if he had been found felo de se. 1 Sid. 325.

Pratt J. If a verdict be given in evidence, it must be between the same parties (1); and therefore an indictment, which is at the suit of the king, cannot be read in an action, which is at the suit of the party. The wife is no witness here, as she was before the coroner; so that this would be to read her against herself. The reason why an inquest post mortem may be read is, because of the antiquity of it, to or prove a pedigree.

The court being divided, it was not read, till Pratt desired it might for this time, being only to inform the conscience of the Chancellor, and that nothing might be said to be wanting to clean this question (2).

Coming afterwards to be better informed, what the consequence would be; they applied to the coroner, and told him they were fully satisfied, the man was a lunatic, and desired he would take the verdict so: and thereupon he drew up the inquisition, and they all set their hands and seals to it. A certiorari being brought, he returned up the first inquisition, that he might still cover the goods; and the court stayed the filing it, and committed him. 2 Sid. 90, 101, 144. *Mich. 1 Geo. B. Lord Kildare versus Fisher.

Pas. 3 Geo. rot. 2.

ON error from Ireland in ejectment it was objected, that it was brought (inter alia) for 100 acres of mountain, which is a description of the situation, and not the quality of the land. And 11 Co. 55. 2 Roll. Rep. 166, 189. Palm. 100. Hardr. 58. were cited.

E contra.

Waterpark v Fennell, 7 R. L. Cas. 650.

E contra. It was insisted, that ejectments have been held to lie for that in Ireland, which is not a known description here; as for Bog, 1 Cro. 511. 2 Keb. 745. Pass. 3 Ann. Hind v. Handcock. Ejectment in Ireland for a knave of land was held well, on certificate from thence, that it was a term used there.

After the cause had been adjourned, the C. J. delivered the opinion of the court. I have looked into the case of Stafford v. Macdonolph, in Palm. 100. and 2 Roll. Rep. 166, 189. which Rolle never transcribed into his abridgement. He being at that time the expert reporter, has given the fullest account, and is chiefly to be regarded. For that case is 17 Jac. 1. and Palmer was not attorney general till King Charles the Second's Restoration, (1 Sid. 465.) and must be very young, when that case was adjudged. There it is admitted, that a præcipe would lie de stagno, of a carve and an oxgang; a fortiori will an ejectment, which requires rather less certainty than a præcipe. They were inclined however to be guided by the opinion that had prevailed in Ireland, and therefore referred it to two who had been Judges in Ireland, and desired them to consult Sir William Parsons, and upon his authority they certified, that the word mountain in the general acceptance was used to denote the situation and not the quality of the land, and upon that the judgment was reversed. This case did not give us any satisfaction; though we agreed with the Judges to be guided by the sense of the Irish, yet we have not thought fit to take the same method: and have therefore propounded to them several questions, which are answered by the Chancellor, the two Chief Justices, the Chief Baron, and four other of the Judges. And I have since shewed it to two of the Judges, who were here in the vacation, and they concur with the rest.

1. The first question we propounded to them was, whether in demand the word mountain is understood to describe the quality of the land, or only the situation?

To this they answer: That it describes both, and is a sort of coarse land that yields little or no profit. For the English upon their settling there, called such land as they improved arable, and the uncultivated part went by the name of mountain. And the Lord Chancellor adds, that it does not so much as necessarily include the situation, for he has a great deal of coarse land which is called mountain, and yet does not lie upon a hill, but is as low as the arable land about it, and that a boy can distinguish which is arable and which is mountain.

2. Whether fines and recoveries, and writs of dower, are usually brought of mountain?

In

In answer to this they have sent us abundance of precedents from King James the First to this time; and add, that it would be of mischievous consequence, if it should be thought that mountain was no description, since it would shake all the settlements in the kingdom.

3. Whether ejectments are usually brought of mountain, and whether this point has received any judicial determination?

To this they answer: That it happens very often, but has never been judicially determined, because it is so common as never to be questioned.

As to the case in the Exchequer Chamber of (a) Holborn v. Babington, we are assured, that judgment was reversed upon another point, whether a challenge was well allowed, and the other objection only mentioned by one of the Judges.

(a) 2 Bro. Par. Ca. 114.
21 Vin. p. 226.

Since therefore the precedents are with the present case, and the thing reasonable in itself, and the sheriff may as easily know how to deliver possession of mountain, as of a carve, or an ox-gang; we are all of opinion, that an ejectment will lie for mountain in Ireland, and consequently the judgment must be affirmed (1).

(1) Vide Cottingham v. King, known in England, was affirmed where a verdict in ejectment for land by several descriptions un- upon error from the court of K. B. in Ireland. 1 Burr. 623.

IN an order of removal the complaint was recited to be to one justice only, but the ordering part is by two justices; and this was held good. Then exception was taken, that there was no adjudication of the place to which he was removed being his last legal settlement, but only "We order him to be removed to A. as the place of his last legal settlement." And for this fault the order was quashed.

Quia - King 5 Wall. Ill. 365.

Dominus Rex versus Loggen et Froome.

A prerogative probate when there are no bene notabilia is not void, but only voidable.

INDICTMENT against defendants for extortion, setting forth, that the defendant Dr. Loggen being Chancellor, and the other defendant register of the bishop of Sarum, did force one Thomas Hollier, executor of the will of Mary Alston, to prove the said will in the said bishop's court, ubi bene sciebant that the said will had before been proved in the prerogative court of Canterbury, and and by reason thereof they extorsive exigebant of the said Thomas Hollier 40 s. On not guilty pleaded there was a verdict for the king, generally.

The defendants now moved in arrest of judgment, and offered several exceptions, relating either (1) to the merits, or (2) to the form of the indictment.

As to the merits two things were insisted on;

1st, That it not appearing there were any bona notabilia, the prerogative probate was ipso facto void, and consequently the will ought to be proved before the defendant Loggen, the testator dying in the diocese of Sarum. 2^{dly}, Admitting it not void, but only voidable, yet the prerogative court having proceeded in a matter wherein they had no jurisdiction, that should not hinder the court of Sarum from proceeding in a matter within their jurisdiction.

As to the first point; before the counsel had gone far in their argument the C. J. stopped them, and declared, that it was not now to be contested, having been often settled, that such prerogative probate is not void, but only voidable. To which the rest of the court agreed.

2. They held that this voidable probate, being the act of the superior, had so far taken away the power of the inferior, that he could not exercise his jurisdiction, till that voidable probate was avoided (1).

Then it was urged for Dr. Loggen, that in this case he acted as a judge, and therefore was not indictable for an error in his judgment. Sed per Parker C. J. In this case he did not act as a judge between party and party, but was only to determine whether he should have such fees or not; and that rule extends only to judges in courts of record, and not to ministerial officers, as was resolved in the case of Abby White (a).

(1) But in Sir John Nedham's case, 8 Co. 135. It was resolved, that if a prerogative administration be granted by the archbishop, and then one be granted by the ordinary, and the prerogative administration be afterwards repealed, the administration granted by the ordinary before the repeal, is good. 1. Because the prerogative one being pronounced null and void by the ecclesiastical judge, the court will intend it void ab initio for causes not appearing to them. 2. Because administration being but an authority, it may commence in futuro, and therefore shall be suspended till the former be repealed. Vide also Dyer 377. pl. 46. 2 Brownl. 119.

The exceptions to the indictment were many.

First, For that it only alledged, that the defendants bene sciebant that the will had been proved before in the prerogative court; whereas they should have shewn, that it appeared judicially before them. For otherwise this is no more than indicting a judge for giving sentence on one side, when a matter not appearing to him would have inclined him to the other.

[75] To this it was answered, that he could not well know it, unless it appeared under seal; and this being after a verdict the C. J. said he would intend it so, and in fact the second probate was affixed to the same copy as the first.

Justices of peace of extortion.

4 Com. Dig. tit.
Justice (B. 35.)

Secondly, Another exception was, that this was an indictment at sessions, and the justices have no jurisdiction as to extortion. But this was likewise over-ruled, for their commission has in it the word extorsionibus. 3 Inst. 149.

Thirdly, For that the indictment had not alleged what was the just fee; so non constat that the defendants were guilty of extortion. Sed per Parker, it matters not whether 40 s. was the usual fee for probate, since in this case the defendants had no title to any fee at all.

Salk. 382.

Fourth exception. The defendants' offices are distinct; and what might be extortion in one, might not be so in the other; and therefore the indictment ought not to be joint; as two cannot be jointly indicted for exercising a trade without serving an apprenticeship. Et per Parker C. J. This would be an exception, if they were indicted for taking more than they ought; but it is only against them for contriving to get money where none is due. And this is an entire charge. For there are no accessories in extortion, but he that is assisting is as guilty as the extortioner; as he that is party to a riot, is answerable for the act of the others.

Salk. 384. 595.

Eyre J. doubted whether the bene sciebant was sufficient. And quoted a case where habens notitiam that he was elected constable, was held ill. But as to the merits, and all the other objections, the court were unanimous. Sed adjournatur as to this last, and to consider what punishment to inflict on the defendants.

N. B. J.* The plaintiff might have brought it against either or both, for he had his election. If the action had been against both, he should have declared as he now does; but that is not right in the action against one only. For he should have declared generally, that this defendant by his note promised to pay, and a several note by two would have been good evidence. As where there are several obligors, and one only is sued, no mention is made in the declaration of the other obligors. Suppose the note had been to pay 50 l. or 100 l. the plaintiff is intitled to either, but uncertain which till he has made his election; for he that speaks in the disjunctive says true, if either member of the disjunctive be verified; whereas he that speaks in the affirmative, affirms both parts to be true (1).

COVENANT by the plaintiff as assignee of an executor of an assignee who by many mesne assignments came to the possession of a reversion of a term of years granted in 1624, by the mercers' company, reserving rent; and sets forth the lease by them made, that the lessee made an under-lease for a lesser term, wherein the lessee covenanted to leave the premises in repair, and that then the first lessee granted the reversion to A. who granted it over, till it came to the plaintiff, who as assignee of that reversion brings covenant against the defendant as assignee of the second lessee, the under-lease being expired, and assigns the breach in not leaving the premises in repair. Judgment by default, et inquiratur de dampnis.

Sed N. B. That was a grantee by fine.
Vide post, 106.

Reeve moved in arrest of judgment for that the plaintiff had not shewn a good title to the reversion, there being no attornment set forth on the first grant to A. nor on any of the mesne assignments. And he put the question and argued upon it, whether when tenant for years makes an under-lease for a lesser term, and afterwards grants the reversion, it passes without attornment; for this case must be considered as at common law, the grant being made long before the late statute. In Bro. Abr. tit. Attornment, pl. 45. it is said, that such a reversion will not pass without attornment, because of the attendancy of the rent, which is the present case. If the statute 32 H. 8. c. 34. be objected, I answer, that the statute only gives a complete assignee the action, and has no operation so as to make good his title. 1 Inft. 215. a. A grantee by fine cannot bring covenant without attornment, a fortiori a grantee by deed.

Hob. 177.

Whitaker contra. The case in Bro. was before 32 H. 8. so that what was necessary at common law is not so since that statute. I agree, attornment is necessary on a fine, but why? Because the conuzee could compel it by a quid juris clamat, which the grantee of this reversion cannot. In the case of Sands v. Brookes, Mich. 5 W. & M. B. R. it was held that a grantee of a reversion of a copyhold without attornment might maintain covenant against lessee. The 32 H. 8. was made to assist strangers to deeds, and therefore supplies all circumstances.

But further, this is a judgment by default, and aided by the statute for the amendment of the law, which extends all the statutes of jeofailes to judgments by default, in the same manner, as if there had been a verdict; and no body can say but that in this case a verdict would have cured the want of setting out an attornment.

2 Mod. Caf. 87.
2 Vent. 109,
Salk. 130.

Reeve replied, The case of a grantee of a copyhold doth not come up to this, for copyholders do not claim by deed, but by custom, and therefore no attornment is necessary, as it was before the late statute upon common law conveyances, which is the present case. I agree, a verdict would have cured this defect, because the plaintiff could not have had a verdict unless he had proved an attornment, but as this is a judgment by default, and was not a jeofaile before 4 & 5 Anna, c. 16. that statute can have no relation to this case.

C. J. The reason why the plaintiff is required to set out an attornment is, because his title is not compleat without it, as a copyholder's is. The 32 H. 8. gives none but an assignee this action; it doth not enable him to be assignee, but only as such to bring an action. To which Powys J. agreed. Et per Eyre J. the 32 H. 8. is out of the case; for as the plaintiff is not a compleat assignee, we must take it as it stood at common law, and at common law such a grantee of the reversion as the plaintiff is could not maintain an action of covenant. Jones Sir W. 243. Jones Sir Tho. 217, 232. Moor 527. This was not a jeofaile, so not helped by 4 & 5 Anna. And Pratt, J. said, that the question was no more, than whether the statute 32 H. 8. gives the action to him who has not the reversion, for without attornment it passed not. For these reasons the judgment was arrested.

Williams versus Lady Bridget Osborne.

Before the Delegates at Serjeants Inn, January 22, 1717.

Of the suppleto-
ry oath.

THE question below was, whether Mr. Williams was married to the Lady Bridget Osborne; the minister who performed the ceremony having formerly confessed it extrajudicially, but now denying it upon oath. So that there being variety of evidence on both sides, the Judge upon the hearing the cause required, according to the method of ecclesiastical courts, the oath of the party, which the civilians term the suppletory oath, that he was really married as he supposes in his libel and articles. The accepting this oath (as was agreed on both sides) lies in arbitrio judicis, and is only used where there is but what the civilians esteem a semitplena probatio; for if there be plena probatio, it is never required; and if the evidence does not amount to a semitplena probatio, it is never granted, because this oath is not evidence strictly speaking, but only confirmation of evidence; and if that evidence doth not amount to a semitplena probatio, the confirmation of it by the party's own oath will not alter the case.

Upon admitting the party to his suppletory oath, the Lady Bridget Osborne appeals to the Delegates. So that the question now was not upon the merits, whether there really was a marriage or not, but only upon the course of the ecclesiastical courts, whether the Judge in this case ought to have admitted Mr. Williams to his suppletory oath, as a person that had made a semitplena probatio of that which he was then to confirm.

The questions before the Delegates were two: 1. Whether the suppletory oath ought to be administered in any case, to enforce a semitplena probatio? 2. Admitting it might, whether the evidence in this case amounted to a semitplena probatio, so as to intitle Mr. Williams to pray that his suppletory oath might be received?

1. As to the first, it was argued to be against all the rules of the common law, that a man should be a witness in his own cause. It is not allowed in the temporal courts in any case but that of a robbery, which being presumed to be secret, the party is admitted to be a witness for himself. In the temporal courts no man can be examined that has any interest, though he be no party to the suit, for minima exceptio tollit sacramentum juratoris. On the other side many authorities and precedents were cited out of the civil law, to prove this practice of allowing the suppletory oath.

oath. And therefore the court held, that by the canon and civil law the party agent, making a sempilena probatio, was intitled to pray that his suppletory oath might be received. And though it be against the rules of the common law, yet this being a cause of ecclesiastical conuzance, the civil and not the common law is to be the measure of their proceedings, and therefore this practice being agreeable to the civil law, is well warranted in all cases where the civil law is the rule; and the exercise of it lies in arbitrio judicis.

2. It being therefore established, that a person making sempilena probatio is intitled to his oath; the next question was, what is, according to the notion of the civilians and canonists, a sempilena probatio. With them it was argued on behalf of the Lady, that nothing is esteemed as a plena probatio, unless there be two positive unexceptionable witnesses to the very matter of fact, as to the marriage. That a sempilena probatio, which is the next degree of evidence, is what is affirmed by the oath of one witness as to the principal fact, and confirmed by concurrent circumstances.

And 1st, It must be per unum testem. 2^{dly}, Evidence that concludes necessarily, and not by presumption. 3^{dly}, That has no presumption to encounter it; and 4^{thly}, The witness must be bonesta persona.

That matrimonial causes require the greatest certainty; and where that is the sole question, the proof ought to be fuller, than where it comes in by incident, as on granting administration.

To this it was answered on the other side, that sempilena probatio implies no more than what the common lawyers call presumptive evidence; and that is properly called presumptive evidence, which has no one positive witness to support it, but relies only on the strength of circumstances. And when there is one witness, who deposes directly to the principal fact, this immediately ceases to bear the name of presumptive, and assumes that of positive evidence. And that which in the temporal courts passes for positive evidence, is the same degree of evidence with the plena probatio of the canonists and civilians. The suppletory oath does ex vi termini import, that there has been no one positive witness to the principal fact; and he that demands to be admitted to take his oath, does thereby admit that he has produced no conclusive evidence to the point in issue, and therefore pars ipsa fungitur officio testis.

There is no fixing the bounds of a sempilena probatio; for in many cases circumstances may overbear positive evidence, and then then if those circumstances should not be esteemed to amount to a semiplena probatio, when the positive evidence would exceed it; that would be to overthrow the positive evidence, by that which is not so strong.

Semiplena probatio therefore they concluded to be, that degree of evidence which would incline a reasonable man to either side of the question; and implies in the notion of it, that a positive witness has not deposed to the principal fact. And in this case though there was no positive conclusive evidence, but only such as depended on circumstances, as confessions, and letters, and unusual familiarities; yet the court thought it amounted to a semiplena probatio, and consequently that the dean of the Arches had done right, in admitting Mr. Williams to his suppletory oath; and therefore they dismissed the appeal with 150*l.* costs. N. B. Before this appeal upon the point of the gravamen, the Judge below had given sentence in principali in favour of the marriage, and the appealing upon this collateral point was only to protract the time. To obviate this the court of Delegates, instead of remitting the cause to the Arches, retained it ad instantiam partis, and 11 December 1718. heard it upon the merits, and confirmed the former sentence.

Dominus Rex versus Inhabitantes de Haughton.

UPON a special order the case was stated, That about five years since one John Evans was hired into the parish of Haughton from Ash Wednesday to Christmas; that at Christmas he went home to his father, who lived in another parish, took his clothes with him, and staid a week. That then he returned to Haughton, and hired himself to, and served the same master eleven months. Then he went home again to his father for a week, and returned, and was hired and served the same master other eleven months. That then by agreement between the master and him, and to avoid a settlement in Haughton, he went home to his father for a week, and afterwards served the same master for five weeks. And there being so many hirings and services, the justices adjudge the settlement in Haughton.

and services for

Denton, Reeve and Foley moved to quash this order, there being no actual hiring and service for a year, both which the statute of 3 & 4 W. & M. c. 11. requires. Mich. 9 Ann. Paroch. Rudfwicke v. Dunfole, Salk. 535. there was a hiring for a quarter of a year, and afterwards for half, and then for another half year, and a service for all; but this was held to be no settlement. Hil. 10 W. 3. Paroch. Overton v. Steventon (1), there was a hiring and service for half a year, then a hiring for a whole year, and a service for half; and this was held to be a hiring and service for a year, and the settlement in that parish. So Pas. 1 Geo. B. R. Rex v. Inhabitantes de Brightwell in Berks (2), there was a hiring and service from three weeks after Michaelmas 1712. to Michaelmas 1713. then a hiring to the same master for a year, and a service for eleven months, and these two hirings and services were held to gain the servant a settlement. Pas. 1 Geo. Paroch. Pepper Harrow v. Frencham (3), a hiring and service from 3 October to Michaelmas, and the servant at the master's request staid so long after as brought the year about; but this was held no settlement. *Mich. 12 Ann. same way. But in Cas. of Sett. and Rem. No. 80. p. 56. the fact "that the servant, at the master's request, staid so long after as brought the year about," is omitted, and it is said, that it was adjudged a settlement upon the ground that this was a fraudulent hiring to evade the statute.

ley (4), there was a hiring from 19 February to May-tide from thence to Lady-day, then to May-tide again, then to Lady-day, and then to the next May-tide; but there being no contract for a year, the court held it no settlement.

By 31 Geo. 2. c. 11. an apprentice bound by any deed, writing, or contract, being first legally stamped, gains a settlement, although it is not indented. See note to 2d. edition.

Hawkins contra. A servant, whilst such, is not removeable by any act, when a man is hired for a year in one parish, and serves the last quarter with his master, who removes into another parish, yet the servant gains a settlement, as has been adjudged, notwithstanding the act says, a hiring and service for a year in any parish. Mich. 1 Geo. Paroch. St. George v. St. Catherine, where the master removed at half a year's end. The statute says, apprentices bound out by indenture; and yet it has been extended to those bound out by deed poll. So the statute of Gloucester as to waste has been extended beyond the letter, rather than it should be evaded. In the present case it plainly appears, that this was a contrivance from the beginning to exempt this parish, by sending him away at eleven months end.

Foley. He needed not to go away, to avoid that which he could not have gained by staying.

C. J. This is plainly a design to save this parish, and I suppose all the parishioners have agreed never to hire any servant for a year. The ground of the statute relating to servants was that a person who had strength of body enough to hire himself out for a year, would when that year is expired be able to support himself; and the same reason holds in the case of apprentices. I am afraid we cannot interpose in this case, but it is proper the legislature should.

Pratt J. We must take the law as it stands, and follow former resolutions; for the sessions have ever since for the most part acted pursuant to those resolutions; and if we should do otherwise, it will introduce the utmost uncertainty and confusion; and little respect will be paid to our judgments if we overthrow that one day, which we resolved the day before. The statute expressly requires a hiring and service for a year; and it is admitted that if there was but one hiring and service for eleven months, that would give no settlement; and why any subsequent hirings of the same nature should gain him one, I cannot imagine. The reason of hiring servants at first for eleven months only is, because the servant may prove idle and good for nothing, and the master, as a prudent man ought to do, avoids bringing a charge upon the parish, till he has had experience of the diligence and fidelity of his servant: and when he has had eleven months experience of his diligence and fidelity, then if he hires him a second time, that is grounded upon his good service during the former hiring, but still the second hiring must be as full, as if the first hiring were out of the case, and if the first hiring were out of the case, then the second would stand in the same parity of reason with what I mentioned before, a single hiring and service for eleven months, which it is agreed will give no settlement.

If there was any fraud, the justices should have examined into it. We cannot judge of the fact, but the law upon the fact. See Burr. Sett. Ca. 60. accord. n. 2d. ed. [85]

so

(1) But if the fourth day be signable till after Monday. Studley Sunday, the bail bond is not af. v. Sturt, post. 782. Bullock v. Lincoln,

THE Sheriff returned to a feri facias, that the defendant is clericus beneficiatus nullum habens laicum feodum within his bailiwick; whereupon a feri facias de bonis ecclesiasticis issued, directed to the late bishop of Sarum in one cause, and in another between the same parties directed to the present bishop. And upon affidavit that the debts were levied thereupon, the court made a rule upon the executors of the first bishop, to return the first writ, and upon the now bishop to return the second.

THE vicar libels for tithes of turnips, and lays his title to them by prescription and endowment. The defendant pleads, that there is a rectory impropriate, and that time out of mind the rector has taken tithes of turnips. And last term he moved for a prohibition pro defectu triationis, and obtained a rule nisi. And now Reynolds Serjeant came to shew cause against a prohibition, for that turnips are a late improvement in Norfolk (where the matter arises) and quoted 2 Roll. Abr. 310. Z. 5. 1. 2. And where the matter is originally of ecclesiastical comuzance unmixed with any temporal ingredient, no prohibition lies. The vicar is prima facie intitled to nothing, unless he shews a right either by prescription or endowment. These endowments are of an ecclesiastical nature, and so is the extent of them. For anciently and until the statutes of 15 R. 2. c. 6. and 4 H. 4. c. 12. the ordinary endowed the vicarage at his discretion. In 2 Brownl. 36. it is said and agreed, that if there be a parsonage impropriate, and a vicarage endowed, and there be any difference between them, it shall be tried and determined by the ordinary. In Scaccario et in C. B. this prohibition has been denied.

York contra. That rule which has been laid down, will not be insisted upon now-a-days, for the clergy will not pretend to be exempted from the temporal jurisdiction merely because they are ecclesiasticks. But in this case both parties are not ecclesiasticks, for the libel is against the parishioner, and it lays a custom which is denied and must be tried; and that has always been good ground for a prohibition. We do not pray it for defect of jurisdiction, but want of trial of the prescription, which is what the vicar grounds himself upon in making his title to the tithes; and the question is not upon the endowment, though I admit the prescription supposes an endowment.

C. J. Though both parties are not ecclesiasticks, yet the thing in controversy belongs either to one ecclesiastick or another, for either the rector is intitled to the tithes or the vicar, and what matter is it to the parishioner who has them? for he can only pay them to one. This is properly a dispute what belongs to the vicar upon the endowment, and that evidence which will intitle him to a sentence below, will not enable him to recover here, and therefore I am against a prohibition. To which Porvys and Eyre Justices agreed. Et per Pratt J. If we should grant a prohibition in order to try the custom, and it should be found against the custom, yet that will not determine the question upon the endowment; and therefore we ought not to draw them out of that court, which may properly determine the whole matter. And besides in the spiritual court fifty years makes a prescription, though it will not here. The rule for a prohibition was discharged (1).

(1) In a suit by the vicar against the lessee of an impropriator of a rectory for the small tithes, and the hay tithes of the glebe, which he claimed by prescription and endowment. The court of B. R. inclined that a prohibition should go. Barton v. Hollis, Fitz. 78. Vide 6 Com. Dig. tit. Prohibition, (G. 6.) and the opinion of the Chief Baron himself there in point with the present case.

10. CB. 373.

THE plaintiff declares, that the defendant, in consideration the plaintiff would make him a set of sails worth 45 l. promised to pay so much for them upon request; and avers, that he made the said sails; and the defendant although often requested refuses to pay. Demurrer inde. And Brantbwayte Serjeant pro defendente argued, that this being a special contract, the plaintiff must shew a performance of all on his part, which he has not done; for he has not averred that he made the sails worth 45 l. and if they were not worth it, the defendant is not chargeable.

Secondly,

Secondly, The action being founded upon the breach of contract, there ought to be a special request laid. For this differs from the cases where there is a precedent debt or duty whereon to ground the promise, for there I admit the action is a request. 2 Cro. 183. The defendant, in consideration the plaintiff being an inn-keeper would entertain the defendant's commissioners, promised to pay for their lodging and diet upon request; and there being nothing but the general licet sapius requisit, judgment was arrested upon that distinction, between a collateral contract for a thing in fieri, and a precedent debt or duty. And to the same purpose is 2 Cro. 523. In 2 Saund. 32. Assumpsit on mutual promises to perform an award, or pay each other 40 l. upon request, and in an action for the 40 l. the declaration was held ill, because no request was alledged, and the former cases and differences were agreed. Here is no money to be paid till two things are done, neither of which appear, 1. the making the sails of such a value, and 2. a request to pay for them.

Yorke contra. In actions upon the case the plaintiff may lay it as he can prove it, and is not obliged to a general indebitatus assumpsit. The value is part of the description of the sails, and therefore when we aver we made the aforesaid sails, velaturas predictas, that takes in the whole description. As to the request, the licet sapius requisit is sufficient. But if not, yet the want of a special request ought to have been shewn for cause of demurrer. The cases in Croke can never be law, for they are after a verdict, when the court will intend a request proved, and so is Pop. 160.

Branthwayte replied. It is admitted that the value ought to be averred, and the only question now is, whether it be or not.

Predict will not be a sufficient averment. In Yelv. 26. Trespas for taking goods a personâ of the plaintiff, and judgment arrested for the insufficiency of averring the property. These cases as to the request being after a verdict, the argument holds a fortiori in this case, which is on a demurrer. The general request, as alledged, may be since the action brought, and this at most is but an executory promise.

Powys J. (absentibus Parker et Pratt) thought the predictas velaturas was sufficient. Et per Eyre J. I do not think the value need be alledged; but if it need, yet the predict takes it in, for if the value be part of the description, then it is averred that the plaintiff made such a set of sails as was agreed upon (that is) a set of sails which answers every part of the description.

Where notice or a request are by law necessary, there the general averment will not be sufficient; but it must be particularly set forth, that the court may judge whether the notice or request were sufficient. But in this case I take it no request was necessary, for on the making the sails the money immediately becomes due. If I promise a taylor, that in consideration he will make me a suit of cloaths, I will pay him so much; there needs no request, for as soon as he has done his part, there is a duty vested in him. And this differs from the cases where the payment is to be to a third person, or where an award directs a request.

Afterwards, the court being full, Brantbwayte mentioned Cro. Eliz. 773. 91. Hutt. 107. And Yorke quoted Yel. 66, 121. 3 Bulst. 258. 2 Cro. 639. And the former cases of 2 Cro. 183, 523. were denied per Eyre J. and judgment given for the plaintiff.

[90] Dominus Rex versus Inhabitantes de Ivinghoe in Com' Bucks.

Where there is an hiring for a year, and a service for part to a stranger, yet if there be no dissolution of the first contract it is a settlement.
1 Seff. Ca. p.
129. No. 121.
Cas. of Sett. and Rem. pl. 109.
p. 81. Fort.
317. S. C. by name of Joyford and Solebury.

ON a special order of sessions the case appeared to be, That one Nicholas Young, being legally settled in the parish of Cholesbury, was at Michaelmas 1715, hired into the parish of Ivinghoe by Joh Knight, to serve him as a shepherd till Michaelmas following. That he entered upon the service, and continued with Knight till Lady-day, who then paid him half a year's wages, and left the farm to one Smith, who entered and took all the stock and servants, and in harvest time took Young off from keeping sheep, and set him to harvest work, for which he paid him 5*s.* extraordinary, and at the year's end paid him the other half year's wages. That Knight when he left the farm never told Young he was no more his servant, nor were there any transactions between them two towards dissolving the contract; neither did Young ever make any new contract with Smith for the last half year. And the justices adjudge the settlement in Ivinghoe, where the hiring and service were.

Denton moved to quash the order. Because to make a settlement there must be both a continuance of the contract, and service; both which were broke off at the half year's end. Mich. 9 Anne Paroch' Rudswick et Dunsfole, Salk. 538. There was a hiring and service for a quarter of a year, then for half a year, and afterwards for another half year, all which were held to give no settlement.

Yorke. By 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 30. it is required, that the party continue in the same service for a year. There must be an identity of the service, it must appear to be the same master, which this is not, and here is an alteration of the wages. The court will not consider what is most for the benefit of the servant, but which which is the proper parish to be charged; it is all one to the servant, where he is settled.

Reeve contra. It being expressly stated, that there was no new contract, the first must be taken to have continuance all the year. And if Smith had not paid Young the last half year's wages, no doubt but as this case stands he might have come upon Knight for them. The ss. shew he was Knight's servant all along, for otherwise Smith had no occasion to give him that extraordinary pay. The statute does not require an identity of the contract, for Hil. 10 W. 3. Paroch' Overton et Steventon, (a) a hiring and service for half a year, and then a hiring for a whole year, and a service* for half, was held to gain a settlement. So Pasch. 1 Geo. B. R. Rex v. Inhabitantes de Brightwell in Com. Berks, there was a hiring and service from three weeks after Michaelmas 1712 to Michaelmas 1713, then a hiring to the same master for a year, and a service for eleven months; and this was held a good settlement. The statute of 3 & 4 W. & M. c. 11. says, that a binding and inhabitation shall gain a settlement, so that by the words a binding is required; and yet Trinity 13 W. 3. B. R. Rex v. Inhabitantes de Eccles in Com' Norf', it was held, that if the master to whom the binding was, assigns his apprentice over to another, a bare inhabitation forty days with the assignee gives a settlement. In this case there is a hiring and service for a year in the parish of Ivinghoe, and that is sufficient.

Lee. By 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 12. forty days inhabitation gave a settlement. But it being found, that diseased and disorderly persons often came into parishes and staid out the time, it was thought proper by the statutes of 3 & 4 & 8 & 9 W. 3. to require a hiring and service for a year. And this was thought a good remedy, because it was supposed no body would incur themselves with a sickly or disorderly person for a whole year, who perhaps would have dispensed with them for forty days. And it is not presumed, that a person having ability of body enough to serve a year, will become chargeable; and he is looked on as bringing so much substance into the parish. I agree the word same in the latter statute is a word of relation, but it will be satisfied by referring it to the same place. Those statutes have always had a liberal construction, as before 3 & 4 W. & M. c. 11. that bearing offices in a parish amounts to notice. Show. 12. So the statute says, any unmarried person having no child, and yet a person having a child which was grown up, and no incumbrance to him, was held to be within the statute (1). So Pasch. 10

(1) Anthony v. Cardigan, Fort. 302.

Anna, Regina v. Paroch' de Aldenham, and Mich. 1 Geo. St. Saviour's Southwark, marrying within the year was held no hindrance of the settlement (2). Salk. 527, 529.

Yorke. That case is within the very words, for the statute speaks only of persons unmarried at the time of the hiring.

C. J. The statute requires two things; a hiring, and a continuance in the same service for a year. There can be no doubt but that in this case there is a compleat and perfect hiring for a year; but the question turns upon the service. Half of it was actually a service to Knight, and the rest in fact was a service to Smith; but there being no new contract with Smith, nor any dissolution of the first contract with Knight; it seems considerable, whether the whole shall not be taken to be a service to Knight. As if I lend my servant to a neighbour for a week, or any longer time; and he goes accordingly, and does such work as my neighbour sets him about: yet all this while he is in my service, and may reasonably be said to be doing my business (3).

If the first contract be not discharged, it must have a continuance, and under it the servant is intitled to demand his wages of the first master. And the 5 s. given him by Smith is no argument to the contrary, no more than if in the case I put before, my neighbour had given my servant a gratuity for his extraordinary trouble. What agreement there was between Knight and Smith, non constat, but here is no act done by the servant that shews his consent to change his master. And therefore I take this to be a service for the whole year pursuant to the first contract, and consequently the settlement is at Ivinghoe, where the service was.

Powys J. The private reason that we went upon in The King v. the Inhabitants of Haughton, where it was held that several hirings and services for eleven months gained no settlement was, because if we should once get out of the statute, there would be no end, and by the same reason that we abated one day we might abate two, et sic in infinitum. I think in this case the settlement is in Ivinghoe.

Salk. 479.

Eyre J. And so do I. This is a contract for a year between Knight and Young, and not to be dissolved during the year without both their consents. There is actually no consent on one side, and but an implied consent on the other. It weighs nothing with me, that Smith paid the last half year's wages, for I look upon him only as a person to whom the servant was lent, and there is no doubt but that Young might have demanded the wages of Knight. The paying the 5*s.* is so far from being an argument that the contract was dissolved, that it is to me a strong evidence of its continuance; for when Smith goes to set him about harvest work, no says he, I was hired to be a shepherd, and had small wages accordingly; and thereupon the other agrees to give him 5*s.* an equivalent for the hardness of the work.

Fortescue J. The difficulty arises upon the word same, which may extend to master, parish, and business. And taking it in those senses, this case comes within the words of the statute; and there can be no doubt but that it comes within the reason of it, for he is no more likely to be chargeable now, than if he had actually served Knight all the year. Upon the reasons which have been given, I think, here is the same master, the same sort of service, in the same parish, and a continuance of the contract throughout the whole. The order was confirmed (4).

UPON a motion for a new trial, the judge certified the special matter in writing, and the court refused to hear any affidavits of what passed at the trial, looking upon the certificate of the judge, who was an indifferent person, to be of a much higher nature than the oath of the party interested, and therefore ordered the counsel to take the fact as it was stated by the certificate, and not argue about the fact, but the law upon the fact. And the question being, whether a particular matter offered in evidence was well over-ruled by the judge, the court said, that if he had rejected that which was good evidence, it would be ground for a new trial; but if the matter offered was not legal evidence, then the first verdict ought to stand. And as to that the fact was, that on an information in nature of a quo warranto the prosecutor produced in evidence a book which appeared to be only minutes of some corporate acts ten years ago, all written by the prosecutor's clerk; who was no officer of the corporation. And this being opposed by the other side, as having never been kept amongst, or esteemed as one of the corporation books, in which the entries were always made by the town clerk, and there being some suspicion that this book was not genuine, the Judge, before he admitted it to be read, required an account where it had been kept for these ten years, and whether any body had seen it before, which the prosecutor not being able to give him any satisfaction in, he rejected it. Et per Curiam, Corporation books are generally allowed to be given in evidence, when they have been publicly kept as such, and the entries made by the proper officer; not but that entries made by other persons may be good, if the town clerk be sick or refuses to attend, but then that must be made appear. Whoever produces a book, must establish it, before he delivers it in. We often make people, when they produce deeds, give an account where they have been kept, and how they came by them. Therefore we are of opinion, this evidence thus offered was well over-ruled, and consequently there must be no new trial (1).

Foley 199. S. C.

A Being legally settled in Boston, came into Horncastle as a certificate man; and the justices thinking the certificate not sufficient, made an order to remove him back to Boston. And now upon motion to quash the order, it appeared that the certificate was signed by the churchwardens or overseers, as 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 30. directs; and that it was attested by two as witnesses, who were justices of the peace. The statute requires it to be attested by two witnesses, and allowed by two justices of the peace. And Chesbyre insisted, that this was a better certificate than such a one as is mentioned in the statute, for the attestation of the signing it is only to satisfy the justices, that it is the hand of the parish officers; and nothing can be so satisfactory to them, as what they see. And it is not requisite, that there be four distinct persons, sons, two to attest, and two to allow; but the justices that allow the certificate may act in both capacities. To which the court agreed, when it appeared they took upon them to act both as witnesses and justices; but here it only appeared they subscribed as witnesses, for there are no words of allowance. If this should be held good, the justices may be drawn in to sign as witnesses, when perhaps they do not so much as know what the instrument is, and never imagined what they did would pass for an allowance. The certificate was held void, and the order confirmed.

Infant declares the uses of a fine to be suffered at full age, then he may declare other uses.

Survey, where evidence,

THE question in ejectment being parcel or not parcel, a survey was offered in evidence on the plaintiff's side, which was taken by one under whom the lessor claimed, wherein the lands in question were included. But this being an act to which the defendants were not privy, and consequently not bound, and it being dangerous, and tending to encourage people to take more than their own into a survey, the Chief Justice rejected it (1).

(1) It is laid down generally by Lord Chief Baron Gilbert, "that an old terrier or a survey of a manor, whether ecclesiastical or temporal, may be given in evidence, for there are no other ways of ascertaining the old tenures or boundaries." Law of Evid. 3 ed. 78. Bull. L. N. P. 248. But this opinion seems to relate with regard to terriers, to such as are signed, not only by the parson, but by the churchwardens and substantial inhabitants of the parish, or at least by the churchwardens, not being of the parson's nomination. And in respect of surveys, to such as are signed by the tenants of the manor, or appear to have been made at a court of survey. For then being of a PUBLIC NA-TURE, they cannot be supposed, framed, and attested to serve the private interest of any individual; upon which principle also court rolls, or at least parish books are admitted in evidence, when the rights of third persons are concerned. Bull. L. N. P. 247. Stead v. Heaton, 4 Term Rep. 690. But surveys, although of a PRIVATE NATURE, have been admitted in evidence where circumstances could be adduced to shew the improbability of their being taken to serve any interested purpose in the maker. Thus, where two manors were in the hands of the same person, and a survey was taken, and afterwards one of them was conveyed to another person, and after a long time there are disputes between the lords of the the two manors, this old survey was held to be evidence by Lord Holt. Bridgeman v. Jennings, 1 Ld. Raym. 734. So an old map of lands was allowed evidence when it came along with the writings, and agreed with the boundaries adjusted in an ancient purchase. Yates v. Harris, Hill. Aff. 1702. Gilb. Law of Evid. 3 ed. 78. But where a terrier or survey is not attended with such circumstances, and is the mere private memorial of the party for whom it is made, it seems only admissible as evidence against him. Vide, in addition to the present case, *Bull. AN order of two justices is quashed at sessions upon appeal, without saying, at the appeal of the party aggrieved. And this was objected, in order to quash the order of sessions, and compared to the case of a complaint that a man is likely to become chargeable, which has been held ill, because the complaint must be by the churchwardens and overseers. And the case of Rex v. Sir Thomas Putt. Inquisition at sessions coram A. et al' sociis suis, was held ill, for there must be two, and nothing is presumed in a limited jurisdiction. And the court here inclined to quash the order for this fault, till they were informed the precedents were most of them so, and for that reason and that only, as the C. J. declared, the order was confirmed. Telv. 126.

Waring versus Dewberry.

THE landlord having arrears of rent due to him dies intestate. The plaintiff in this action sues out execution on a recovery against the defendant who was the tenant, and levies the money by sale of the goods. Then administration of the intestate's goods is committed to A. who thereby became intitled to the arrears, and now moved for a rule to have one year's rent out of the levy money pursuant to the statute of 8 Anna, c. 17. And Robins urged, that though he was not administrator at the time of serving the execution, yet as soon as the administration is committed, it relates to the death of the intestate, so that he may bring trespass or trover for goods taken between the death of the intestate and the commission of the administration. 3 Lev. 35. 3 Mod. 276. Salk. 295. Sed tota curia prater Powys J. contra; for relations which are but fictions in law shall not divest any right vested in a stranger mesne between the intestate's death and the administration. The statute it is true was made for the benefit of landlords, and to prevent the tenant's setting up a sham execution to defeat him of the rent. He has still the same remedy that he had before, and if he will have the additional remedy, he must make himself capable of it, which the administrator here could not. He could not demand the rent; it not being certain he would be administrator, for the ordinary might refuse, and the sheriff is not obliged to wait and see if any body comes and demands the rent. He cannot take notice what arrears there are, but if the landlord comes and acquaints him with it, then and not till then is he obliged to see the year's rent satisfied before removal of the goods. If it should be otherwise, it would be in the power of him that is intitled to administration to defeat the plaintiff of his execution. For suppose he never takes administration, must the execution stand still; If the landlord himself had not demanded before removal, he had been too late. Here was no landlord at all, so that there could be no demand, and it is now too late to ask it.

On 8 Anna the landlord must demand, or the sheriff is not bound to secure the rent (1). Fort. 360. 3. C. Cited also by Strange. Gillb. Eq. Rep. 223.

BY an order of two justices John Chappell was removed from Mursley to Grandborough. Upon appeal to the quarter-sessions they state the case specially for the opinion of the court.

*That John Chappell before his marriage with Susanna his wife was settled in the parishes of Grandborough. That Sir John Fetherstone by indenture dated 24 September 1667, did demise and grant to Robert Eddin, his executors, &c. one cottage with the appurtenances of the yearly value of 30 s. in Mursley for ninety-nine years at 1 s. rent. That 3d August 1689 Eddin assigned to Goddin in trust for Mary his wife for life, and then to William Eddin his son for the residue of the term. That Robert, Mary and William died, and Susanna the wife of William as administratrix became intituled to the term, and May 11, 1709, in consideration of 15 s. demised to Nicholas Eymes the same cottage (except one bay of building being the South part thereof with a leastowe for an habitation for herself) for twenty-four years at a pepper-corn rent. That she lived in that part of the premises so reserved, and married the said John Chappell; and whether he is settled thereby in Mursley, was the question; and the sessions adjudge it no settlement, and confirmed the order of the two justices for his removal to Grandborough.

Denton now moved to quash both the orders, John Chappell being legally settled in Mursley. For where a man has an estate in any parish, he gains a settlement if he lives there. It has been often adjudged as to a freehold. Mich. 10 W. 3. Ryswick et Harrow, Salk. 524, And Pasch. 11 Anne. Harrow et Edgware,
(a) it was resolved in the case of a copyhold of a man's own for life, though but 25 s. yearly value.

(a) Fol. 257.

Darnall Serjeant. He must be settled in that parish where the estate of his wife lay and on which he inhabited. For he coming by marriage to that estate, does not come to inhabit under the circumstances mentioned in the act, liable to become chargeable, and so not subject to be removed. In that case of Ryswick and Harrow, Holt C. J. said, the terms not removeable and settled, are one and the same thing; because such a person is not within the authority of the justices. He that comes to an estate by descent, purchase, or marriage, is not a person that takes a tenement within the intent of the act.

Reeve contra. The wife has but the trust of a small part of a cottage, for the legal interest of the estate is in Godding (2). This is but an estate for years, and that has never been adjudged sufficient to give a settlement. A freehold has, and so has a copyhold, for that is by the custom become a durable estate. And the same argument may be used, if this holds, where he takes a lease for years not of 10 l. value at a rack rent.

Lee. The wife takes the term as administratrix, so he is only intitled in auter droit; and as it is under 10 l. per annum yearly value, and he is likely to become chargeable, and so may be removed. [99]

Curia. This not a case within the intent of the act, which was to prevent persons running up and down from one parish to another, till they become vagabonds. But a man who comes to settle upon his own, is not to be considered in that view; and be it for life or years, the law is the same. This is not a taking a tenement under 10 l. per annum, for the 1 s. is not reserved as a rent, but only an acknowledgement usually paid on long leases. The case of a copyhold is stronger than this, for that is but an estate at will. The way to make him chargeable, is to strip him of his own, for he may not be able to let it. The orders were quashed.

(2) But if the estate on which forms of conveyance there may the pauper resides is substantially be. Rex v. St. Michael's Bath, his own, it is sufficient, whatever Doug. 630.

THE sessions, reciting that Joseph Higgin was bound out by indenture as the statute requires, to John Parks, and being lame, and having the king's evil, and in the opinion of surgeons incurable: therefore the sessions discharge the master from his apprentice, and four justices sign the order.

Darnall Serjeant moved to confirm the order, because the master cannot now have the end of the binding, which was the service of his apprentice.

Sessions cannot discharge apprentice on account of sickness.

Caf. of Sett. and Rem. 1. pl. 117. p. 86. S. C.

3 Vin. Abr. 27. pl. 16. S. C. S. P.

Willes

Willas contra. The statute only empowers the justices to discharge for misbehaviour, and not for sickness. Besides, allowing they had a power to discharge, yet here they have not executed it as the statute requires; for it is not inrolled; neither is it mentioned to be by a justice of the quorum. There must be four justices, one of the quorum (1).

Both exceptions to the form were held good. But the court quashed the order as to the substance, for the master takes him for better and worse, and is to provide for him in sickness and in health.

Now he moved for a Superfedeas to that escape warrant, the contempt not being such an one as is within 1 Anna, c. 6. which speaks only of contempts for not performing an order, which Payne the son was not obliged to do. Et per Curiam: the father would have been within the act, but the son is not. This statute is not to be extended by equity, because it is against the liberty of the subject, and this is a new power given only in particular cases; this is not one of them, and therefore not within the statute. Whereupon the warrant was superseded, and the marshal directed to go to Newgate and take him into his custody again, as was done in Sir Thomas Tippin's case.

Depositions taken before, no evidence after witness becomes interested. Tilley's case reported also 2 Ld. Raym. 1008.

ON an issue out of Chancery one of the witnesses, after his depositions taken, became interested, and confessing it now upon a voire dire he was rejected. Then it was desired to read his depositions as if he was dead; and a case was urged, where in Chancery a witness was made executor and revived the suit, and was read at the hearing. But the Chief Justice remembered the case in Salk. 286. which was the resolution of two courts on a trial at bar; and so he refused to hear the depositions (1).

(1) The reason relied upon in Tilley's case is, "that the depositions being in perpetuam rei memoriam the intent of them was to perpetuate testimony in case the witnesses died, and therefore they could not be read in any case between other parties till after the death of the witness, who ought to appear and give evidence so long as he lived; much less can they be read where the witness is himself a party." But in Holcroft v. Smith, where a witness became interested after his deposition had been taken in chief, the court of C. B. refused to permit it to be read, upon the ground that he was still living. 1 Eq. Ca. Abr. pl. 5. 224. But the practice of courts of equity is contrary. Vide the opinion of the Lord Keeper in Holcroft v. Smith, Gosse v. Tracy, 2 Vern. 699. 1 P. Wms. 287. S. C. Hawes v. Hand, 2 Atk. 615. Glyn v. The Bank of England, 2 Vex. 42. Neither do courts of law, in all cases, adhere strictly to the principle of refusing to admit depositions in evidence, when the witness is still living; for they may be read when the witness is beyond the reach of judicial process. Lord Altham v. Lord Anglesey, Gilb. Cas. in Eq. 16. 11 Mod. 210. S. C. Or where he can not be found, or is sick and unable to attend. Fry v. Wood, 1 Atk. 445. Gilb. Law of Evid. 3 ed. 61. *Bull. L. N. After

After the point had been twice spoken to in B. R. it was adjourned propter difficultatem to be argued before all the Judges of England, who being this term assembled at Serjeants-inn, the following arguments were made.

Denton. New trials can only be granted by the superior courts, [102] and not by inferior ones. Trials at the assizes are subordinate trials, and under the inspection of the superior court out of which the record issues. In Stiles 466. which was the first new trial that ever was granted, it was said by Glynne, that the court in these cases has a judicial but not an arbitrary discretion. I must agree that generally no new trial shall be granted after a trial at bar, but yet in the scire facias against Beudley, Trin. 11 Anna, which was brought to the bar, and the jury refused to find a special verdict, the court ordered a new trial. 1 Will Rep. 207.

It is objected, that this is a criminal proceeding. But we say, that since 9 Anna, c. 20. it has a mixture of civil. The relator is liable to costs, and the statutes of jeofailes extend to it. And why should not this be considered in the same view as Mandamus's, upon which new trials are granted frequently. The original writ of quo warranto was merely civil. Old N. B. 107. Sid. 54, 86. 2 Inst. 282. Rastal 540. Old Ent. 133, 134. and upon that the franchise, which was a civil right, might be seized. Formerly indeed upon an information in the nature of a quo warranto the party could only be punished for the usurpation. Yel. 190. Cro. Jac. 260. 1 Bulst. 54. *Co. These rights are of a high nature, and it would be a great inconvenience, to tie them up stricter than actions. Suppose the jury should refuse to find a special verdict, or the Judge should mistake the law; will there not be a failure of justice, if a new trial cannot be had? Mich. 2 Geo. *Rex v. Pengelly Serjeant. This is a discretionary question, wherein no defect of power is to be supposed. The defendant cannot plead Not guilty. 2 Inst. 282. 2 Co. 24. b. 28. b. Hardr. 423. *Cro. trover; and in these cases new trials are every day granted. Co. Ent. 390. And in those cases there is a fine.

It will be no objection that the year is expired; for this prosecution was commenced within the year, and the judgment must be the same, because it is to avoid all mesne acts. Co. Ent. 527, 530. Trin. 8 Ann. Regina v. Barber. That was an information of this nature against the defendant, who claimed to be burgess of Thetford. There was judgment by default, and then came a pardon, which was held only to discharge the fine, but not the judgment of ouster. The fine here will be salvo contentemento, according to Magna Charta, and the bill of rights. Since the statute this has all the incidents of a civil prosecution, the commencement only excepted. Before the King only could have it, but now any private person may at peril of costs. If no new trial be granted, the crown will be in a worse condition than the subject: for here the verdict will be final, and no new information can be had.

Earl Serjeant contra. The only question is, whether this be a criminal or a civil prosecution. For on the one hand, if it be of a civil nature, I must agree a new trial may be granted: and on the other hand, it must be admitted, that if this be merely criminal, no new trial can be had.

It is not denied, but that at common law this information was a criminal proceeding; whether the statute has altered the nature of it is the doubt. We think it remains as it did before. The consequence of it is still fine and imprisonment, with this addition, that judgment of ouster may be given, which could not before; and because the statute has made it more penal than it was at common law, therefore say they it is now changed from a criminal to a civil nature. This is such an inference, as I cannot see into the reason of. But say they, the statutes of jeofails do not extend to criminal proceedings, but they extend to this; ergo this is not a criminal proceeding. I desire to know whether it will be pretended, that they would have extended to this case without the express provision of the statute. Certainly they would not. And the Parliament was aware of that, and therefore added that clause. The first new trial is Stiles 448. and there the witness died of an apoplexy. Lord Townsend v. Dr. Hughes in C. B. 2 Mod. 150. In scandalum magnatum a new trial was denied. Cannot the King release, pardon, or stop this prosecution? Surely he may. In capital cases the defendant may plead autre fait acquit; so careful is our law, that the subject shall never be bore down by the weight of the crown. 1 Sid. 405. 2 Keb. 403, 765. 1 Lev. 9. 1 Keb. 124. are cases where the defendant ant was convicted, and in favorem libertatis a new trial may be granted. Mich. 4 W. & M. Rex v. Davis, in an information for a riot a new trial was denied. Mich. 7 W. 3. Smith v. Frampton, Salk. 644. in an action for negligently keeping his fire, wherein the defendant was acquitted, it was refused to be tried again. Indeed Pas. 4 Jac. 2. Rex v. Simpson et al, information for seditious words, after acquittal a new trial was granted, but whoever observes the time that case happened, and that it was denied for law by Holt in Davis's case before cited, will think it of little weight. Pas. 2 W. & M. Dr. Salmon's case, the defendant was convicted of perjury, and had a new trial; but the court said it would have been otherwise if he had been acquitted. Pas. 5 Ann. Regina v. Clarke, in an indictment for a nuisance, after acquittal the court denied a new trial, till the defendant came in and consented. It was granted in Sir Jacob Banks's case, only because he had carried it down by proviso, which could not be against the crown. Mich. 3 Ann. Hartness v. Sir J. Barrington, after the defendant had been acquitted of an assault, a new trial was denied. So Salk. 646. after acquittal for a libel. 1 Show. 356.

In this case the office is determined, so there can only be a fine and imprisonment. And if one new trial may be had, the same reason will hold for a second and a third, and no body can say where it will stop. It may happen that the defendant may be convicted on a second trial for want of that evidence which acquitted him before. The case of Bewdley was only a scire facias, which is a proceeding purely civil. Salk. 652.

Yorke. This question is of far greater consequence to the subject than the crown. It consists of two parts:

1. Whether a new trial can be granted in any of those cases.
2. Whether there be any particular circumstances in this case, to distinguish it from the general ones, and so induce the court to refuse it.

First, When new trials first came in, they introduced a great alteration. The case of Fenwick v. Holt (which was an information, and not an indictment as some of the books say) is full in point; and the court said they could not do it without altering the law, which shews there is not a discretionary power. This is the rule in criminal cases, which I shall shew this to be. At common law usurpations were a crime, a contempt to the King, and an oppression of the subject. A quo warranto agit in rem, an information in nature of a quo warranto in personam. The first charges a crime, and the other a user of the franchise. This is all of the crown side, which the civil rights of the crown are not, as quare impedit, which are of the plea side. The replication concludes, petit quod convincatur; and so is Co. Ent. tit. quo warranto; now conviction implies crime. This cannot be called an action, the prosecutor neither demands nor recovers any thing, et actio nil aliud est quam jus prosequendi in judicio quod sibi debetur.

When proceedings in eyre dropt, then informations came in, which are of a higher nature than the proceedings in eyre. 2 Inst. 282, 498.

The statute 9 Ann. takes notice of this as a criminal proceeding: as for the costs, they are collateral, and cannot change the nature of it. The 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 18. gives costs in perjury, where presented as a misdemeanor by information; and can any one say it is now become a civil prosecution? In the case of Strode v. Palmer it was held, that mandamus's would not come within the description of actions, so as error might lie in the Exchequer Chamber.

REPLEVIN for taking the plaintiff's goods and chattels in the parish of St. Botolph Aldgate in his shop there. The defendant avows the taking by distress for a fee-farm rent, and says, that King James the First by letters patent dated 24 May, 7th of his reign, dedit et concessit the premises (inter alia) to the grantees therein named, habendum to them and their heirs for ever, tenendum of him and his successors, as of his manor of East Greenwich by fealty only, in free and common soccage, and not in capite or by knights service, reddendum to the King and his successors the yearly rent of 22*l.* in lieu of all rents, services and demands issuing out of the premises. That King James being so seised of this rent in right of his crown, by letters patent, 19 January, 9th of his reign, gave the said rent and services to Lawrence Whitaker and Henry Price, and their heirs. That Henry Price died, and Whitaker survived and was sole seised, and made his will, from whence and from a great many mesne conveyances (as a fine to the use of the conusee, and a devise by him) the avowant brings down a title to himself; and then goes on and says, that he was seised in fee of this rent, and avows the taking for arrears, and prays judgment and a return. To this the plaintiff has demurred, and the avowant has joined in demurrer.

Attornment, where necessary.

This cause was formerly spoke to at large, and the opinion of the court with the avowant. Only they reserved one point to be further spoke to, whether the avowry is ill for want of alledging an attornment of the terretenant upon the fine levied of the rent in question by James Bewley and his wife to William Buckeridge, under a devise from whom the avowant claims.

Yorke pro querente argued, that the avowry is ill, which depends on two considerations:

1. Whether William Buckeridge the conusee, who is alledged to be seised by virtue of this fine, was in at common law, or by the statute of uses. For on the one hand it is plain, that if he was in at common law, though the rent passed by the fine, yet it did not enable him to distrain without attornment; and on the other hand it is as plain, that if he was in by the statute of uses, then no attornment was necessary.

2. Supposing he was in at common law, whether here is any other matter appearing upon this avowry subsequent to the fine, which has cured this defect, and taken away the necessity of attornment as to the avowant.

As to the first it is to be observed, that this is a fine levied to the conusee and his heirs, and it enures by way of grant of this rent, and after it is set out, there comes an averment that it was to such use.

If the matter had rested upon the words of the concord itself, there would have been no doubt but he would have taken at common law; for it is a common law conveyance of the rent to him, and he must have been taken to have both the legal estate, and the use, which is the profitable interest, unless something further had appeared to control that intendment, and give it a contrary construction. So it was held in the case of Lord Anglesey v. Altham, Paf. 8 W. 3. B. R. Salk. 676. There a fine was levied and afterward a common recovery suffered, wherein the conusee of the fine was tenant; and there being no deed to lead the uses, it was objected, that the use of the fine resulted to the conusor. But the court held, that it should be intended to the use of the conusee, and in pleading need not be averred; and so is Co. Ent. 114, 273. Plow. 477. But if it were to the use of the feoffor or conusor, then it must be averred.

Shortridge v. Lamplugh, Mich. 1 Ann. B. R. the question was upon pleading a conveyance by lease and release, where no consideration was shewn, nor express use averred, whether it should be taken to go by way of resulting use to the releffor; but the court held, it should not unless it were expressly shewn, but that the estate and use vested in the releffee.

If this be the proper construction upon the face of the fine, then the subsequent averment, that it was to the use of the conusee and his heirs, will not alter the case, nor make him to be seised by force of the statute of uses. For there is no room for the operation of that statute, nor can it have any effect which the common law could not fully have without it.

Before the statute of uses, interests in lands fell under the consideration of the legal estate, which was the possession; and the use, which was barely a trust, an equitable right to receive the profits. These might subsist in different persons, and he who had the use had no remedy but in Chancery, But on a gift to Y. S. and his heirs, he would have had both the possession and the use; for he could not be said to be a trustee for himself, but the use would have merged in the possession.

Thus it stood at common law when the 27 H. 8. c. 10. was made; and that only operated, where the possession and use were divided and drew the possession to the use, and not the use to the possession. But as to persons who had both the possession and the use, as they needed not the help of the statute, so it left them where it found them.

The result of this is, that no person can be said to be in by the statute of uses, but he who before would have only had the trust; but in this case the conusee would have had both the legal estate and the use, and therefore he cannot be seised by the statute of uses. And this distinction is warranted by the authorities. 2 Roll. Abr. 780. pl. 3. 2 And. 15. Salk. 90. And in Co. Litt. 309. b. it is said that if a fine be levied of a feignory to another to the use of a third person and his heirs, he and his heirs shall distrain without attornment, because he is in by the statute of uses. By which it appears, that it being to the use of a third person, that makes him in by the statute of uses.

N. B. Where the fine is to A. and his heirs, to the use of A. and B. in fee. They are both in by the statute of Uses. Hut. 112.

2. Supposing the conusee in at common law, and that he would have wanted an attornment to enable him to distrain; whether any other matter appears, to have cured the want of it as to the avowant.

It has been insisted, that the conusee devised it by his will under which the avowant claims, and that attornment is not necessary on a devise.

This will be answered by considering the nature and reason of attornment. An attornment is the agreement of the tenant to the lord's conveyance of the feignory to another hand. Co. Litt. 309. a. The reason is, that by the common law there ought to be a privity, that the tenant may know who to pay his rent to, and whose is a lawful or a tortious distress. Vaugh. 39. And this privity is originally created by the tenant's accepting the tenancy.

Attornment, what.

But then the lord could not by his own act alone subject the tenant to the distress of another; and therefore if he granted away the feignory, the privity was destroyed, till the tenant had attorned by his voluntary agreement, or was forced to it by a quid juris clamat, or a per que servitia, against which he might have his proper defence. And this privity was necessary to be continued on through every conveyance. Yelv. 135.

And

And attornment was of such necessity, that by a grant in pais nothing passed without it, though by a fine indeed such things as lay in prendre passed, but not such as subsisted in jure tantum, as a privity to distrain. Co. Litt. 320. a.

This was the case of him who came in by the act of the party only, but not where he came in by act of law, as the heir by descent, tenants in dower, courtesy, statute-merchant, or elegit, devise, or lord by escheat. The ground for all this is, that they had no means to compel attornment, and 6 Co. 68. a. my Lord Coke gives this rule, Quod remedio destituitur, re ipsa valet, si culpa absit. So that he who would distrain without attornment, must stand clear of all laches, which this conusee does not, for he has spent his time of bringing a quid juris clamat or a per qua servitia, which must be before the ingrossment of the fine. Bro. Quid juris clamat, 355. F. N. B. on the writ of covenant to levy a fine. Plowd. 431. b. Pop. 63.

And as the conusee shall not distrain, so his devisee shall not, for nemo potest plus juris ad alium transferre quam in ipso est. The bargainee of this conusee could not distrain, though he would come in by the statute of uses. Co. Litt. 309. b. 5 Co. 13. a. The reason of which is, that though the statute supplies such a defect in the bargainee's title, yet it meddles not with the bargainor's. And besides, there is an interruption of the privity, which ought to have been handed down through all the grants. Cro. Eliz. 832, 354. Ow. 23.

A devisee cannot be in a better condition than a bargainee by deed inrolled. I agree an attornment is not necessary to a devise; and the reason given upon Litt. § 586. is, that the tenant shall not have it in his power, to frustrate the will. But here, requiring an attornment doth not give the tenant that power, it only puts it in the power of the devisor to defeat his own devise by his own laches.

In Cro. Eliz. 354. the case of a lord by escheat and a devisee are coupled together, but surely they stand upon different reasons. In the case of an escheat the privity continues, for the tenant comes in mediately subject to the superior lord, whose title is paramount to the tenant's, which a devisee's is not, for he comes in under the title of the devisor, and is not a person to whom the tenant made himself subject either mediately or immediately.

It was objected, that this was but matter of form, and should have been shewn for cause of demurrer. But I answer, that this is a necessary circumstance to give a power to distrain, and is here the very merits of the cause.
is

It was said, a verdict would have cured this defect, but I deny that, for by the fine the thing granted passes without attornment, and the jury may find concessit without it. Though in a grant by deed I agree a verdict would have helped it; because there nothing passes till attornment. Raym. 487.

Squib contra. I agree the conusee is in at common law, and that where the use passes to the same person, the statute has no relation. Seignories were at first instituted on a military account; and therefore attornment was brought in, that the tenant might not be obliged to serve under a stranger in the wars.

Though the conusee could not distrain without attornment, because he could compel it by a quid juris clamât, per quæ servitia, or quem redditum reddit, yet we are in the case of a devisee, who has no means to compel attornment, and that is the reason why a devisee may distrain without it. Litt. § 586. 1 Inst. 322. One that claims under letters patent may, and so may any body to whom no laches can be imputed. 6 Co. 68. 5 Co. 113. 39 H. 6. 24. Bro. Attorn. 29. 5 H. 7. 19. Lands devised from the heir vest before agreement, et interest republicæ suprema hominum testamenta rata haberi.

But admitting attornment ought to have been set out; then I insist, that it appears sufficiently upon this record, and that an attornment is implicitly averred. For if attornment be necessary, then he could not be seised by force of the fine, and it is said quod virtute inde the conusee seisitus fuit of the rent; neither can that part of the avowry be true, which says, that the plaintiff became onerat with the payment of the rent to the avowant, which he could not be, unless the avowant had a title to distrain, and he could have no title without attornment.

But even admitting that attornment was necessary, and that none appears upon this record; yet the want of it should be shewn for cause of demurrer, for it is but a circumstance and matter of form, since the act for the amendment of the law; and there appears sufficient for the judges to give judgment according to the very right of the cause.

Yorke replied. The tenant might defend himself in a per quæ servitia; and to give the devisee a power to distrain, where the deviser had not, is to oust the tenant of his defence. Suppose the conusee had devised it immediately and died, would not there have have been a new lord put upon the tenant without his privity or consent? I agree, in an action of debt for this rent, the attornment would have been but a circumstance; for the rent passed by the fine, but not a power to distrain for it. And as to what is said about seisitus and onerat, I admit it to be true, that he was seised of the rent by force of the fine only, but had no power to distrain. Adjournatur; and in a few days

Pratt C. J. delivered the resolution of the court. This case is now reduced to a single point, whether it was necessary for the avowant to set out an attornment upon the fine to William Buckeridge, under a devisee from whom he claims. We are all of opinion, that for this fault the avowry is ill. It seemed to be given up at the bar, and therefore I shall but lightly touch upon it, that the conusee was in at common law. The fine is a common law conveyance, by which both the legal estate and the use would have passed to the conusee, without any declaration of uses, according to the case of lord Anglesea v. Altham; and therefore the uses need not have been averred, it is but expressio eorum qua tacite insunt; whereas if it had been to the use of a third person, they must have been averred, in order to control the general operation which the fine would otherwise have had. This conusee did not want the help of the statute, and therefore it meddles not with him, but leaves him in at common law. 2 Roll. Abr. 780. pl. 3. 2 And. 15. Salk. 90. Co. Litt. 309. b.

Since he is in at common law, it is not disputed, but that attornment was necessary to enable him to distrain; but the avowant says, he is in the case of a devisee, and on a devise no attornment is necessary. This is true, that generally a devisee shall distrain without attornment, but then his devisor must have been enabled. If he had not that power, he could not transfer it, according to the rule in Sir Moyle Finch's case, Nemo potest plus juris ad alium transferrre quam in ipso est. This rule holds in all sciences, in logick Nil dat quod in se non habet; a bargainee has no more privileges than his bargainor, and of the two, he is to be favoured before the devisee. 5 Co. 113.

[112] The case of a devisee and lord by escheat are unskillfully coupled together in Cro. Eliz. 354. as was mentioned at the bar; and though in the latter end of that case there falls an expression obiter, which seems to make for the avowant; yet that can have no weight; it is tenderly said, and is directly contrary to the principal case. There is no doubt but the lord by escheat may distrain without attornment, for he claims by title paramount, and the old privity revives. Mallorie's case, 5 Co.

And

And as we think it necessary, an attornment should be set out; so we are likewise of opinion, that none appears upon this record. The conusee was seifitus, and the tenant averat by the fine only; but that passed no power to distrain. If this had been by deed, an argument might have been drawn from those words, because there nothing would have passed before attornment. We think likewise, that this is matter of substance, and so the avowry is ill on a general demurrer (1).

Reeve prayed to discontinue, because the avowant is as an actor. Sed per Curiam: It is the plaintiff's suit, and how can one man discontinue another's suit. Judicium pro quer.

Dominus Rex versus Guardianos ecclesiæ de Thame in com'
Oxon'.

On a mandamus to restore an officer who is in at pleasure only, it is a good return to say it was their pleasure to remove him, and in such case a summons is not necessary.
2 Str. 897.

MANDAMUS directed to the churchwardens of the parish of Thame, to restore John Williams to the office of sexton there.

They return, That the parish of Thame is an ancient parish, and that for time immemorial there has been a church, with churchwardens, and a sexton, eligible by the churchwardens and parishioners, or the major part of them, for that purpose at a day and place prefixed assembled; which person so elected was to continue in at the pleasure of the electors, and was always amoveable by the major part in form aforesaid assembled. That 1 May 1703. John Williams was elected sexton, and continued in the office till 31st of July 1717. upon which day the churchwardens and parishioners being duly assembled, ad continuandum vel amovendum the said John Williams, he at such assembly was by the churchwardens and major part of the parishioners removed from his said office, et ea de causa they cannot restore him.

Denton argued, that the return was insufficient. This is not a case within the mandamus act, so as we might traverse the return; and therefore it must be certain to every intent. It must answer all the suggestions of the writ, which this return does not: we say that we were debite electi prefecti et admissi. into this office: they answer to the electi and prefecti, but not to the admission: for though that may be implicitly taken to be answered, yet returns by implication, and such as are argumentative only, are not good. Raym. 365, 153, 431. 1 Sid. 286. 2 Jones 177. The cases of 2 Sid. 49, 79. 1 Vent. 77, 82. Raym. 188. 1 Sid. 461. 2 Keb. 641. will be objected to me; but I give them this answer, That they were upon letters patent, where the appointment was only durante bene placito; but we are here in the case of a custom, which is more unconfined; and 2 Cro. 540. a custom to remove a man from his freehold was held void. It does not appear the party was heard, or that the parish is supplied with another officer.

Torke contra. Wherever an officer appears to be in only at pleasure of the electors, it is sufficient to shew a determination of their will (1) 1 Lev. 291. 1 Vent. 77, 88. 2 Keb. 641. And those cases being of a grant, the argument is stronger in this case; for many things are good by custom, which are not so by grant. Where the power is to remove without cause, no cause of removal need be returned. And for this reason also no summons or hearing of the party is requisite, for he is not removed for any crime. And whether the office is filled up or not is nothing to this man, nor can better his title a whit. The admission is not the point of the writ; but if it were, yet the elect et prefect is a full answer. He could not be prefectus, unless he was in possession of the office: so that when we shew him in possession, that necessarily implies a previous admission.

(1) Rex v. Major' de Canterbury, post. 674.

No mandamus lies for an officer at will. 2 Lev. 18. Salk. 428, 432. There appeared to be a power of removal at pleasure, but because the removal was for faults in his office, and not in pursuance of that power, a peremptory mandamus went: but it was held, that it had been good, if they had relied only upon their power.

The court held the return good. Et per Pratt C. J. The admission need not be answered, though it is fully done by prefect; nor does there need any summons, for the reason mentioned. Et per Powys J. a charter cannot hinder a man from setting up a trade without apprenticeship, but a custom may. Et per Fortescue J. a sexton is called ostiarius: we ought not to grant a mandamus, without a certificate that the sexton was chosen for life. If he were removed for a crime, a summons is requisite according to natural justice; but the present case is a removal for what the party cannot gainsay.

Henderson versus Williamson.

DEBT upon a bond, conditioned to perform the award of J. S. so as it be made in writing under his hand and seal by such a day ready to be delivered to the parties. The defendant after oyer pleads nul award fait. The plaintiff replies, that the arbitrator before the day made his award in writing, which is set out, and a breach assigned. And to this replication the defendant demurs generally. And Comyns Serjeant objected, that it did not appear to be under the hand and seal of the arbitrator, as the submission requires. Bulst. 110. 1 *Roll. Where the first traverse is immaterial, there may be a traverse upon it. Lill. Ent. 523. Fort. 349. Bro. P. C. 98. S. C.

THE plaintiff declares in prohibition, setting forth that the city of London is an ancient city incorporated by the name of mayor, commonalty and citizens of the city of London, and that time out of mind there has been a common council consisting of the mayor, aldermen and certain citizens to the number of 250, elected within their respective wards yearly upon St. Thomas's day at the wardmote: that there have been usally twelve chosen for the Tower ward, and that the plaintiff on St. Thomas's day last, being a citizen and freeman inhabiting in that ward, was at a wardmote holden before the alderman duly elected and admitted a common council man for the year ensuing: but the defendants, in order to oppress him, 6 February, 4 Geo. did deliver a petition to the court of common council, complaining of an undue election, and suggesting that they themselves were chosen; whereas the plaintiff avers, the common council had no jurisdiction to examine the validity of of such election, but the same belongs to the court of the mayor and aldermen; and notwithstanding the plaintiff offered to prove the same, yet the defendants proceed against him, and concludes with averring the contempt. The defendants deny the contempt, et quicquid, &c. et pro consultatione habenda they admit the constitution, and manner of election; but then they say, That the mayor, aldermen and common council, time out of mind have had the cognizance and authority of hearing and determining the election of common council men: that on

on St. Thomas's day the defendants were duly chosen, but the plaintiff and one Jeffes pretending a right, intruded themselves into the said office, whereupon the defendants exhibited their petition to the common council, prout eis bene licuit, absque hoc that the jurisdiction is in the court of the mayor and aldermen. The plaintiff, protestando that the court of mayor and aldermen have a jurisdiction, for plea says the common council have it not: and concludes to the country. To this replication the defendants demur, and shew for cause, that the replication is a departure, and that the plaintiff ought to have taken issue on the traverse, and not answered the matter of it barely by way of inducement. The plaintiff joins in demurrer. [118]

Darnall Serjeant pro defendantis. The plaintiff should have taken issue upon our traverse, and not meddled with the inducement to it. Cro. Car. 105. 2 Mod. 183. He shall maintain matter alleged by him, and denied by the other side, and not go over to matters dehors and collateral, arising only out of the inducement to the other's plea. Vaugh. 69. 2 Mod. 84. He shall not desert his own title, and recover upon a defect in the defendant's. It is not enough for him to destroy my title, but he must go farther, and establish his own: if he does not he can never recover, for melior est conditio possidentis. Hob. 101. He that prays a prohibition, must prove his suggestion, as on modus's and citations out of the diocese. He that pleads in abatement, must give the plaintiff a better writ: therefore when they say we have applied to an improper court, ought they not to shew us which is the proper one? and can that be determined, unless it be put in issue?

Whitaker Serjeant contra. This is a prohibition pro defectu jurisdictionis, and not barely pro defectu tractionis. Here both plaintiff and defendant are actors, the one sues for damages by being drawn into an improper court; and the other labours for a consultation, and for that purpose must intitle the court wherein he sues to jurisdiction. Plow. 469. a. Dy. 170, 171. 2 H. 4. 9, 10. For the only point is, whether or no the defendant has sued the plaintiff in a court that can and ought to determine the matter. The traverse is immaterial: we say the court of common council has no jurisdiction, and is it any answer to say the court of aldermen have none? We might safely have demurred, but we chose to waive that, in order to bring the right to trial. And though generally a traverse upon a traverse is not allowed, yet that rule does not hold in all cases. 1 Inst. 282. b. Cro. El. 99. Mo. 429. Cro. El. 407. 2 Cro. 372. Pop. 101. 1 Sand. 22. This is not like the case of a quare impedit, which has been mentioned, for there the plaintiff must make a title, in order to have a writ to the bishop.

Darnall replied. Suppose we had demurred to the declaration, and it had been held naught; should not we have had a consultation, without making out a title? They that take a cause from one court, must shew a jurisdiction in another: they say we have applied wrong, why? Because you should have gone to the court of aldermen, so that that's the point, whether the court of aldermen have the right.

[119] C. J. I did not expect to have heard an argument in so plain a case as this. The plaintiff says he is sued in the common council for a matter whereof the cognizance is only in the court of aldermen: consider now what is the ground of our sending a prohibition; it is not because the court of aldermen have a right, but because the common council has none, and therefore the traverse, which would avoid trying the right of the common council, and bring that of the court of aldermen in question, is immaterial. For suppose they had gone to issue upon that, and it had been found that the court of aldermen had no jurisdiction; yet that had not established the right of the common council, so as to intitle the defendants to a consultation. Whether they shall have one or not, depends upon the right which the common council has to determine this matter; and if they have none, I am sure we ought not to remit this cause to them, though the court of aldermen should fail of establishing their right. Though the plaintiff might have demurred, yet he was at liberty to go on to try the right. The cases where a plaintiff must recover upon his own strength, do not at all govern this; for if the common council have usurped a jurisdiction, which they have not; the plaintiff might have had a prohibition, without setting out where the right was. In the case of a modus it is otherwise indeed, because there the court below has originally a jurisdiction, which the other comes to overthrow by matter ex post facto. For these reasons I am of opinion, the prohibition ought to stand. To all which Powys J. agreed. Et per Eyre J. The plaintiff in overthrowing the jurisdiction of the common council has no need to set up another in opposition it. Where the first traverse is immaterial, that is, where it will not put the proper point in issue, there may be a traverse upon that traverse (1).

Fortescue J. The defendant is properly the actor, because he must make title to the jurisdiction in which he sues; and whether

(1) Vide Rex v. Archbishop of Armagh and Nathaniel Whaley, which was reversed in Cam. Scacc. upon this ground. 2 H. Black. post. 837. The Mayor of Orford 184. 5 Term Rep. 367.
v. Richardson, 4 Term Rep. 438.

that court has jurisdiction, is the only matter issuable; and not whether the plaintiff has alleged it properly elsewhere. The case of a quare impedit is intirely different from this case: there the plaintiff, as here the defendant, must recover upon his own strength, one his writ to the bishop, and the other a consultation. But the defendant there, and so the plaintiff here, needs make no title. If the right of the court of aldermen had been in issue, consider what would have followed. If their right had been established, it is no consequence that the common council have none, for there may be concurrent jurisdictions. If it had been found they had no right, does it follow that it is in the common council? That could not have intitled the defendants to a consultation. Judicium pro quer'.

Dominus Rex versus Grant, Majorem de Taunton in Com' [120]
Somerfet'.

UPON an affidavit, that the defendant at the time of taking the oath of office did not take the declaration required by the corporation act of the 13 Car. 2. against the solemn league and covenant, a rule was made, that he should shew cause why an information in the nature of a quo warranto should not go against him. And upon shewing cause :

Quere, Whether there remains any obligation at this day for officers of corporations do make the declaration against the solemn league and covenant.

Chefbyre Serjeant before he came to the principal matter made two previous points. 1. That no private person could apply for this information; and, 2. That in case he might, the affidavit was not sufficient.

First, It will not be contended, but that in this case the court upon the statute of 9 Anne, c. 20. has a discretionary power, either to grant or deny an information. The party is enabled to file it with leave of the court, that is upon application to it. He must pray to have it, and every prayer implies a power to deny. A quo warranto is the king's royal writ of right, which Mr. Attorney may exhibit whenever he pleases. Yelv. 192. 1 Bulst. 55. But no private person has such an unlimited power, not over informations in the nature of a quo warranto. The statute is calculated for the determination of private rights, where any dispute happens upon elections of members, and it was made chiefly with this view, as may be collected from the preamble and other parts of the act, which require a relator to be named, who shall be liable to costs, and extend all the statutes of jeofailes to these these proceedings. He that prays the information, must lay some right to the office before the court, that it may appear the prosecution is not set on foot merely to gratify the humour and capricious disposition of the prosecutor. My Lord Chief Justice Holt has censured actions which have been brought out of curiosity only to try the opinion of the court, saying he did not fit there to determine coffee-house disputes. The election of the defendant was unanimous, no competitor at all; so that there is no one but himself who claims a right to this office. It has been held criminal to bring an action in another's name without his privity and consent. Here the prosecution is in the king's name, and yet he is not privy. His attorney does not appear to avow the prosecution.

Secondly, The affidavit may be true, and yet the defendant may have taken the declaration as the statute requires, for he might take it before two justices at a different time from his taking the oath of office. Neither does it set out any tender of this declaration to the defendant, which is expressly required by the purview § 10. and though the proviso seems to carry it farther, yet it will be absurd to make the purview void by the proviso. Mich. 8 W. 3. B. R. Rex. v. Major de Oxon. 5 Mod. 360. That was a Mandamus to restore Job Slatford to the office of town-clerk. They returned that he did not at the time of taking the oaths of office take the oaths of allegiance. It was insisted, that a tender was necessary; but this was not the point upon which the case turned, but because they only said he did not take them at that time, without any negative words that he did not take it at any other time, which he well might. And for this reason a peremptory mandamus was granted. This case enforces my objection to the affidavit, and before I leave it I must observe, that though all the then great lawyers were concerned in it, yet not one of them ever thought of this declaration, which is now trumped up to sacrifice the quiet of the whole kingdom to some private pique and revenge.

As to the principal point (and a great point it is) I hope no information shall go, for three reasons. 1. Because this declaration has been disused for these thirty years past. 2. From probable reasons to induce an opinion, that this statute is expired and, 3. From the consideration of the many inconveniences which a contrary determination will bring along with it, and the evil influence it will have to inflame the nation.

1 vol. of Trials
291.
Lord Balmerino's case, Treatise of Laws 119.

First, Sir James Mackenzie and Sir David Dalrymple in their treatises of the laws of Scotland tell us, that desuetude of a law for forty years amounts to a repeal of it. And since no prosecution cution has hitherto been set on foot upon this act of parliament, it is, according to Litt. § 108. an argument, that none lies; and as this law has been so long esteemed to be of no force, I may proerly apply, what my Lord Coke has more than once mentioned, a communi observantia non est recedendum; et periculum existimo, quod bonorum virorum non comprobatur exemplo.

Secondly, There are not many reasons to conclude this statute is expired, and all put together are sufficient; nam quæ non profunt singula, juncta juvant. It is the reason and subject matter which guides the construction of acts of parliament, and from hence spring all those instances which might be shewn, where general terms have been restrained to particular, and particular extended to general: where the words have reached all actions, and yet been confined to one species only; where statutes mentioning the king have enured to the benefit of the subject; and on the contrary where acts of parliament penned with latitude enough to include the subject, have notwithstanding been restrained to the king; where the plural number has stood for the singular, and the singular for the plural; nay even where the same words in the same law have had different constructions put upon them. 4 Inst. 330. 2 Inst. 25. Hob. 128, 299, 346. As suppose a man having an inheritance in one acre and but a freehold in another, conveys both to J. S. and his heirs for ever. Here for ever must be construed differently. 7 Co. 23. Cro. Eliz. 183.

The intention was but temporary, as appears by Kennet vol. 3. 138. Though never so many had taken the covenant, yet the extent of one life would wipe them all off. The candles were all lighted at once, and would burn out as soon as a single taper. It was confined only to persons then in being, who may reasonably be supposed to be all dead at this day: and as it was calculated chiefly for those who had taken the solemn league and covenant, it will be of no use now. The statute of uniformity 14 Car. 2. c. 4. which expressly determines it in 1682, induced a belief that it had the same continuance in all cases. And to shew this was not thought so considerable a thing as some people would make it, it is observable that it is left out in the militia act. I cannot pretend there ever was any express repeal, but if 1 W. & M. c. 8. be not one as to this declaration, I question whether it be so of the oaths themselves. If the clergy were to take it but for a time, and the militia not at all, what reason is there to construe this obligation with a greater latitude to corporations? The danger is the same in each case, and so is the security to be against it.

Thirdly, There are many inconveniencies which will flow from an opinion that this law is still in force. I forbear to mention some of them, and shall only instance in those which are obvious to all the world. Many corporations will be utterly dissolved; the public peace endangered, and the course of justice interrupted in all inferior jurisdictions. In some respects it may affect our legislature. How many will there have been, who have suffered under a sentence which the recorder of London had no authority to pronounce? The parliament is now sitting, and thither the proper application will be, as to the expertest physicians, who ought to have a hand in cutting off so many members, that there be no fever or consumption. It is not the first time this court has said, that matters which have come before them have been too big for them. In Edward the Third's time the sheriffs took an oath against the Lollards, but when that came to be the established religion, it was dropped. 3 Inst. 188. 2 Inst. 479, 436, 790. Cro. Car. 25.

Denton. The solemn league and covenant arose from a treaty between the parliament and the Scots, as appears by Rusbyworth and Clarendon, and all the histories of those times. This league was calculated for the extirpation of all episcopal government, by that means to overthrow the church; and can it then be imagined, that less care should be requisite to keep persons of that pernicious principle from intermeddling in church affairs, than from spreading the contagion in corporations?

But admitting the declaration was not temporary; yet though not expressly, it is implicitly repealed. The act requires the oaths and declaration to be taken together, and therefore the 1 W. & M. has not severed, but repealed them all. Some argument to evince this may be drawn from 2 W. & M. c. 8. for reversing the judgment in the quo warranto against the city of London, and from the 11 & 12 W. 3. c. 17. and especially from 1 Geo. c. 13. § 23. in which the proviso will be of no force if such a latent defect as this can be trumped up. Argumentum ab inconvenienti, if it holds in any case, holds in this. In the case of Bewdley (a) the venire was de vicineto, when it ought to have been de corpore com', but because this had been the practice in all scire facias's, that practice prevailed against the express words of the act of parliament. In Bernardi's (b) case the court suspended their judgment, till they saw whether the parliament would think it proper to continue him and the others in prison.

Ap. 64.

The objection arises from the words for ever hereafter. To which I answer, that inasmuch as the design was but temporary those words can only extend to a temporary obligation. On the statute statute of 5 Eliz. the precedents used to be, that the party did ^{5 Eliz. c. 4.} not use the trade at the time of making the statute; but on account of the length of time that is now disused.

Rece. At the restoration three things were to be provided for; corporations, the militia, and the church. The militia are out of this question: the church quoad hoc seemed to be most concerned; and no reason can be given why there should be a more lasting provision for corporations, than for the church. The statute of circumspecte agatis extends to all bishops, though the bishop of Norwich only is mentioned. The statute 1 Geo. designed to instance in all the qualifications, and the omitting this is an argument, the law-makers esteemed it none, for the affirmative there implies a negative.

Mallett. The solemn league and covenant was an association, and no law. Necessity has superseded the express words of a statute; as where the statute of Marleberge prohibits the driving distresses out of the county, yet where the lord's manor is in another county, it has been held lawful. In the case of The King v. Jeffries about a year since, such a rule as this was discharged, because the attorney general had no hand in praying it.

Whitaker Serjeant contra. Every subject has a right to inform the court, whenever any other is guilty of a breach of the law. An information lies for not repairing a bridge, and yet there is no private injury. The statute doth not require us to name a relator, till the information is actually granted. I agree the court has a discretionary power, either to grant or deny what we now ask for.

It is a new doctrine which is now advanced, that if an act of parliament be disregarded for a time, it ceases to be binding. But if it should, yet there is not that argument in this case. Daily experience tells us, that the sacrament is taken as that statute requires; and it is coupled with the declaration, and must stand and fall with it. The question is not whether there are any persons now alive who took the solemn league and covenant, but whether or no there remains any obligation at this day on members of corporations to make the declaration against it. My Lord Clarendon was of opinion that the obligation was perpetual, as may be gathered from his own words, To the end that we and our posterity. But not to rest this matter upon the single testimony of any historian, here is testimonium rei, the very words of the act of parliament, which enacts, That this declaration shall be made for ever hereafter, and in default thereof the election to be void.

Whether

Whether the distemper be general or not, the court cannot take notice upon this motion: the only question is, whether the defendant has complied with the terms of this act of parliament, which we insist is in full force.

Marsh. We need not pray this information through Mr. Attorney, for the statute gives it to any person with leave of the court. And though Jeffries's case seems to thwart us, yet the constant practice is more than an answer to the authority of that case. As to the affidavit, we think it sufficient. We shew the defendant did not make the declaration when we took the oaths of office, which was the proper time; and this is enough to put him to shew, he took it at any other time and place. And since he has not laid hold of this opportunity, it may be concluded he has not taken it at all. That a tender was not necessary, was resolved in Slatford's case (c). It has been said, that the reason of this provision was but temporary. In answer to which pretence I shall look a little into it, in order to shew, that as the obligation is perpetual, so is the reason of it. In 1643. the Parliament forces having had but ill success, they made application to the Scots for their assistance. Commissioners were appointed on both sides, and the result of their meeting was an association, which went under the name of the solemn league and covenant. The King immediately published his proclamation against it, as appears in 3 Rush. 488. The drift of this association was, to ruin the religion of our country; and to express the detestation of such abominable practices, the declaration was framed soon after the Restoration. And it had two views; one to disengage people from that obligation which they were in a manner forced into, and the other to fix a lasting and indelible brand of infamy upon those proceedings, in order to deter others from the like attempts. And now can any one say, the reason is but temporary? On the contrary, does it not manifestly appear to extend itself to all future ages?

Act of parliament cannot be antiquated.

As to the militia, there was no occasion for this provision: the crown had them in their power, but not so the corporations. In 1 Inst. 81. b. it is said, an act of Parliament cannot be antiquated, or lose its force, for want of being put in execution. And Hob. 111. Sir John Pilkington's case there cited, Fortescue C. J. said they would be well advised, before they would annul an act of Parliament. It is an absurdity to say, that because the subject has lived some time in the breach of any law, that the obligation to observe that law ceases. In Henry the 8th's time all the clergy were brought under a præmunire, for suing bulls from the court of Rome; and bishop Burnet in his History of the Reformation, speaking ing of this matter, tells us, that though it had been practised for a long time, to sue such bulls, yet the old laws prohibiting thereof were in no degree impeached by such usage.

Yorke. It is sufficient that we lay a probable cause before the court, when we pray this information. We were not obliged to travel the country to inquire of every justice of the peace, whether the defendant had made any declaration before him. Nor does this cause come within the reason of returns, which were not traversable at common law, and therefore ought to be certain to every intent. The statute 9 Ann. is general, and not confined to prosecutions by competitors only. I was of counsel in Jeffries's case, and the reason why that information was refused was, because he proved he took the oaths about a fortnight after the proper time, and not because the prosecutor came without Mr. Attorney to back him. In the case of Denny v. Norris, the question was not about the tender, but whether that matter was assignable for error. Hale in his History of Law 4, 5, 6. where he treats of old laws whereof no written monument is left, does not conclude them of no force; but only says they are grafted into the common law. In the case of Thornby v. Fleetwood (d), (d) Com. Rep. 206. post. 318. S. C. in B. R. Serjeant Chefbyre who argued in C. B. against the statute of 1 Jac. 1. c. 4. was pleased to use this metaphor, that it was a still-born statute, because says he it has not cried out till now: but that was not thought a reason to set it aside. [126]

There is no more absurdity for people to take the declaration now than there was formerly, as to all persons who had not taken the covenant. But granting there may be some seeming absurdity, is it therefore to be disregarded? It may be a reason to have it repealed, but till then it binds. Suppose a statute requires, that whoever enjoys an office shall declare that two and two make four: I know of no power which could reject this as frivolous. The clause in the act of uniformity shews, that it would not have expired in 1682. without that provision, and there was no reason to continue it longer as to the clergy, for they take the oath of canonical obedience. It was said causes have been thought too big for this court: I grant it, and take this to be one of them; it is too big for this court to repeal and set aside acts of Parliament.

Where things are evidence of themselves, as corporation books, we make no rule to produce them, but only that the party may have copies, which copies are evidence: But this examination is not evidence of itself, without proving the hand of the party; and so it is of warrants and affidavits, and therefore a copy of them is no evidence; and we must have the original, for nothing else concludes the party. Thereupon I moved to affirm the judgment, but the court bid us put it in the paper; and when it came on, they objected against affirming the judgment, because the pleading the release was a confession of the errors, and so it would be to affirm an erroneous judgment. And besides, the tables were now turned; the question not being whether error or not, but whether barred or not by the release.

THE husband and wife lived separate. She boarded in the plaintiff's house, who declares against the husband for meat and drink for him found and provided. On the evidence it appeared to be for the wife. And the C. J. held, it did not support the declaration; for though the husband is chargeable upon his implied contract for what necessaries are administered to the wife; and therefore if goods are delivered to her, the vendor may declare generally for goods sold and delivered: yet in this case the plaintiff fails in his description of the subject matter of the contract. So that where he now declares generally, a recovery in this action could not be pleaded to a special action for meat and drink found and provided for the wife (1).

That which makes a man a trespasser may not amount to a conversion.

The porters, who have a right in this hut, have each particular boxes or cupboards, and as such the defendant had one. The plaintiff being one of the porters puts in goods belonging to A. and lays them so that the defendant could not get to his chest without removing them. He accordingly does remove them about a yard from the place where they lay, towards the door, and without returning them into their place goes away, and the goods are lost. The plaintiff satisfies A. of the value of the goods, and brings trover against the defendant. And upon the trial two points were ruled by the C. J.

1. That the plaintiff having made satisfaction to A. for the goods, had thereby acquired a sufficient property in them to maintain trover.

[129] 2. That there was no conversion in the defendant. The plaintiff by laying his goods where they obstructed the defendant from going to his chest; was in that respect a wrong-doer. The defendant had a right to remove the goods, so that thus far he was in no fault. Then as to the not returning the goods to the place where he found them; if this were an action of trespass, perhaps it might be a doubt; but he was clear it could not amount to a conversion.

Sir Thomas Powys pro quer. The question is, Whether the heir of Nathaniel can make the tender? I hold he may. In queen Elizabeth's time executory devises came in. Fulmerston's case is the first, and they were allowed to extend as far as one life. Afterwards the House of Lords in the case of Lloyd v. Cary, Parliament Cases 137, allowed a reasonable time after the life, viz. a year: we are within that time, for we come in three months. The objection is, That the tender is personal in Nathaniel, it not being said, that he or his heir shall tender. To this I answer, That there is no laches in Nathaniel; it was not to be done in his life, but after the mother's death; and the heir having an interest, is within the reason of Litt. § 334. Formerly it was thought, a fee could not be limited upon a fee, but it is otherwise since Pell and Brown's (a) case where the first fee is conditional. Though the estate itself never vested in the ancestor, yet an interest did; and therefore on performance of the condition the heir is in by descent, according to the third point in Shelley's case and the case of Wood there cited, and Chapman's case, Plowd. 284. Thus far in a court of law: but in a court of equity, this shall be taken as an immediate devise to Nathaniel, subject to the payment of 500 l. to Daniel, who was in the former limitation only as a security, according to 1 Chan. Cas. 89.

Chesbyre Serjeant of the same side quoted Litt. § 334. illustrated by § 337. 1 Roll. Abr. 420. Winch 103, 105, 115. C. J. Jones 390. And a case in C. B. debated Mich. 2 W. & M. and entered Trin. 4 Jac. 2. rot. 751 or 707. R. H. seised in fee made a feoffment to the use of himself for life, remainder to his wife for life, remainder to Mary in tail, remainder to Sarah in tail, remainder to his own right heirs; provided, that if Mary does not pay Sarah so much within such a time after his wife's death, then Sarah shall have it in tail, remainder to Mary in tail. R. H. died, Mary died, and then the mother died; and it was adjudged, that Mary's heir might pay the money, for the heir had an interest vested, though the ancestor died living the tenant for life.

Sir Robert Raymond, ad idem. The objection is, that heirs is a word of limitation, whereas the plaintiff if he takes now must take as a purchaser. Answer: he takes by descent. A possibility or remainder on contingency may descend. Bro. Feoffment to Uses 59. 3 Co. 20. Poll. 55. Co. Litt. 219. b. Daniel has no prejudice, prejudice, whether the 500*l.* be paid by Nathaniel or his heir. The possibility is coupled with an interest. Yelv. 85. 7. So Sir Francis Englefield's case; and we are in the case of a will, where the intent is to be pursued. 1 Saund. 150.

Hooper Serjeant contra. This is not an executory devise, which can take effect before any act done: the ancestor was to do an act, he dies without doing it; and as he could not take till he did the act, so the heir cannot now that it is impossible to be done in the manner the devisor directs.

Mead. There is a great difference, where the heir comes to perform a condition that is to put him into his ancestor's estate, and where he is to gain a new estate. It is admitted the plaintiff cannot take as a purchaser, and if so, then to make him take by descent, you must give something to the ancestor. Here he has nothing; he has no right to the land, but a bare scintilla juris, a right to do something, which will give him a title after it is done. And he had an election whether he would do it or not. It is considerable, that Nathaniel only is named to tender; but to Daniel are added executors and administrators. If Nathaniel had survived the wife, and lapsed the time; no body can say, the least right would have descended to the heir. This is a condition precedent, which ought to have been performed, and against this Chancery cannot relieve, as they can in the case of a condition subsequent; as was settled in the case of Bertie v. Falkland, Salk. 231. Select Cases 129.

Adjournatur. And afterwards the Lord Chancellor and the Master of the Rolls delivered their opinions seriatim.

Sir Joseph Jekyll, Master of the Rolls. The equity which bring this matter into the court is, that the defendant Daniel had so conveyed and incumbered this estate, that it became difficult for the plaintiff to know to whom to pay the money. Now before this can be settled, the court must first determine a question in law, whether the heir of Nathaniel upon tender or payment of the money may enter. And I am of opinion, that this is not personal to Nathaniel, but goes to his heir. If this was a condition at common law, there is no doubt but the heir might perform it and enter, Litt. § 334. and in the case of a condition for payment of money at a certain time by the feoffee, who before the day enfeoffs another, the second feoffee may pay the money. Litt. § 336.

But I admit the present case is not a condition, but an executory devise. But wherein does the difference consist? All that it can amount to is only this. In the case of a condition the heir has a right antecedent to the condition to enter, for he does not gain a new estate, but invests himself in the old one; whereas in our case he is to gain a perfectly new estate, which the ancestor never had. In answer to this it is to be considered, that there is a condition to create an estate, which the law will construe liberally. 1 Inst. 219. b. it is said a condition that is to create an estate, is to be performed as near the intent and meaning as can be, if the words and letter cannot be strictly pursued. From whence I observe, that there may be a performance which is not within the letter. But besides, this is the case of a will, in construction of which the law allows a great latitude to come at the meaning of the deviser. Now in our case his meaning seems to be this, upon a view of the whole will. He is distributing his estate amongst his children; to some, money, to others, land. In the proviso for Theodore's payment of 500*l.* recited in the will, it is worded, if Theodore, his heirs or assigns, shall pay: now no one can imagine, that by the difference of words in that proviso, and this in question, the testator's intention was different. In both cases he seems to be aiming at a method of charging those several lands with 500*l.* a-piece.
 VOL. I. L it

 Rem. 3 ed. 303.

Let us now consider whether by this will Nathaniel himself had any thing in the lands in question. I conceive he had a future interest or possibility, which might descend to the heir, though that right never vested in the ancestor. That such a future interest in a term will go to the executor or administrator is known law. Walden's case in Plowd. 519. is full to that point. It may also be released, as in Lampet's case, 10 Co. 48. b. Now why such a future possibility should in a term go to the executor or administrator, and in a freehold not go to the heir, who is as much the representative of the ancestor as the other is of the testator, I cannot imagine. At common law such a possibility arising by act executed would come to the heir; as before the stat. de donis, the reversion upon a fee-simple conditional was only a possibility, and yet it went to the heir. And even a possibility may go to the heir, which never could vest in the ancestor, as 1 Inst. 378. b. So the same possibility will go to the heir, where the limitation is by way of use. 1 Co. 98. Shelley's case, and Wood's case there cited, are very strong. And though it is there said, that a future interest or possibility cannot be released, yet that was before Lampet's case, where it is determined that such a possibility may be released; and I believe it would be so now. The case of Spring v. Sir Julius Caesar, 1 Roll. Abr. 420. Winch 103. was thus: a fine by A. and B. to the use of A. in fee, if B. does not pay 10*l.* at Michaelmas after, and if he does then pay it, it shall be to the use of A. for life, remainder der to B. in fee. B. dies before Michaelmas, and Rolle says, it seems the heir of B. may pay the money, for this is not more personal; being the payment of money, than in the case of Litt. § 334. upon a mortgage: and though in the report of this case in C. J. Jones 390. it is said, the court were divided: yet Croke and Jones were of opinion, the performance of the condition was not personal; and they said, they did not see the difference between that case and the case of Littleton; and since that reason was not contradicted by any of the other Judges, and reported by Rolle as law, I must take it for law.

Now since these several possibilities are judged to go to the heir; I do not see why such possibility created by will, since executory devises are allowed, should not go to the heir also. The case of Brett v. Rigden cited for the defendant is nothing to the purpose, for there was in effect no devise to the ancestor, he dying in the life of the devisor; but in the present case here is a complete devise, and such as the ancestor might have taken.

It was insisted for the defendant, that the plaintiff's father had an election, to pay or not to pay the money; and therefore it is personal in him. I admit it; but then such election is always given in favour of him that is to pay, the receiver having no election at all; and in Littleton's case the mortgagor has equally an election, and yet it is not personal in him. My Lord Coke in his comment upon that section gives four reasons for Littleton's opinion, which all concur in the present case. 1. A day appointed; 2. If the heir in our case takes by this executory devise, (as has been shewn he does) in nature and course of a descent, it is the same thing as where in Coke's second reason the condition descends to the heir. The two remaining ones are plainly the same in our case, and so Littleton is indeed a full authority in point.

It is not to be made a question, whether this future interest or possibility, being to arise beyond a life, is good by way of executory devise, since the case of Lloyd v. Cary (b), which allows a year after. Upon the whole I am of opinion with the plaintiff, as to the point of law.

note.

It was insisted, upon further for the plaintiff, that if the law were against him, yet in equity he would have a good title upon payment of the 500*l.* the estate in Daniel being to be looked upon as a security only. And for this 1 Chan. Ca. 89. was cited. But now lest any one should go away with this dangerous opinion, that another construction ought to be made in a court of equity, than would be in a court of law; it is to be observed, that that case was of a trust, and unless it was construed as a trust for the younger children, Sir Thomas would have run away with the whole estate.

Parker Lord Chancellor. I am of the same opinion with the Master of the Rolls. And if we look on this case on every side, it appears the right is clearly for the plaintiff. The will shews the intention, though the word heirs be left out in the case of Nathaniel, yet he should be in the same condition with Theodore. The question is indeed a question of law, and the method I have taken to satisfy myself has been by considering this proviso; 1. As upon a feoffment; 2. As upon a will; and 3. As it would stand in equity, as a provision for payment of money.

1. At common law; if William Marks had made a feoffment to B. for life, remainder to Daniel in fee, with this proviso; Nathaniel could take no benefit of this condition, because contrary to a maxim in law, that a condition cannot limit over an estate to another, but can only be taken advantage of by the maker. But in case of a feoffment by A. to B. and his heirs, upon condition that if A. pays 500*l.* to B. within three months, then A. shall have his estate back again; if A. dies before the three months are expired, his heir, though not mentioned, may pay the money and enter. Litt. § 334.

2. Consider it upon the statute of wills, and it is the same upon the statute of uses, since executory devises and springing uses have been allowed of. At first they began when merely future, and sprang out of the estate of the devisor. Afterwards they were extended beyond a life; as if an estate was devised to A. for life, remainder to B. in fee, upon condition that if C. pay a sum of money to B. within a certain time after A.'s death, then C. to have a fee. This has been allowed of, and it is no more than granting the advantage of a condition to another person, which by common law conveyance could go only to the maker himself. Now this advantage is in its own nature descendible; because it is nothing but that very right, which if it had gone to the devisor himself, would have descended to his heirs. Take this as a possibility or future interest, and the cases mentioned by the Master of the Rolls shew plainly, that this is a right descendible to the proper representative, whether of a term or an inheritance, the former to the executor or administrator, and the latter to the heir. But if we consider it (as I have done) as a condition, the case is yet stronger; because this benefit of a condition is what is taken notice of before by the common law to be descendible; and since by the statute of wills and uses uses the benefit of a condition is allowed to go over to a stranger, that stranger ought to have it as fully and compleatly as the feoffor himself would have at common law: that is, it shall go equally to the heirs of the one as of the other.

3. Consider the matter as it stands in a court of equity. I agree intirely, were the law against the plaintiff, that he could not pay the money at the day; this court could not have inter-meddled: but if the law be with him, it will be another consideration, whether if he slipped the time of payment, he should not be relieved. This is the case of a mortgage; equity looks upon the mortgagee's estate, which is become absolute by passing the day, as only a security for the money, and will therefore defeat it upon payment after the day. Now in our case Daniel's interest is merely personal; by the will the money is to be paid to him or his executors, and the estate of inheritance is given to Nathaniel and his heirs, subject only to this incumbrance. And though this court has not relieved against an heir at law upon a condition precedent to raise estates out of the heir's estate; yet when it is to be raised only out of the estate of the devisee, it may very well do it. Nathaniel therefore would have the equity of redemption, the estate of Daniel being only as a security. If this therefore had been the case, I think this court would have relieved. But the present case does not want that assistance.

To return then to the question in law, whether the death of Nathaniel has destroyed the benefit of the condition as to his heir: and this contains two questions; 1. Whether this condition be such as may be performed after Nathaniel's death; and 2. Whether the estate must not first vest in the ancestor, before the heir can take. As to the first, I think it not personal in Nathaniel, but performable by his heir. The payment of 10*l.* or such small sum, that bears no proportion to the estate, may perhaps be considered only as a ceremony, to declare the intention of the party; and therefore if in the case of Spring v. Sir Julius Caesar, the two Judges continued in their opinion, it must be as I conceive, because the sum was so small, that they looked upon it as a mere ceremony. But where the sum is 500*l.* it must be looked on as a certain valuable consideration; and since Englefield's case in 2 Co. the payment of money is a thing of all things the least personal, it not being material who pays it; so it is but paid. If therefore the plaintiff pays the money, all the purposes of the will are answered, as fully as if Nathaniel himself had paid it. And this exactly answers to Littleton, and the reasons given by Coke, which are not adapted to the institution of the common law only, but to the reason of the thing. As to the second, Wood's case in 1 Co. 99. a. proves evidently, that an heir may take by descent by virtue only of a possibility of right which was in the ancestor.

It has been objected, that this is a condition precedent: but I take it to be a condition subsequent: it would indeed have been precedent, if it had been to raise an estate out of the heir's estate; but this is only to defeat Daniel's estate, and then Nathaniel comes into the place of the heir at law. But this is a mere verbal dispute: no matter whether precedent or subsequent, if the performance by the heir be to be looked upon as the performance of Nathaniel, it shall have the same effect as if Nathaniel himself had paid the money. I think therefore the plaintiff would have a good title at law on payment at the day. But yet he came very properly into this court, because of the hazard he run in paying the 500*l.* to Daniel. There must be a decree in nature of redemption, that is, that the plaintiff pay the principal, and interest from the day of payment, and have the estate conveyed to him. The money must be brought before the Master, who must see what demands are upon it, and adjust the proportions of the several claimants.

IN debt upon 7 & 8 W. 3. c. 25. against the officer who presided at the election of members of parliament, for refusing to deliver a copy of the poll: after judgment for the plaintiff in B. R. and error brought in the Exchequer Chamber, the plaintiff moved to amend in several particulars, which he was ordered to give a note of to the other side. And now they came to shew cause against their being amended.

The first amendment desired was in the warrant of attorney, where the defendant was stiled bailiff bugi for burgi.

Chefhyre. There is nothing to amend this by, as there was in the case of Cooke and Dutchess of Hamilton, where they produced the common rule in ejectment, and that was the foundation for putting in the attorney's name (1).

2. To

(1) The bill was filed East. T. 2 Geo. and the warrant of attorney. East. Trin. 2 Geo. pursuant to.
32 H. 8.

2. To put the word vic. into the disfringas. It is Rex fidei defensor, &c. Somerset' Salutem, omitting vic. There is likewise nothing to amend this by; no award of it upon the roll, as there is of the venire facias. And non constat, but it might be designed to be directed to the coroner.

3. They would amend the teste of the venire, which in other words is to solve a discontinuance. The award is quinden' Martini, and they have taken it out teste the first day of Hilary term, and now they would teste it in Michaelmas term. [137]

4. The other amendment they would make is, to add continuances. Of them they have no need, having a verdict, which cures the want of them.

Reeve. This is a proceeding upon a penal law, and therefore the court will be stricter than in common actions. And as the statutes of jeofails will not help them, they must shew it to be amendable at common law. In the case of the Queen and Tuchin, which was an information for a libel, where the disfringas was teste the day after the return of the venire, the court on great debate refused an amendment. Salk. 51.

Wearg. The question is, whether this be a penal popular statute within the exception of the statutes of jeofails. I agree, where a man is intitled to an action at common law, and an act of Parliament comes and gives him an increase of damages; that is not to be taken as a penal statute. 9 Co. 71. 3 Bulst. 378. But this is not that case. Any person who demands the poll may have the action if he be refused it, and that shews it to be a popular statute.

All amendments are either at common law or by statute. Nothing was amendable at common law, but the same term. 8 Co. Blackmore's case. Salk. 50. By 14 E. 3. c. 6. and 8 H. 6. c. 12. such faults only are amendable, as proceed from mistake, not ignorance; if the teste of a writ be after the return of it, that is a plain mistake, and amendable; but when a man designedly makes it teste of one term, when it ought to be of another; that is matter of judgment. Show. 80. The direction of a writ is a more 32 H. 8. c. 30. The objection arose from this, that the bill and declaration were subsequent to the warrant of attorney, and so the last could not be amended by the former, but it was over ruled. Vide Com. Rep. 280. Where this case is more clearly reported. Richards qui tam v. Brown, Doug. 119.

essential part than the teste of it, or the return. It cannot be a writ unless it be directed to some body, but it may be good without a return, as where it is vicontiel. Where there were two sheriffs, and the writ was directed vicecomiti; there indeed it was made vicecomitibus, because there was a direction, though an improper one. 2 Cro. 188. Yelv. 110.

Yorke. At common law nothing was amendable, but the act of the court. If vic. is to be put in now, it will be giving an authority after the execution of it. In the case of Sloper v. Child in Cro. Jac. the word vic. was put in, but that was because the award of the venire warranted it, which the award here does not, for it is of a subsequent term, and at a time when the defendant had no day in court. In Cro. Eliz. 820. the return of the venire was held amendable, but not the teste, because that is never mentioned in the awarding it upon the roll.

Hutt. 56.

Comyns Serjeant contra. The statutes of amendments do not except popular actions, as the statutes of jeofails do. 3 Lev. 375. In a qui tam, &c. on the statute 31 Eliz. for 5 l. for selling a horse in Smithfield not tolled, there was an amendment. So Salk. 324. 1 Roll. Abr. 205. pl. 3. Cro. Car. 275, 278. Jones 302. 1 Roll. Abr. 202. pl. 7. 1 Brownl. 156. upon the statute of hue and cry the day of committing the robbery was amended. It appears the writ was intended to be directed to the sheriff, for there is in it com' tuo, and therefore we may put in vic. according to Yelv. 69. Cro. Jac. Sloper v. Child. So the teste of writs have been amended. 2 Cro. 442. Yelv. 64. Cro. Car. 38. 2 Cro. 64. 2 Brownl. 102. Moor 599. Cro. El. 183. Moor 684. Cro. El. 203. 2 Cro. 162. Moor 465. Cro. El. 467. Noy 57. 2 Jones 41. And we may add the continuances according to 1 Roll. Abr. 200, 205, 206. pl. 6.

Pengelly Serjeant. The crown has no part of this penalty, but the party grieved has it all, and he has an antecedent right before bringing the action, which a common informer has not. He shall have costs. 1 Roll. Abr. 516. pl. 5. Sir W. Jones 447. 1 Vent. 133. Cro. Car. 539. As to the warrant of attorney, we needed not put in any addition. The other is right, and that is something to amend by. Then as to the vic', this writ is returned by the sheriff; so no colour to say it might be intended to go to the coroner. In C. B. the last term, between Child and Sloper, the venire was to the sheriff of Warwickshire, and the habeas corpora to the sheriff of Nottingham, and this was amended. 3 Mod. 78. So Pasch. 8 W. 3. B. R. Wright v. Inhabitantes de Penburst, the venire was amended from de placito butessii et clamoris, to de placito transgr' et contempt', contra statut' de Hue et Cry. As to

to the teste, vide Hardress 321. 1 Roll. Abr. 201. pl. 36. Cro. El. 572. And the continuances being only matter of form, may be entered at any time. 1 Roll. Abr. 205. 2 Cro. 211.

The court doubted as to the continuances, but held all the rest amendable. And Eyre J. quoted Kite v. Episcopum Worcester, Pas. 7 W. 3. where one of the defendant's names was omitted in the disfringas, and it was amended after trial. Adjournatur. And afterwards when it came on again, the court declared for all the amendments, except the want of continuances, which they had debated again. And for the amendment the former arguments were insisted on; and 1 Roll. Abr. 200. pl. 27. Yelv. 156. 26 H. 6. Amendment 33. were cited. In answer to which it was insisted, that continuances were the act of the court, and the statute 8 H. 6. extends only to misprisions of the clerk (2). 8 Co. 156. b. Stiles 339. 3 Lev. 431. And towards the end of the term the Chief Justice delivered the opinion of the court, that the continuances might be entered at any time, as well after as before the judgment; and a distinction was taken between ministerial and judicial acts, the first of which were at common law amendable at any time, but the latter not after the same term. And as to amendments of judicial acts, a difference was made between amendments which deface and alter the record, and such as are only additional to it, in order to cke it out and compleat it (3).

(2) Before judgment they are the act of the clerk, but after judgment is entered, they are the act of the court. Vide Rex v. Pengelly, 1 Wilf. 303.

Gould versus Coulthurst.

THE writ of error was teste in Hilary term, of which the judgment was. But the plaintiff below enters continuances upon it till Trinity term, which occasioned the writ of error to be quashed. And now the question was as to costs. And all the court agreed, that this not being a fault in the writ of error at the time of bringing it, but being occasioned by the act of the defendant in error, which the plaintiff could neither foresee nor prevent; it was not a case within the 4 & 5 Ann. c. 16. which gives costs against the plaintiff in error upon quashing defective writs of error. Then another question arose, whether the plaintiff in error should not have his costs in this case, being defeated defeated of the benefit of this writ of error by the artifice of the defendant in error. And as to this point the C. J. and Eyre J. were against giving costs, and Powys and Fortescue Justices, were of the contrary opinion (1): so the court being divided, the writ was quashed without costs of either.

Dominus Rex versus Turner & al'.

What consequences shall be considered in aggravation of a fine.

THE defendants having been indicted for a riot in entering into a room, they came in and confessed the indictment, and moved to submit to a small fine. The prosecutor, to aggravate the fine, produced affidavits, that a young gentleman, who was then in the room and ill of the small pox, was so frightened, that he died; though he was in a very good way before. And whether these affidavits could be read upon this indictment, was the question.

Eyre J. was against the reading of them, because it was an injury to a third person, and no mention of it in the indictment. If in trespass the plaintiff would give beating his servants in aggravation of damages, it must be laid in the declaration. And he mentioned the case of Rex v. North & al', 9 W. 3. in B. R. where in an indictment against several journeymen weavers for a riot, the circumstance of their meeting, in order to oblige their masters to raise their wages was not allowed to be given in evidence, not being laid in the indictment.

But the C. J. and Powys and Fortescue Justices, were for reading the affidavits, because this was the immediate consequence of the riot, and could not subsist as a crime of itself. And if it was otherwise, every man must make his indictment as long as his evidence. Besides, why are affidavits ever read, unless it be to inform the court of circumstances, that cannot appear upon the general allegation of the crime? They said, the true distinction was, where the matter can or cannot subsist as a distinct crime by itself: The combination of the weavers was a conspiracy, which is a crime indictable; and it would have been hard to fine them upon that account, and yet leave them open to be indicted for a conspiracy. In an indictment for a riot in breaking windows, Holt C. J. let them in to shew, that it was because the prosecutor had put out illuminations for the peace of Ryfwick. If circumstances are not to be considered, the punishment for a riot must be the same in all cases, which would be highly unreasonable. The affidavits were read.

THE defendant in the long vacation was committed by warrant from the Secretary of State for high treason. He lay by all Michaelmas term till the last day, and being then brought up, he was charged with an indictment, and recommitted by rule of court. The first week in this term he applied to enter his payer upon the habeas corpus act; which the C. J. thought he might well do, for though he has lapsed the time upon the first commitment, yet that is now out of the case, and he stands upon the same terms with one originally committed since the last term. And tho' the statute has the word warrant, yet he took commitments by rule of court to be within the meaning of it, this being an act for the liberty of the subject, and never intended to leave an indefinite power any where. Sed Eyre et Fortescue Justices (Powys J. absente) were of a contrary opinion, and said it had been otherwise resolved at the Old Bailey. Then the Chief Justice proposed to enter the prayer de bene esse, and consider the validity of it afterwards; as was done in Bernard's case, who at the end of the term was refused to be bailed, notwithstanding his prayer was regularly entered; that entry being no estoppel to the court. But the others would not come into this, and so nothing was done. The counsel prayed that some memorandum might be made of this application, sed non pravaluit (1).

IN 1715 Michaelmas-day happened to be of a Thursday. A man was hired upon the Saturday following, to serve from the said Thursday after Michaelmas-day to Michaelmas following. All this was stated for the opinion of the court. And the first question was, whether there was a compleat * hiring for a year, for if the word said be rejected, then there wants a week, but if you keep it in and refer it to Michaelmas-day, then by rejecting the words after Michaelmas-day it will stand as a hiring from one Michaelmas to another. And Eyre J. thought it might well be so. Sed cateri contra, for it would be to make it nonsense, in contracting to serve for a time past; whereas if the word said be rejected, the rest is natural enough. The other question was, whether (admitting the hiring to be compleat) there was † any service for a year in pursuance of it as the statute requires, the contract being made upon the Saturday. And Eyre J. said it might be intended he was those two days upon trial, and so the service would be sufficient. But the rest held, that such a service would signify nothing, for it is not in pursuance of any hiring; there must first be an hiring, and then a service, and not vice versa a service, and then a hiring (1).

THE husband and wife and servants were indicted for a conspiracy to ruin the trade of the prosecutor, who was the king's card-maker. The evidence against them was, that they had at several times given money to the prosecutor's apprentices to put grease into the paste, which had spoiled the cards. But there was no account given, that ever more than one at a time were present, though it was proved they had all given money in their turns. It was objected, that this could not be a conspiracy, for two men might do the same thing without having any previous communication with one another. But the Chief Justice ruled, that the defendants being all of a family, and concerned in making of cards; it would amount to evidence of a conspiracy, and directed the jury accordingly.

At a Court of Delegates in Serjeant's-Inn in Fleet-street.

27 February, 1718.

Where custom

churchwardens cannot take place, they must resort to the canon.

BY the 89th canon churchwardens are to be chosen by the parson and parishioners jointly, and if they cannot agree, then one by the parson and the other by the parishioners. In the parish of Bridge—in Yorkshire the custom is, for the parson to appoint one, and the two old churchwardens the other, but it goes no further. In this case the two churchwardens could not agree, so one presents Barwick, and the parishioners at large chuse Catten. It was insisted for Barwick, that his case was like that of coparceners, where, if they disagree, the ordinary may admit the presentee of which he will, except the eldest alone presents. On the other side it was said, that the cases widely differed, for in the case of a presentment the ordinary has a powee to refuse, but he has not so in the case of churchwardens, for they are a corporation at common law, and more a temporal than a spiritual officer. And a case was cited to be adjudged in B. R. where to a mandamus to swear in a churchwarden the ordinary returned, that he was servus minime idoneus, &c. But a peremptory mandamus was granted, because the ordinary was not a judge in that case.

Post. 266.

SCIRE facias out of the petty bag to repeal letters patents, returnable coram nobis in Cancellaria nostra in octabis purificationis beate Marie virginis ubicunque tunc fuerit. The defendants, salvis, &c. pray oyer of the writ, and then plead in abatement, that the writ ought to have been returnable coram domino rege in Cancellaria sua ubicunque eadem Cancellaria tunc foret in Anglia, and not generally ubicunque tunc foret. To this the Attorney General demurs.

Bootle pro rege. The objection which the defendants now make by their plea, strikes at all the forms of writs which have ever been in this court; for we shall shew that this is not only consonant to the Register, but is in the continued uniform course of the court.

We

We begin in the time of Edward the Third, and shall shew instances in that reign, Rich. 2. Hen. 4. Hen. 6. Q. Eliz. Car. 2. and Jac. 2. and even down to the Union, and ever since the Union except in two or three instances, which we are not at a loss to account for. Register 150. The Prince's case, and the case of Jefferson v. Morton.

a Saund. 27.

There was a case which gave heart and encouragement to this exception, Hil. 9 Ann. in Chan. Regina v. Persebouse: there the writ was ubicunque tunc fuerit in Magna Britannia, and it was abated by plea; and the reason was, because it differed from the Register, and was contrary to the act for the Union of the two kingdoms.

The instances I hinted at before, that run counter to all the other precedents, were subsequent to that resolution; and from some expressions which were used in the arguing of that cause, it was thought proper in majorem cautelam to make some few writs returnable ubicunque tunc fuerit in Anglia. But surely what was done in a few instances out of abundant caution, can never be of force enough to overthrow that multitude of precedents, and of so great antiquity.

Yorke contra. This depends, 1. upon the reason of the thing; and 2. upon the precedents.

For I must agree, that though the reason of the thing be with us, yet if to determine this writ to be wrong would be to overthrow a multitude of judgments; then unless I could make some distinction that could preserve those judgments, it would be difficult for us to prevail in this exception. But I take it there is no such danger.

Upon the reason of the thing, the nature of writs, and the common grounds upon which they have been settled, I must insist, that the return of this writ ought to have been, for the party to appear at the day before the King in his Chancery wheresoever it should be in England, and not generally ubicunque tunc fuerit.

There are several certainties which a writ ought to contain, with regard to the defendant, and in which he is concerned. 1. A command to a proper officer to warn the party to appear, either by summons or attachment. 2. The cause in which he is to appear. 3. The time when. And 4. The place where he is to appear. And if any of these fail, the writ will not be good.

1. As to the first: If the writ doth not contain that, it is a nullity; for it can answer no purpose, nor tend to any effect at all. And where the writ contains an improper direction in that particular, as where it has been a summons instead of an attachment, or an attachment instead of a summons, the books are full of cases of writs that have abated for that reason.

2. The cause in which he is demanded to appear must also be sufficiently described. If none be contained in it, then there is no charge against him in court, but he ought to be dismissed. And if it be not described with competent certainty, nay, in all formed writs, if it be not set forth in such and such precise words, as in case the particulars are ranged in an improper order only, that is error, and the writ shall abate for that cause.

3. The day upon which he is to appear must also be prescribed to him, and that with the most exact certainty; that he may know when to pay due obedience to the king's court, and be under no peril of incurring a contempt. And as this must be set forth with great certainty, so it must be with the known legal description of the day when he is required to appear; and if it be not, the writ is vicious, and abateable for that reason. Trin. 25 Edw. 3. 47. So Pasch. 1 Geo. in B. R. Tilden v. Wheadon. That was a saire facias against bail, returnable die Jovis prox. post crastinum purificationis; whereas crastinum purificationis itself was on a Thursday, and before the Thursday following octab' purificationis intervened, so that was dies Jovis prox. post octabas purificationis according to the proper description, though in fact it was the next Thursday after crastinum purificationis. An exception was taken to the writ for this reason, and the court were at first doubtful, whether it might not be well enough; because though the usual way is to take the description of days from the relation they bear to the last common return, yet a writ may be made returnable at any day in the King's Bench, where the proceedings are de die in diem, and there was in fact such a day as Thursday next after crastinum purificationis, and that was a sufficient description for the defendant to know it by, and consequently to know when to come in. But after argument and consideration the court held the writ ill, and that they could not vary from their certain known description of return-days; and that writ was abated.

I have laid these matters before the court, to shew how jealous the judges of the common law have always been in these cases, and with what great care they have always preserved the exact certainty of their writs and their returns. And I have made it preparatory to the fourth particular, which is,

4. The court and place where the defendant is to appear. As no reason can be assigned, why the same exactness should not go through the whole and extend to the place of the defendant's appearance, as well as the time; so I must say, that equal certainty has been required in that also.

The instances, wherein writs have been excepted to for faults in describing the place of the return, cannot be expected to be many; because the form of that is short and easily learned; therefore as soon as clerks know any thing, they know that. And I must own I have not been able to find any cases in the books, where exceptions have been taken to original writs for an improper description of the place of the return. And I would make use of this as an argument for me, that they have been preserved up to that exquisite certainty, that there has scarce been any possibility of mistake. Therefore I rely upon this; till the other side produce cases, wherein writs that have materially varied in that particular, have been allowed to be good.

The principal question therefore will be this, whether here is such a certainty in the description of the place (of the return) in which the party is to appear, in this writ, as is agreeable to the rules of law. And I apprehend here is not.

In order to clear my way to that which is the proper consideration of this case, I must in the first place rid my hands of that load of ancient precedents, which is laid upon us. I must agree that they are for the most part as has been urged on the other side, and therefore shall give up all the precedents that were before the Union: and what I shall rely upon as the foundation of this exception is the Union of the two kingdoms.

That since the conjunction of the two kingdoms of England and Scotland into the united kingdom of Great Britain, such a material change has been wrought in the jurisdiction of this court, and the extent of it, that in all writs concerning English subjects returnable here, it ought to be ubicunque tunc fuerit in Anglia, confining it to that part of the united kingdom called England only.

By the 24th article of the treaty of Union, which is confirmed by 5 Ann. c. 8. it is provided, "That from and after the Union 3 Ann. c. 8.
" there shall be one great seal for the united kingdom of Great " Britain, which shall be different from the great seal now used " in either kingdom."

After this union the kingdoms of England and Scotland are no more. It is the crown and kingdom of Great Britain, and the seal of Great Britain, and is so stiled in all pleadings. In consequence of that this court is also the Chancery of Great Britain, and so has been the stile of all bills exhibited in this court since the union.
M 2 seal

As this alteration of names has been wrought, so there is a great and material change in things themselves. Before the union the Lord Chancellor that sat in this court, could issue no writ or instrument under the great seal, that could have any force in Scotland. There was then a great seal of that kingdom, and a Lord Chancellor who had the custody of it.

Since the union that seal is disannulled, and that office extinct. The general authority which it had is now vested in the great seal of Great Britain, except in the instances particularly excepted and reserved by the articles of Union.

If so, then this court is the Chancery of Great Britain, and has a general jurisdiction throughout the whole united kingdom, as it had throughout England before the Union.

The consequence of this court's having a general jurisdiction throughout England before the union was, that it might exist and be a Chancery in any part of England. And by parity of reason, the consequence of this court's having a general jurisdiction throughout Great Britain will be, that it may exist and be a Chancery in any place of Great Britain.

[150] From hence it will follow, that it may be in Scotland, and then this writ requiring the defendant to appear at the day of the return before the King in his Chancery, wheresoever that Chancery should then be, did require the defendant to appear in Scotland at that day, in case the Chancery had been in Scotland.

That I take it is such an objection to this writ, as will make it illegal, and be sufficient to abate: it is to compel an English subject to appear out of England: and that by the laws of England no English subject whatsoever can be compelled to appear to answer for a matter of right out of England, is a principle of law which cannot be disputed. The state of the union has made no change at all in this particular, but the law of England is still lex terra as Magna Charta stiles it, and it is to be executed within this land of England.

In order to explain and enforce what I mean, when I say the court of Chancery may by possibility exist in Scotland, I must examine a little the foundation of that matter.

The jurisdiction of this court is of a complicated nature, and includes in it great variety. But I must submit, whether that whole jurisdiction, that great diversity of power, which it has, does not flow from one spring, and is raised upon one general foundation, that is the great seal. 1. If it be considered as a court of state, where all public acts of government are sealed and inrolled; that manifestly comes from the great seal, which is what gives their legal authority.

2. If it be considered as an officina justitia, for the issuing of writs; that certainly comes from the seal, which gives them being.

3. The jurisdiction of this court, as it is a court of equity, is perhaps of all others the most difficult to be traced, both as to its foundation, and the time when it had its original. But I think there have been very great opinions, and I am apt to believe a strict search into antiquity might enable one to shew, that this jurisdiction also has taken its rise from the great seal. For the Chancery being upon the division of the King's courts naturally the officina justitia, from which all original writs issued, and where the subject was to come for remedy in all cases; the Chancellor was applied to in all cases, for proper writs, where the subject wanted a remedy for his right, or redress for a wrong that had been done him. But in the execution of this authority, he was confined by the rules of the common law, and could award no writs, but such as the common law warranted: therefore when such a case came before him, as was matter of trust, fraud, or accident, (which are the subjects of an equity jurisdiction) the Chancellor could award no writ proper for the plaintiff's case, because the common law afforded no remedy. Upon this it is not improbable, that the Chancellors who were most commonly churchmen, men of conscience, when they found those cases grew numerous, in order to prevent the suitors from being ruined against right and conscience, and that no man might go away from the King's court without some relief, summoned the parties before them, and partly by their authority, and partly by their admonitions, laid it upon the conscience of the wrong-doer to do right.

4. If it be considered as a court of common law, as the petty bag is in which we now are; the principal parts of that jurisdiction are to hold plea upon writs of scire facias on records of this court, upon monstrans de droit, and traverses of offices found upon writs issued out of this court (1). These likewise have their being and essence from the great seal. And this very proceeding in a scire facias to repeal letters patent, which my Lord Coke says in 4 Inst. is the highest point of a Chancellor's jurisdiction, is in a particular manner derived from the great seal; for the very end of the suit is, and so is the judgment, that they be recalled back into the same place from whence they went forth under the great seal, that they may be cancelled, that is, that the great seal may be taken off. In the case of the Mayor and Burgeses of Liverpool against the Chancellor of the county palatine of Lancaster in B. R. Trin. 12 Ann. there was a scire facias to repeal a charter granted to that corporation under the great seal of the county palatine. To this suit a prohibition was moved for, for want of jurisdiction in the court. But it was resolved, that that court had jurisdiction of the cause, and amongst other reasons which were given for that judgment, it was declared, that this authority was incident to the seal of the county palatine: that the complaint of the writ being, that the Chancellor had wrongfully put the seal to it; it was proper to be examined in that court, where the seal was kept.

I have mentioned these matters in order to shew, how rationally and naturally all this power of the court flows from the seal. But there is another matter which furnishes the strongest argument in the world that it is so, and that is, that the delivery of the seal constitutes that great officer who exercises this jurisdiction, and gives him all this power.

[152] The use I would make of this is, that if all the jurisdiction of the court of Chancery is founded upon the great seal; I apprehend, that it will also follow and attend upon it; and that where-soever in any part of Great Britain the law can take notice of the great seal of Great Britain to be, there is also the Chancery of Great Britain.

Suppose his Majesty should take a royal progress into Scotland, and amongst his ministers should take his Lord Chancellor along with him with the great seal: I must insist, as a consequence of my argument, there would be the Chancery of Great Britain. And what shews this more fully is, that the great seal might be put to writs there, and they would bear teste in the King's name, teste meipso: Nay they must bear teste in his Majesty's own name, and no other, for a custos Regni, or Lords Justices, can only be appointed, when his Majesty goes out of his kingdom; and the very moment he returns, their authority ceases. But since the union, when his Majesty is in Scotland, he is still within his united kingdom; and then by law there is no room for such officers. And if writs may issue from Edinburgh under the great seal of

of Great Britain, tested in the King's name; that is a full evidence, that the Chancery of Great Britain may be there.

But still I must insist, that by the law of England the subjects of England cannot be called to appear in the Chancery of Great Britain wheresoever it shall be; since as that may be in Scotland, it may require him to appear contrary to the law of the land, and is therefore a bad writ.

I have now done with those arguments, which I have to prove this writ to be wrong, from the reason of the thing. I come now to consider the precedents. And as to those which were before the union, they are undoubtedly as has been opened; they have authority, and they have almost universal consent of their side; and they were certainly right, and settled upon very good reason. But what I shall contend for is, that this form is now bad and erroneous, upon the failing of that reason, for which, before the union, it was good. They were good before the union upon this reason, that the law took notice that England was an intire separate kingdom of itself, that the great seal was the great seal of England, and the Chancery, the Chancery of England, and that the Chancery of England could not be out of the kingdom; and therefore it was impossible to say, that this was to summon the subject to appear out of England. But now the very contrary to this holds true; that the law takes notice, that England is no intire kingdom, but a part of Great Britain only; that the Chancery is the Chancery of Great Britain, and may have a being out of England in any other part of Great Britain. So that the reason and the presumption of law, upon which that ancient form and those precedents were established, now failing and turning the quite contrary way; that form and those precedents will be of no authority against me in this case; but will rather be authorities for me, because nothing is more certain in reasoning, than that from foundations and premisses, which are contrary one to another, contrary conclusions ought to be inferred.

As to the precedents since the union, they are either such as have passed of course in the office, sub silentio, without examination; or they are such as have come in judgment before the court, and undergone litigation, that is, judicial precedents.

Now as to the first kind of precedents, of what authority are they? Surely they are of little or no authority. They are the work of clerks in the office, without consideration, and without knowing the opinion of the court. And if such precedents were suffered to prevail against the reason of the law, that would be to suffer the clerks to make the law. All the precedents which have been produced on the other side are of this kind, and they have not shewn any one judicial precedent in their favour, the reason of which is, that there are none.

But I apprehend the strength and weight of the precedents are with us. I have in my hand a list of near thirty writs upon the files of the petty bag, issued since the union, which are all made returnable in Cancellar' ubicunque tunc fuerit in Anglia, in the manner we contend for; and I have also a judicial precedent, a judgment of the court in a case of this kind, which I take to be an authority in point for me. And I am the more encouraged to think so, because the other side have thought fit to anticipate me in it, it glared them so full in the face. That was a scire facias against Sir Cleave Moor and Peter Persehouse upon a recognizance, given in this court, made returnable coram Domina Regina in Canc' sua ubicunque tunc fuerit in Magna Britannia. It was teste 11 Jan. anno 9th of the late Queen. To this writ there was a plea in abatement, and Mr. Attorney General, that now is, took an exception, that it was wrong, and ought to have been made, coram Domina Regina in Canc' sua ubicunque tunc fuerit in Anglia. And he put several cases, where since the union the great seal, and consequently the Chancery, might possibly be out of England, and yet the subjects of England not obliged to appear there. And that exception made so great an impression upon the court, that my Lord Harcourt, who then sat here, abated that writ for this fault only. And what explains this authority further is, what was done upon it afterwards in conformity to that judgment and the opinion which was then delivered; for the writ was not made returnable in Canc' ubicunque tunc fuerit generally, but ubicunque tunc fuerit in Anglia, as was we contend that ought to be.

And really I am at a loss to find any ground, upon which the present case can be distinguished out of that authority. For why was the writ in Persehouse's case held bad? Was it not because since the union the Chancery of Great Britain may be in any place of Great Britain, and consequently a writ which required the party to appear in that Chancery, wheresoever it should be in Great Britain, required him to appear in Scotland in case it should be there. So in the present case, shall not this writ pari ratione be bad, because since the union, the Chancery of Great Britain may be in any place in Great Britain; and consequently this writ, requiring the party to appear in that Chancery wheresoever it shall be, requires him to appear in Scotland, in case it shall be there. I own I cannot discern any difference between the two cases.

By

By this time I hope it sufficiently appears, that I was well warranted in saying, that the strength and weight of the precedents is with us. For if the precedents sub silentio are both ways, and there be no judicial precedent with the other side, but there is one in our favour; that judicial precedent will turn the scale, and over-balance the rest; especially if the circumstances, even of our precedents which have passed sub silentio, are considered. For they have most of them, if not all, been since the judgment of the court in that case of Persebouse, which shews what was then apprehended to be laid down as the standing rule of the court for the future. And I am informed, they are all the cases since that judgment, which have been of considerable consequence, and can be supposed to have undergone the consideration of counsel. And some of them have been litigated, and come before the court upon other points. Amongst the rest, there is the great case of the Scire facias against the charter of Liverpoole, which caused a mighty struggle in Westminster-Hall, and there the return is confined to England.

In order to avoid the force of this argument in the present case, some objections have been made of the other side.

The first is, that our exception comes too late, for that it is now aided by the appearance of the defendant. And this was enforced by observing, that it was absurd to say this defendant had an hardship put upon him by being summoned to appear in Scotland, when the court was at Westminster at the return, and he has appeared here.

process is aided by appearance, and where not.

The answer to this is, that it is not helped by appearance, because the defendant has come in specially, saving to himself all advantages whatsoever, and has challenged this defect by plea.

I may agree, without prejudice to this question, that possibly if the defendant had come in, and not relied upon this exception, but pleaded over some matter of bar, that might have precluded him from taking this advantage afterwards. But when he expressly comes in for this special purpose, I apprehend he may insist upon it.

I do admit, that any error in mesne process is salved by the party's appearance, and he shall not afterwards take advantage of it; because the only intent of mesne process is to bring the defendant into court, and when he is come in, that is out of the case; for he might have come in upon the writ without it. But an original writ (as a scire facias to repeal letters patents was determined to be in the case of The King v. Eyre (a), is of another nature; nature; for that is not only to bring in the party, but also to found the jurisdiction of the court in that particular cause, and to be the ground-work of all the proceedings of the court afterwards. And I know no case in the law, where it has been held, that an appearance has cured any error in the original writ.

In the case of Wilson v. Law, Trin. 6 W. & M. in B. R. Salk. 59. In an appeal of death, the defendant prayed over of the original writ and return, and thereupon demurred in abatement, as he might do in appeal. Upon the argument an exception was taken to the sheriff's return upon the original; and the answer was, that it was helped by the appearance. But the contrary was resolved by the court; for that appearance only helps, when the party comes in and pleads to issue, not when he comes in and challenges the defect. In the case of Widdrington v. Charlton, B. R. Trin. 11 Anne (b), it was held, that error in mesne process was aided by appearance. But in that case Mr. Justice Eyre in giving his opinion, expressly allowed the authority of Wilson v. Law, and distinguished it, by observing that there the exception was to the return of the original writ, and therefore the appearance could not cure it: but here (said he, and so was the opinion of the court) he shall answer to the original writ, because that is good; and it was held that there was no difference between an appeal and any civil action, as to the effect of an appearance to cure errors; but that the effect of that was the same in all cases.

As to the objection, that it is absurd for a man to come, this court here sitting, and object to the writ, that possibly he might have been hurt by not knowing certainly where to appear, or by being made to appear in Scotland.

I take it, there is no absurdity at all in that, for the law of England, which delights in certainty, is more reasonable than to put a man even to the hazard of being hurt by an illegal writ, either in his liberty or his freehold, but he may come in and take advantage of it, before he is actually affected by it.

Thus in cases of misnemer, where there is an original issued against a man, or a bill of indictment exhibited against him; by a wrong Christian name: if proceedings were had upon that writ or indictment, they could not finally affect him. If he was to be arrested by process upon such writ or indictment, he might have an action of trespass and false imprisonment against the officer; nay, if he made opposition and killed him, it would be but manslaughter, Gro. Car. 538. But notwithstanding all this, to prevent any possible danger to this man's liberty or property, though though he could not effectually be hurt by it, the law allows him time to come in and plead that misnomer to the writ or bill, and it shall abate for that reason; and the defendant not be put to answer, though he is in court.

And this he may do voluntarily, without shewing that he was brought in either by summons or compulsion; only saying, that the defendant (suppose J. S.) versus quem the plaintiff tulit breve suum, or exhibuit billam suam, per nomen Samuelis, is named John and not Samuel; and the writ shall abate.

I mention this to shew, how carefully the law has guarded the subject from receiving injury by erroneous proceedings; that barely upon the possibility of his being affected, he may come and take advantage of it, and avoid those proceedings, without staying till he is actually hurt by them.

And if he may do this in mere personal actions, much more may he do it in cases where his freehold comes in question. And that it does in this case; for this is a scire facias to repeal a grant of an office for life, and consequently to oust the party of that freehold, and for that reason has something in it of the nature of a real action. And it would be needless to mention, what great advantages the law allows to defendants in real actions in point of process and pleading, in order to fence and secure the freehold of the subject.

Another objection was, that to determine this writ to be wrong, would be to overthrow a multitude of judgments since the union.

If this exception depends upon the same reason with that which was taken and allowed in Persehouse's case (as I have endeavoured to shew it does) and is only a consequence of the rule which was then laid down; then if the precedents should be shaken, it will be owing to that judgment, and not to the judgment which we contend for in this case. [157]

But I do not remember ever to have heard that argument allowed, where the former precedents are both ways, as they are in this case; and besides, where there was a judicial precedent in favour of the exception. For more mischief has always been apprehended from shaking one judicial precedent, than a hundred precedents sub silentio.

I take it that this apprehension of danger is but a vain terror, and that there can be no such inconvenience; for that where there are are judgments, this exception will be out of the case, and the defect cured. Where the defendant has come in, and not challenged the exception, but pleaded over some matter of bar; that is a waiver of it, and he cannot take advantage of it afterwards by writ of error; according to the rule which was laid down by Mr. Justice G. Eyre in the case of Wilson v. Law, that an appearance will help, where the defendant comes in and pleads to issue, and does not challenge the defect of the writ.

There are many cases, where want of challenge of the party will cure a defect even appearing upon the face of the writ. As in debt upon simple contract against an executor, which does not lie; yet if he pleads to it, and a verdict be against him, he shall not take advantage of it in arrest of judgment, or by writ of error. Yelv. 56. 1 Lev. 201, 261. In the case of variance from the Register, that may be pleaded in abatement, but if the defendant waives that opportunity, he cannot take advantage of it afterwards. And so it was held Trin. 12 Ann. B. R. in the case of Skinner v. Newton (c).

Boote replied: the jurisdiction and process of this court neither is, nor was designed to be altered by the Union; for there is an express reservation. Though if there had not, nobody can think it would have made any alteration: however it was thought proper to declare so, in majorem cautelam, that as to all matters concerning England the Great Seal should be used as it was before the Union.

[158] Ubiunque fuerit generally, differs from ubique fuerit in Magna Britannia: the latter can by no intendment be set right, but the former may, according to the known rule of construction, verba generalia generaliter sunt intelligenda.

Precedents, though they pass sub silentio, are surely evidences of the forms of the court. And thus far they are authorities, that they shew it was not thought necessary to alter them, when in 10 Ed. 1. Wales was united to, and became parcel of the dominions of England; nor when Calais was so likewise. Two or three precedents make not the law against a multitude to the contrary. 39 H. 6. 30. 4 Ed. 3. 43. a. Long. Qu. E. 4. 110. It was upon the strength of the precedents, that the case of Bewdly (d) was resolved, and they were there set up in opposition to, and prevailed against the express words of the act of parliament.

But if we should admit their precedents, yet they must admit ours too; and then they being both ways, either form is good: though by the way I must observe, that the forms of the Register cannot be altered, but by act of parliament.

Sir

Sir Joseph Jekyll, Master of the Rolls. That is certainly so, and therefore if this form be warranted by the Register and the precedents, I think nothing can be stronger. This court is still the Court of Chancery of England; it is the Great Seal's being the Great Seal of Great Britain, which occasions the bills to be directed to the Chancellor of Great Britain.

I think there would have been no clashing of jurisdictions, if the special reservation had been omitted. The 19th article is a covenant, that the jurisdiction of Scotland shall remain notwithstanding the Union; and as it preserves the former jurisdiction to Scotland, so it excludes the English jurisdiction from extending itself thither.

Parker, Lord Chancellor. The words ubicunque fuerit were as large as possible, and when Calais was part of England might extend to that, though the subject would not be bound to appear there. But when you go to explain it, it must be right; therefore in Magna Britannia is certainly wrong. All the powers of this court flow from the Great Seal, which though it is now made the Great Seal of Great Britain, yet the act has not made the Chancery so. The powers of the Chancery, as a Court, are in private property; and the articles excluding that, the Chancery as a court of private property cannot be there. All contempts of this court will be discharged, if this form should not be established. In the case of Bewdly I thought the objection was very strong, but it was got over for the necessity of the thing, and not barely for the sake of uniformity: and this case and that are both in the same reason. The defendants must answer over. Respondes ouster agard.

cancy, to which the dean and chapter are required to admit Dr. Sherlock. They return, that King Edward the Sixth, by letters patent, 7 November, first year of his reign, erected the deanery and chapter of Norwich into a corporation, and endowed the church, and gave them perpetual succession. That neither he, nor Queen Mary or Queen Elizabeth, ever made any statutes for the government of the corporation. But King James, by a body of statutes ordained, that as often as there should be any vacancy, the dean and chapter should admit such person as the King should nominate under the great seal. And further (which is the clause upon which the question arises) that none should be admitted to be dean or prebendary, who before was prebendary of any other cathedral church. And that these are the statutes which they have sworn to observe. And for that Dr. Sherlock is dean of Chichester, and a prebendary of St. Paul's, they refuse to admit him; et ob nullam aliam causam.

Reeve argued that the return was insufficient, and for a peremptory mandamus. The letters patent being confirmed by act of parliament, we are now as it were upon the construction of a statute, and as if every part of those letters patent was incorporated into the body of the act. And as such it is of force enough to repeal and annul all former ordinances or usages contrary to or inconsistent with it. So that whatever questions might arise upon the letters patent, if they stood barely upon their own strength, and how far they would prevail to set aside and controul the local statutes of King James, will be intirely out of the case.

It will not be denied, but here is an expresse intention to unite the mastership of Catherine Hall and this prebend in one and the same person for ever, and that Dr. Sherlock is to be the first person in whom this provision is to take effect. But what they insist upon is, that he is a person incapable to enjoy this prebend under the local statutes. I admit he is, if those statutes are in force; which I have shewn they are not. But then they say, our letters patent have in this particular affirmed the former law, for they only require the admission to be prout mos est, which mos is mos ecclesie the constitution of our church, and that constitution obliges us to refuse any person, who is at that time prebendary of any other church. So that prout mos est is as much as to say, that the master of Catherine Hall shall be admitted, if he be capable according to the constitution.

But this is going too far, if we consider where those words come in. The letters patent say, that Dr. Sherlock and his successors, masters of Catherine Hall, shall be habiles et in lege capaces, to hold and enjoy this prebend, and upon every vacancy

mandantes et requirentes the dean and chapter to admit them accordingly, prout mos est, in the usual form.

The oath in which the dean and chapter are bound to observe the former statutes, is of no force, now those statutes are repealed.

It is considerable, that as Dr. Sherlock is the first named, if he should be held incapable, whether this provision can ever take effect, and whether his successors will not be in the case of remainder men without any particular estate. No body can take if the doctor cannot; and must this prebend be in perpetual abeyance, which may happen to be the case, for his successors may be dignified as well as himself. And in this case it is not denied, but that he is master of Catherine Hall, and as such he is intitled to this prebend.

Reynolds Serjeant contra. We do not in this case debate the validity of the grant, but only offer to excuse our non-admittance. Nor do we rely upon the words prout mos est, it is but expressio eorum quæ tacite insunt, and when the office is given to Dr. Sherlock, he will be intitled to be admitted without that clause.

This is a common appropriation, and by it all the local statutes expressly contradictory to it will be repealed, as if they had disabled every master of a college, and then the other had come and said, the master of Catherine Hall shall be prebendary. But what I contend for is, that the subsequent provision meddles not with any collateral incapacities, such as Dr. Sherlock lies under by being prebendary of another church. Suppose he should refuse to subscribe, as the 14 Car. 2. c. 14. requires; it is true he would have a right to the preferment as master of Catherine Hall, but before he gets possession of it, he must remove his incapacity. And here I admit, if he resigns his other prebend, he will be intitled to be admitted. So that this is only a personal disability, arising from his own act, from which he may free himself whenever he pleases. Suppose he had been able at the time of the statute, so as then the local statutes would not be affected; shall his subsequent acceptance of a prebend amount immediately to a repeal of the former provision. [161]

As to the offices' being in abeyance, there is no need for that. Dr. Sherlock is intitled whenever he renders himself capable, and till then the 28 H. 8. c. 11. has given the profits of vacant benefices to the next incumbent.

they only adjudge him likely to become chargeable; whereas a certificate-man is not removeable, till he becomes actually so. And though the order of Sessions states, That he asked relief of the parish; yet one order shall not be made good by another, no more than it can by matter alledged in the return. To which it was answered, that if the order of two justices is to stand by itself, then it will be well enough; for it is a general order of removal, wherein no notice is taken of his being a certificate-man, and therefore likely is sufficient. Besides, that order is intirely out of the case, for the special matter being referred to the court, they are to judge upon that only. Quod fuit concessum per curiam. Then it was moved to quash the special order, because though the man came into Eastwoodhay with a certificate, yet the enjoyment of the copyhold for five years, during which time he was not removeable, had gained him a settlement there. On the other side it was said, That the 9 & 10 W. 3. c. 11. having provided, that a certificate-man shall not gain a settlement, unless he takes 10 l. per annum, or serves a parish office; and that being an explanatory act, which is not to be explained; therefore this man not coming within either of those cases, was notwithstanding the descent of the copyhold to his wife, removeable upon his becoming a charge to the parish. Et per Curiam: This is not an explanatory, but a new law, and must therefore receive a liberal construction. The exceptions in the statute prove this case, being a case more reasonable than either that are there mentioned. If a certificate man by taking 10 l. per annum gains a settlement, a fortiori shall he that has an estate of his own, especially in this case, where he does not come to it by act of his own, (which might savour of fraud) but it is cast upon him by the act and operation of law. If he that serves a parish office gains a settlement upon account of his presumed ability, with greater reason shall he that has ability of his own visible to all the world. It has been already adjudged, that any other person by the descent or purchase of a freehold or copyhold, or by becoming intitled to a lease for years, gains a settlement; and it cannot be supposed the parliament intended to put a certificate-man in a worse condition. The value of the copyhold is not material, for it is its being his own makes him not removeable. A man must take a tenement of 10 l. per annum, to gain a settlement; but yet he may come to settle upon a tenement of his own, though of ever so small a value. This man therefore being for five years irremoveable from Eastwoodhay, has gained a good settlement there, and the order to remove him from thence must be quashed.

They being at the same time indebted to them for other goods. 18th of May following Cripps and Quarme, without the knowledge of the defendants, sent divers silks (the same sent down in April) to Mr. Penballow at Penryn for the use of the defendants. June the 4th Cripps and Quarme became bankrupts. June the 6th they wrote a letter to the defendants, signifying their affairs were in a declining condition; and thinking it not reasonable, the last parcel of goods should go to satisfy their other creditors; therefore they had not entered them in their books, but left them with Penballow, who had orders to deliver them to the defendants. June the 9th a commission of bankruptcy issued, and the effects were assigned to the plaintiff. June the 13th the defendants received the letter, which was the first notice they had of the delivery to Penballow, and as soon as possible they signified their consent to take the goods again. *v. Reeve pro querente. The bankrupts had undoubtedly a good property in the goods by the sale made the 7th of April. That is a point I need not labour. But the question now to be considered is, whether any thing appears, to divest that property, before the act of bankruptcy. I shall maintain the negative of this question. The goods it is true were delivered for the use of the defendants, but that delivery was without their knowledge. They were not obliged to accept them, and therefore before acceptance the property could not be altered, and the bankrupts might have countermanded that delivery. If instead of sending them to Penballow, they had kept them in their own hands, till an answer to the letter; would that have altered the property? Certainly it would not. This letter can amount to no more than a proposal, and therefore the subsequent consent (if it has any retrospect) can only have relation to the time of the proposal, which was two days after the act of bankruptcy. Though the delivery is stated to be to the use of the defendants, yet it does not appear to be in satisffaction of the precedent debt; so there is no consideration, and then the delivery is fraudulent as to creditors. 1 Mod. 76.

Darnall Serjeant contra. By the delivery to Penballow the property was altered before acceptance, and the bankrupt could not countermand it; for there was a good consideration, viz. in satisfaction of the debt; and this is explained by not entering it in their books, and their unwillingness that the other creditors should come into an average for these goods. This does not take effect as a gift, but as a satisfaction, and therefore not countermandable. Dy. 49. a. 2 Roll. Rep. 39. 2 Leon. 30. And since it cannot be countermanded, the person to whose use they were delivered, has an absolute property in them, till disagreement. 1 Roll. Abr. 32. pl. 13. Sty. 296. Yelv. 164. Cro. Jac. 667. Here was no disagreement, but as speedy a consent as possible.

Reeve. An accord executory is no satisfaction, before it is executed. It is admitted that a delivery without consideration may be countermanded, and I insist this is such; for the precedent debt is not merged, because the party could not plead this redelivery in bar of any action for the value of the goods, unless they actually were returned to the person who sold them, or he signified his consent, which was not done before the act of bankruptcy committed.

C. J. The question is, whether by the delivery to Penballow, without more, the property was altered; for if that delivery was countermandable, then the act of bankruptcy intervening before any assent of the defendants, will prevent the property from vesting in them. I think upon the circumstances, that there appears a sufficient consideration to toll a subsequent power of countermanding, and that this delivery was in satisfaction of the debt. It is true the bare delivery will not extinguish it, because he had a power to dissent; but yet according to Butler and Baker's case in the 3d Report, the absolute property passes, subject to a disagreement by one of the parties: the contract does not stand open till agreement, but is compleat, unless there be an actual disagreement. The consequence of all this is, that the delivery to Penballow to the use of the defendants, being before the act of bankruptcy, and founded upon a good consideration, transfers the absolute property to them, it being stated that they never disagreed. Powys J. accord'.

Fortescue J. Property by our law may be divested, without an actual delivery; as a horse sold in a stable. But it is otherwise by the civil law. A general bailment alters no property, but this is not such. It cannot be taken for a re-sale, for defect of contract; but it is properly a payment in satisfaction. It is most reasonable to apply it to discharge the debt, and not as a gift; for a man is just before he is kind: and since he paid it in satisfaction, we will intend an acceptance, till the contrary appears (1). Judicium pro defendentibus.

(1) All the reports of this case agree in making the ground of this determination to be, that the property was re-altered by the delivery to Panballow, prior to any assent by Barwick. But in Harman v. Fisher, Cowp. 117. Lord Mansfield said "that the judgment in this case was right, but the reasons were wrong; that the true ground was, that the trader refused to accept the goods and returned them." *Vide also Salte & al. v. Constable, with-act.

THE plaintiff's wife was taken up by warrant of a justice of peace, for assaulting the overseer of the parish, and assisting to the escape of a woman delivered of a bastard child. When she came before the justice, she could not find bail; but at her request he gave leave for her to lie that night at the constable's house, in order to get bail against the morning. Then one on her behalf demanded a copy of the commitment, which not being delivered, an action was brought upon the habeas corpus act. Et per Pratt, C. J. The questions are two, whether the defendant be an officer, and whether the plaintiff's wife was detained by virtue of any warrant within the meaning of the statute. As to the defendant, there is no doubt but a constable is within the act, but I do not think this action well brought. For the woman was not in his custody by virtue of any warrant; what warrant there was, was only to bring her before the justice, and that was fully executed by so doing; and the time she staid at the constable's after that, was not by virtue of any warrant or commitment, but at her own consent and desire, to remain under a voluntary custody: neither is this a case within the mischief of the statute which was indefinite commitments. The plaintiff was called. Then the defendant moved for treble costs, being a constable. But the Chief Justice would not certify, because this custody was not in execution of his office.

This bill is brought by the East India company, for a discovery of a private trade, suggested to have been carried on by the defendant and the other supercargoes of the Stinger galley, which was sent by the company in the year 1715 upon a voyage from hence to Canton in China, and thence to return to England.

They first offer to waive the penalties and forfeitures that he might incur by such discovery; and then they strengthen themselves by a covenant entered into by the defendant, by which he obliges himself to answer to any bill to be brought against him for any discovery in any court of equity, and not to plead the acts of parliament, which inflict those penalties and forfeitures.

Green v. Mearns
1 Simon 429

As to their waiving all penalties and forfeitures which might be incurred by the defendant by such discovery, we apprehend it is not in the power of the plaintiffs to indemnify us against them. Therefore I must take notice what discovery they pray.

They charge that the defendant and the other supercargoes agreed to receive on board several goods from the Thurston galley: that for that purpose the Stringer and the Thurston sailed together to the Downs, where the Stringer took on board such goods as had been agreed upon. That having so done, they proceeded to Canton, where they in a private manner disposed of those goods, and with the produce of them bought another cargo of goods, which they put on board the Stringer: that they appointed the Thurston to meet them in their return; but failing in that design they touched at Lisbon, and there sent away several parcels of these private goods: and other part was put on board the Succes. And after all this they met with the Lemmon at sea, on board which they put the remainder of the goods, and they were sent to Holland.

9 W. 3. c. 44.

6 Ann. c. 3.

We apprehend, if we are bound to answer this charge, we shall be subject to all the penalties appointed by the act 9 W. 3. which are loss of the ship, goods, and double value; and also of 6 Ann. against breaking bulk. By the act 9 W. 3. three fourths of the forfeitures are given to the company, and so far as that goes perhaps they may waive: but the other fourth and the ship, and the double value they have no pretence of a right to, or power to waive, that being given to the informer. Therefore to give some colour to this offer, there is an allegation in the bill, that the company is become the informer, and so they may waive the whole penalty.

To this it was objected the last time, that although it is alleged that they have informed, yet it is not set out where or when they informed, or for what goods. If they would have enabled themselves as informers, they ought to have shewn the information, and that it related to these goods, and these facts charged in the bill. The plaintiffs were so conscious of that, when a person on behalf of the defendant went, in order to have a sight of the information, and to see whether the company had a power to make such an offer, he was denied a sight of it. Therefore we think, that ought to be laid out of the case, and by consequence the waiving the forfeiture will go for nothing.

As to the penalties in 6 Ann. against breaking bulk, by which it is enacted, that all goods to be laden in the East Indies shall be brought to some port of Great Britain, and there unladen, and sold by the company at a publick sale by inch of candle: the penalty is forfeiture of the value of the goods, one moiety to the crown, the other to the informer or seizer. And they do not pretend a title to that forfeiture.

They endeavoured to evade that act, by saying it respected the company only, but not those that traded privately. But surely that cannot be the intent of the act, that when those who are licensed to trade to the East Indies are liable to these penalties, he that trades in a clandestine manner shall be in a better case. But to put that out of dispute, upon reading the words 6 Ann. it is enacted, "That all goods which shall be laden in " the East Indies upon any ship or vessel belonging to any of her " majesty's subjects with intent to be transported, shall be " brought to some port of Great Britain, and there be unladen;
" upon pain of forfeiture of all such goods, one moiety to the " queen, and the other to informer." So that if the defendant should be forced to make this discovery, he must be liable to the forfeitures in that act, and the waiver of the plaintiffs will not save him harmless.

Taking

Taking that to be so, we apprehend we are in the common case, that no court of equity will compel a defendant, to set forth any thing, that will subject him to penalties. But on the contrary a court of equity relieves against forfeitures. The plaintiffs being aware of this, have insisted upon a covenant, they have got the defendant into, that he would at his return to England, if required, answer upon oath to such bill as should be brought against him for a discovery, and not demur or plead in bar: and the company agree to waive the forfeitures, and accept of their damages, which amount to 90*l.* per cent. and are as much as the forfeitures.

This is the first of the kind that has come into a court of equity, and if it should be admitted, may be of dangerous consequence. I would observe, that we are not plaintiffs to be relieved against this covenant, though the manner of obtaining it is extraordinary. After these gentlemen had been taken into the company's service, and had prepared every thing for their voyage; then they must execute this covenant, or else be discharged. These are hard terms to be put upon any man, but it is what the company has practised. Then they are also to contract upon what terms they are to receive their wages; and though they go upon a trading voyage from port to port, and deliver their loading; yet there is a covenant, that if the ship miscarries in her return, they are to lose their wages. This covenant, as often as it has been brought in question, has been set aside (1).

The next thing I would observe is, the consideration given to these people for entering into this covenant, which is an undertaking on the company's part, that they shall not be subject to any forfeitures or penalties. That seems to be the consideration. But that is an undertaking, which the company cannot pretend to make good. And then the covenant is without consideration.

Besides, if the plaintiffs are to have any benefit of this covenant in a court of equity, it must be by praying a specifick performance of it. And there is always a difference taken, between a circumstance of fraud in order to set aside a covenant, and where there is room to decree a specifick performance of it.

It is objected, that a man may waive any benefit the law gives him, and enter into an agreement for that purpose. To this I answer, Those agreements have always been ill looked upon in a court of equity. Where a man gives a mortgage on his estate, with a covenant not to bring a bill to redeem; it cannot be pretended, but that notwithstanding such covenant, he may bring his bill, and the court will decree a redemption. Nay, though he confirms it with an oath, for so far Mr. Stifthead went as to take an oath from the mortgagor, and yet in that case the court decreed a redemption (2). Where a man borrows money upon a mortgage, and covenants that if he doth not pay the interest yearly, such interest shall carry interest; this seems to be a reasonable compensation to the party, for being disappointed of the receipt of his interest. And yet a court of equity will relieve against such a covenant (3). Though the party that enters into those covenants, may be said as much to forfeit or waive the benefit of a court of equity, as we have done in this case.

We apprehend the covenant to be of an extraordinary nature. It is, that a man shall not make part of his defence. That when he comes before the court, he shall not set forth the truth of his case. Indeed in a covenant to suffer a common recovery, there is an agreement what defence the parties shall make; but was it ever known in a court of equity, that a covenant to strip a man of his defence was allowed? If you can abridge a man of one part of his defence, why not of the whole? If this is good, it may be carried further, and you may have a covenant, that if a bill be brought, the defendant shall appear and make default, and the bill be taken pro confesso. And that will be a new step, and it will concern a court of equity to withstand all such attempts as this.

The covenant is, that he shall not plead the penalties and forfeitures; but what if he does plead? Is the court to pass over that part, where he has pleaded them? Will the court, upon an allegation of such a covenant pass over the merits of a cause? No, truly, they will rather go into them, in abhorrence of such a practice.

We cannot apprehend of what weight this covenant is in a court of equity. We do not know what a court of equity has to do with a covenant, unless it be executory; there a man may come to have a specifick performance of it: but can they pray a specifick performance of this covenant? He has covenanted, he will not plead, and yet he has pleaded. Is there any thing executory in this? They may take what advantage they can of this covenant at law, but a court of equity will add no weight to it, especially when it is to subject a man to a penalty, contrary to the business and intent of a court of equity, which is to relieve against penalties and forfeitures.

The rule in equity, that no defendant shall be compelled to subject himself to penalties and forfeitures, is founded on natural right and justice. It is a rule that has been observed inviolably without exception till this attempt. Therefore as we cannot be acquitted by the company from these forfeitures, it would be a monstrous thing for a court of equity to make us liable to them; and the rather in this case, because it is making a strain, upon an allegation of the company, and barely upon an apprehension that they have been injured by the defendants. Whereas it appears by the pleadings, that they never had a better voyage or more profitable return, for they made 200*l.* per cent. profit.

They surmise, that the goods put on board the Stringer galley by the defendants were of great value, and that their tonnage would amount to a great sum; whereas it appeared upon the survey, when the ship arrived in the river, that she was full loaden with the company's goods. So that their whole complaint seems to be conjectural and groundless, and has no oath to support it: or if there was any real ground for it, the plaintiffs may have their remedy at law. We do not come into this court to be relieved against this covenant; but for the plaintiffs to take from us our lawful defence, and thereby to subject us to forfeitures and penalties, there is no ground for it; and therefore we hope our plea shall be allowed.

Sir Thomas Powys contra. In order to remove the prejudice which the defendants have endeavoured to bring the company under, by representing them as imposing or requiring a very extraordinary covenant from them, I would observe, that the act 9 W. 3. has established an oath to be taken by members of the company, that they will not send to the East Indies any goods for their private account, contrary to that act. So that we are upon an act of parliament, and the covenants the company takes from their super-cargoes, is in pursuance and execution of that act; and there is nothing charged in this bill but what is forbidden by that act; for we ask them, Did not you carry more goods than the company allowed? Did you not, when you went out, make an agreement with the Thurston galley, that she should, at high sea, lay on board such and such goods? And so go on with the several parts of the fraud.

Now as to the outward voyage, the act of parliament inflicts no penalty, and only forbids all other persons, except such as by that act may trade, their servants or agents. The defendants are the agents of those persons who may trade thither, and not within the description of those who are by that act subjected to penalties for exporting goods to the East-Indies. Therefore as to the outward voyage, they are not within any of the penalties of that act.

But suppose these men should not be taken (with respect to these transactions) to be agents to the company, but to be persons within the act; yet by this act three fourths of the forfeitures are given to the company, and the other fourth to the informer; and the company having become informers are intitled to it: and it is so charged in the bill, that no information having been brought by any other person for the forfeitures, the company have preferred one in the Exchequer.

If that be so, we have three fourths by the act, and the other fourth as informers, and so may waive all the forfeitures. And then we are in the common case of a man that sues for tithes, he may waive the forfeiture; and bring a bill for a discovery. So a man may waive the penalties in the statute and have a discovery what timber has been cut. We therefore apprehend, that as to the outward bound voyage we have a right to call them to an account; and if so, they must answer a great part of our case, which is all the transactions relating to this fraud, from the time of their entering into our service, till their return. And yet the plea is general, and covers the whole, as well the outward as the home bound voyage.

[174] The home voyage falls under another consideration. For the statute 6 Anna taking notice, that there had been great frauds in breaking bulk, it provides that those who offend in that manner shall forfeit the ship and goods; one moiety to the informer, and the other moiety to the crown. And that stands upon the point of the covenant that has been spoken to, whether a man may not agree, that he will not commit a fraud.

As to the case of a mortgage, it is in its own nature redeemable, and a covenant contrary to the nature of it shall not be allowed. But may not a man covenant that he will not disturb a purchaser?

purchaser? This covenant is only to prevent a fraud, and detect it if committed.

And this agreement is upon a good consideration, for it is the foundation upon which the defendant is let into so considerable a profit. The consideration of the covenant is, that the company allows them those profits mentioned in the bill; so that it is both a lawful covenant, and for a valuable consideration.

Then it is a covenant that goes along with a trust, which no man would put in another, without a power to come to the knowledge how it is discharged; for these dealings lie in the knowledge of the defendants only, and cannot come to the knowledge of the company, without a discovery from the defendants. It is a trust to be executed on board a ship, and at sea; and therefore necessary to be guarded by some reasonable provision. It is not like a covenant to have interest upon interest, for a man has a recompence by simple interest. And interest upon interest is what the law will not allow of. But this covenant does not hinder any man of his right, but only prevents a fraud.

It is said a man has a right to plead, but may not a man renounce that right? He may in the case of tithes, and may not a man renounce part of his defence? May not I take a covenant, that a man shall give a judgment by default, and release of errors? And may I not come into a court of equity and compel a performance of that covenant? In the case of a covenant to suffer a common recovery, will not the court decree a performance?

It is true, that in ordinary cases a man has liberty to plead, where he may be subjected to penalties. But then a man may waive it. And it is agreeable to the known maxims volenti non fit injuria, and consensus tollit errorem. If a man will waive any particular manner of defending himself, why may he not?

The case is no more than this; I have made an agreement whereby I am to be honest, but I will also have an opportunity to get more than I ought. I have made a contract that is not convenient for me to perform, it is fit for me to have the profit allowed me by the company, but for me to perform my part of the covenant is no ways convenient. That is to say, I have played the knave, and therefore it is not convenient for me to perform this covenant, by discovering in what manner.

The

The question therefore is, which of the parties shall suffer. Shall the company suffer, who have performed their covenant? Shall they be stripped, and the defendant go off with the profit? Or shall the defendant suffer (if he calls it so) for his own misbehaviour, if he has misbehaved himself? I apprehend, that to take from us the means of coming at a satisfaction, is to take away the satisfaction itself. He that disseises me of the water that should come to my mill, disseises me of my mill.

The covenant is, that they shall not trade, and if they do, the company shall have so much per ton, and so much damages, which comes to 90 l. per cent. and this is said to be an extravagant recompence. Now they say, they have made 200 l. per cent. profit for the company; and if so, no doubt but they have made as good profit for themselves; and all the company is to have is but 90 l. per cent. and they carry off the rest.

They say we may take our remedy at law. But the very covenant is, that we shall have a satisfaction in this court. If we were to go to law, how could we recover there? How could we prove what goods they carried out? Let us but have a discovery of that here, and the measure of the damages is already settled between us. And this is the very point that was in view, when the covenant was made; that if they carried out any such goods, they should make such a recompence as was agreed upon. And nothing has happened since the covenant, to alter the nature of it, as some times it falls out.

It is very considerable, that this thing should be settled between us; for if this plea should stand, it may be the overthrowing the act of parliament and the company too. As for what they say, that it is a new thing; it is quite otherwise, it is the constant article they make with all their supercargoes.

[176] Parker, Lord Chancellor. As to the offer made by the bill to waive penalties and forfeitures; though it is said that the company have informed in the court of Exchequer, yet they have not set forth the term wherein the information was made, nor the particulars for which the information was. But the defendant is to take their words, that there is such an information, without knowing where to go to the record. Where a man sets forth, he is intitled to penalties as informer, and waives them; he ought not only to say that he has informed, but to set it out, that it may appear to the court, that he has done so. Like pleading a former suit depending, it must be pleaded so, that it may appear to the court, of what term it is, and that it is for the same cause.

There

There is another point, which I think the plea does not cover; for though the defendant is charged to be concerned in those facts, yet it is laid in the disjunctive, that the defendants or some of them: he might have said, that he did not know that any other of the defendants had done any of those things: and if they had done them, and he was to have a share with them; yet if they only did them, they only would be subject to the penalties.

As to the main point, this covenant is to be considered as relating to a matter which must in a great measure lie in the defendant's knowledge. Therefore it is impossible for the plaintiffs to hope for a satisfaction, if they cannot get a discovery. They may come to the knowledge of some things, but it is morally impossible they should come to know all, without a discovery of the defendant.

In the next place, if the defendant has been guilty of a fraud, it is a prejudice to the plaintiffs, and the defendant ought to make a recompence, by reason of that trust they put in him, and by means whereof he had the opportunity of doing that wrong. Therefore from the nature of the trust, and the difficulty for the plaintiffs to come at the knowledge of these transactions, it is reasonable they should have a discovery.

But if this covenant is against law, it must not take place. It is said it is against the nature of a covenant, to restrain a court of justice, and to strip a man of his defence.

I think it is not a covenant to restrain the court from doing justice, but to enable the court to do it. It is a covenant, that the truth of the case, and the whole case, shall be laid before the court. There is a great deal of difference in the nature of the defence, upon an answer, or upon a plea: the plea is not a defence to the justice of the cause, but to the inquiry; that the defendant may keep back part of the truth from the court. Therefore it is not like the case of a covenant not to bring a bill to redeem, for a mortgage is an estate made to a person on condition to be void on payment. If the money be not paid, the estate is absolute at law; but the business of a court of equity is, to let him in to redeem. A covenant to the contrary doth not alter the nature of the security; it still continues a security for money as it was before, and is in its own nature redeemable. Such a covenant is to restrain a court from doing what is right and equitable, and is therefore void.

What

What is the defence in this case? It is, that the defendant is not bound to discover what will subject him to a penalty. It is insisting, that the plaintiffs have no right to demand that discovery. It is a negative privilege, that is allowed by the law, that a man may, if he please, refuse to discover a matter that will subject him to penalties; it is only a privilege, not a natural right, for then he would shake that natural right whenever he thought fit to make such discovery (4). If a man will waive such a privilege, surely he may; it is not a thing prohibited by the law. But the reason why he is not obliged to discover, is a want of right in the other party to oblige him to it. But if he will make a discovery he may, nor is any rule of justice or natural right broke by it. Is it unjust, that the whole case should be laid before the court? If the party has not done any thing contrary to his duty, an answer can do him no harm; and why should not this court carry it so far, when there can be no prejudice, unless the party is a knave? And if he be one, shall a court of equity protect him? I am (says he) so fair in the matter, that I will give you a right to examine me. The sending them to law would be to no purpose, for the damages are to be measured by the goods carried out, and without a discovery there is no knowing the quantum. The plea must be over-ruled, and the defendants must answer.

Dominus Rex vers. Inhabitantes Civitatis Norwici.

The king, by letters patents, may enlarge the boundaries of a city. B. R. has concurrent jurisdiction with the sessions about repairing bridges.

Information for not repairing three publick bridges called Hartford bridges, lying within the county of the city of Norwich, leading from the market-crofs to Ipswich; and sets out that they are out of repair, and that it cannot be found that any person or body politick is bound by tenure or otherwise to repair them, and therefore the inhabitants of the county of the city are bound by the statute: notwithstanding which they have not repaired them, but suffer them to continue in decay.

A. New Sarum

Rev Brecon 15. QB. 822.

Jacob Robins and Samuel Fremoult, two of the inhabitants of the city and county of the city, come in the name of all the inhabitants of the city, and plead Not guilty. Then the record takes notice by way of suggestion, that the question is between the citizens of Norwich and the inhabitants of the county of Norfolk, and they being interested, there can be no indifferent trial had had there," and Suffolk being in the next county, the venire is awarded thither: and at the trial the jury find this special verdict.

That the city of Norwich is an ancient city, and has been, time out of mind, a county of itself, distinct from the county of Norfolk. That the three bridges were, at the time of making the statute 22 H. 8. c. 5. within the county of Norfolk, and not within the county of the city of Norwich. That Philip and Mary, 1 April, second of their reign, reciting the many inconveniences which had happened by not knowing the true bounds and limits of the county of the city, severed such an extent of ground from the county of Norfolk, and annexed it to the city. That the three bridges are within the annexed boundaries, which are made to extend usque ad Harford bridge, which is the farthest of the three. That they are publick bridges, and no particular person bound to repair them. That they are out of repair: but whether the inhabitants of the county of the city are bound to repair them, is the doubt of the jury, upon which they pray the advice of the court. Et si, &c.

Reynolds Serjeant pro rege made three points. 1. Whether the king can make a county of a city, or enlarge the boundaries of a prescriptive city, and make the enlargements parcel of it. 2. Admitting he may, whether the enlarged part shall be considered as parcel of the old city, so as to charge them with repairing within the 22 H. 8. 3. Whether in this case the farthest bridge be within the bounds of the enlargements.

1. As to the first question, there is no doubt, but that the king may enlarge the boundaries of any city. Most of the cities of England are instances of the execution of such a power, and it has been generally done by charter, which was esteemed sufficient, without an act of parliament. This city of Norwich was so made at one time or other, for in Bradley's Treatise of Cities and Boroughs it is mentioned as a borough, and part of the county of Norfolk. Henry the Seventh made Ghester a county of itself, as appears by 4 Inst. 215. 4 Co. 33. a.

Popham 17.
Ander. 291.
Doug. 763.

2. Taking it then, that the king can enlarge any city, the next question is, where the charge of repairing bridges within such enlargement lies. The statute lays no absolute charge, till the bridges are in decay; so that when the statute was made, though these bridges were within the county of Norfolk, yet as they were not in decay, the statute had no operation upon them, before they were annexed to the city of Norwich. If an hundred were to be made at this day, the statute of Hue and Cry would take place within it. So the prerogative of the king in collating to a benefice void by the promotion of the incumbent to a bishoprick extends to a new created parish, as was resolved in Dr. (a) 1 Show. 413. Birch's case in Shower (a), where there are many instances of this nature.

3. The third point is, whether one of the bridges be within the annexed bounds; the words are usque ad pontem de Hatford ad exteriorem partem rivi; and that will take it in. There is a great difference, where usque ad is used to terminate a way, and where it is only used as a mark or designation of any conspicuous place. Calvin in his Lexicon Juridicum, says usque ad is sometimes inclusivis nota.

It is objected, that the defendants having pleaded the general issue could give nothing in evidence, but that the bridges are in repair; and therefore that the trial should have been in Norfolk. To this I answer, that generally it is so, as 2 Lev. 112. 1 Sid. 140. 1 Keb. 498. 1 Mod. 112. 3 Keb. 301. because prima facie the inhabitants are chargeable; and if they would discharge themselves, they must do it by special pleading, and not upon the general issue, for the charge on the inhabitants is a common law charge, 2 Inst. 701. 1 Vent. 256. But these defendants were not chargeable de communi jure, but the county of Norfolk was; so that they are not obliged to find out who ought to repair, as they are when prima facie the charge lies upon them. They might contest the right with the county of Norfolk upon the general issue (as indeed they did) and therefore it was proper to carry it into Suffolk, the next county. Vaugh. 303. 2 Roll. Abr. 576. Cro. Eliz. 664. Gob. 420. Palm. 100.

Raby contra. This information is grounded upon the statute, now the statute gives the jurisdiction to the sessions, and where a statute prescribes a particular method, that must be followed. Cro. Jac. 643. 2 Roll. Rep. 398. 4 Mod. 144. 2 Inst. 702. 704.

2. The city and county of the city must be taken to be distinct; and if so, then the citizens only have appeared, for the appearance is in nomine omnium inhabitantium civit' Norwici, and then the issue is not well joined.

3. It is a mis-trial, it should have been in Norfolk. That is the next county, and intirely disinterested; for the only question on this issue is, whether the bridges be in repair, for that only can be given in evidence on Not guilty. 1 Vent. 256. 1 Mod. 112. And on the record it appears not to be a trial in the next county; for the venire is awarded to Suffolk as the next county.

Norfolk

Norfolk excepted, and there the trial should have been. 1 Inst. 125. 155. 1 Roll. Rep. 28. Dy. 279. 2 Roll. Abr. 596, 597.

I agree, the king may annex land to a city or county in point of jurisdiction, but not in point of charge; for as to that it still continues parcel of the old county. Usque ad is exclusive of one of the bridges. As if I prescribe for common usque ad Michaelmas-day, I have no right of common upon Michaelmas-day.

Reynolds replied. The charge to repair is at common law, and upon that this information is founded. The statute gives a concurrent, but not an exclusive jurisdiction, for here are no negative words, nor is this a new offence made by the statute, and upon those grounds it is that the cases went. As to the fault in the appearance, which was designed as a trick, the inhabitants of the city and of the county of the city are all one, for they are commensurate. It is absurd to say the jurisdiction of the county shall be abridged in point of interest, and not in point of charge. The city has the land annexed to them, et transit cum onere.

C. J. They who are not chargeable of common right, may discharge themselves upon Not guilty: and if so, the trial was well in Suffolk. If they could only give reparation in evidence, then it ought to have been in Norfolk. There is no doubt but the information lies in this case; and as to the appearance, we may take them to be the same persons. It seems to me that the farthest bridge is included, for it extends ad exteriorem partem rivi. There is nothing in that notion about distinguishing between jurisdiction and charge, for certainly both must go together.

Eyre J. inclined, that the trial was right in Suffolk, upon the distinction taken by Reynolds. Sed adjournatur to be further argued. And at another day.

Reeve pro rege. First exception: That no information lies in B. R. because the 22 H. 8. gives the jurisdiction to four justices. Cro. Jac. 643. 2 Roll. Rep. 398. 4 Mod. 144. Answer. I agree those cases, for there the statute makes a new offence, and chalks out a particular method; but this was an offence at common law, and the statute does not give an exclusive, but only a concurrent jurisdiction. Here are no negative words, though if there were, it has been held that negative words shall not take away the jurisdiction of this court. 1 Sid. 359. 2 Keb. 340. 11 Co. 64.

Second exception. They say this cannot be taken to be an information at common law, because it lays, that the defendants debent reparare virtute, &c. and concludes contra formam statuti. Answer. Such a conclusion will not make it an information upon the statute; for nothing is here alledged, but what the common law said before; and so it has been resolved Cro. El. 148. Cro. Car. 340. 2 Roll. Abr. 82. pl. 6. If a statute should add circumstances to a common law offence, yet the indictment need not conclude contra formam statuti. 1 Vent. 13. 1 Sid. 409. 2 Keb. 479.

Third exception. The information is against the inhabitants of the county of the city, and the appearance for those of the city only. Answer. Throughout the whole record the inhabitants of the city and county of the city are taken notice of to be the same. The bounds of the city and county of the city are generally the same. 1 Roll. Abr. 803. pl. 6.

These are all the exceptions taken to the information and proceedings. I come now to the special verdict, upon which two points have been raised.

1. Whether these bridges are within the annexed boundaries, for the defendants say that usque being terminus ad quem, and a terminus a quo, all the bridges are excluded. There can be no dispute but that two of the bridges are included. The question turns upon the third, usque ad pontem de Harford ad exteriorem partem rivi: this usque ad is only used to shew the circumference, for the other words take in the river. Now if it be taken exclusively, then the whole breadth of the bridge all round must be excluded: words have been taken inclusively according to the subject matter. 5 Co. 7. 103. 111. 6 Co. 62. 67. 1 Vent. 292. 3 Keb. 594. 3 Leon. 211. The bridges were only mentioned as notorious places.

2. They say here is a mis-trial, for on Not guilty the defendants could give nothing in evidence, but that the bridges are in repair, and therefore the trial should have been in Norfolk. Answer. Defendants by not denying our suggestion, have admitted the question to be, whether the city or county ought to repair. The cases cited of the other side are only, that the person chargeable de communi jure shall not give evidence, that another is bound ratione tenure, but that is not our case. If a parish be indicted for not repairing a highway, you must prove it to be a highway, that it lies within the parish and that it is out of repair; and if there be a failure in either of these, the defendants endants must be acquitted. 9 H. 6. 62. Bro. General Issue 52, 53. 94. 34 H. 6. 43. Show. 270.

Branthwayte Serjeant contra. I shall speak only to the point of the mis-trial, and upon the information.

As to the first: no admission of the parties can alter the law. It must appear to the court, that the question is of such a nature, as to draw the trial out of the proper county. 2 Cro. 597. Hardr. 311. Here the only question is, whether the city of Norwich is bound to repair, for they cannot throw it any where else, without special pleading. 3 Keb. 301. 1 Mod. 112. 3 Keb. 370. 2 Roll. Abr. 597. pl. 1.

Secondly, I agree the information would have laid as at common law, if that method had been pursued; but here they make it a statute offence, and therefore they ought to have pursued the statute remedy.

The whole court were unanimous for the King upon all the points, but the mis-trial. As to which the C. J. Powys and Eyre were of opinion, it was well in Suffolk: for the question naturally arises, whether the bridges are in Norfolk or Norwich; and the result of that is, that either the one or the other is bound to repair; and Not guilty puts all in issue: there was no other way to make this appear upon record, but by suggestion; which not being denied, it is as well as if it had appeared by special pleading. And it shall not be in the power of the defendants, to dis-appoint the King of a proper trial, by their refusing to plead specially. Fortescue J. contra, thought the right ought not to be tried in this issue. Et sic adjournatur.

The cause came now to be spoke to upon the single point of the mis-trial.

The general issue goes to the situation as well as repair of bridges where the charge is of common right.

Chefbyre Serjeant pro rege. The defendants in this case might put us to prove, in what county these bridges lie; and then the right of repair is a consequence, wherefore the trial is right in Suffolk. They could not safely plead the special matter, because it will amount to the general issue, and so be demurrable. 34 H. 6. 28. 43. Bro. Issue 53. 18 H. 6. 21. Fitzh. Action sur stat. 4. 19 H. 8, 9. 2 Roll. Abr. 683. The defendants might have proved these to be private bridges on Not guilty. 1 Vent. 256. The resolution of the case of the (b) King v. Inhab. Hornsey was contrary to the opinion of Holt C. J. in Show. 270. for Eyre, Dolbin and Gregory denied the distinction, though the reporter takes no notice of it. Mich. 8 W. 3. Rex v. Inhab. Ireton.

(b) Fort. 254.
4 Mod. 38.
12 Mod. 13.
Holt 338.

The reason of this suggestion was to prevent delay, and is therefore to be favoured, since it hinders the defendant from challenging. If he confesses (as he has done here) the truth of the suggestion; then he is estopped: if he denies it, that denial is entered of record, and after that he shall never come and alledge that matter as a fault. There is no other way to come at the truth of this fact, but by putting him to confess or deny it, for it is not a matter issuable, Tri. per Pais 140. Plow. 74. b. 10 H. 6. 54. 14 H. 6. 2. Nient dedire amounts to a confession, though it does not go on, fore verum concedit, as some of the entries are: this confession is as much an estoppel, as in Salk. 310. where an executor suffered judgment by default, and then was estopped to say he had no assets.

Pengelly Serjeant contra. The matter of this suggestion does not warrant the award of the venire into Suffolk. It is not averred the county of Norfolk is concerned, but only by way of conclusion, ideoque, which is not supported by the premises. I agree the situation might have been contested at the trial. The court might have refused this suggestion, as was done in Delme's case. So 2 Roll. Abr. 597. pl. 1. If the jury had come out of Norfolk, we could not have challenged the array. Hard. 311. Case for disturbing the plaintiff in taking the profits of a judge of the sheriff's court in London: on Not guilty, it was suggested, that the office was grantable by the mayor and aldermen, and prayed the venire to the next county. But Hale C. J. refused to award it, because it did not appear by necessary collection from the record, that the title of the mayor and aldermen to fill up this place would come in question. Though the situation may come in question, yet that does not determine the right; for the defendants will be acquitted without trying the right, so that is not a matter within the extent of this suggestion. Besides, this is of a matter of law, whereas suggestions should be of matters of fact only. Co. Ent. 59, 60. 2 Roll. Abr. 597. pl. 8. 1 Vent. 58. 90. Quo warranto 28. Nient dedire alone is not a confession. Cre. Jac. 547. Dy. 367. pl. 40.

C. J. since it is admitted, the situation may come in question; that will by way of consequence determine the other point, who ought to repair; and therefore the trial could not be in Norfolk. I take nient dedire to be as much a confession, as cognovit actionem. The matter of law in the suggestion arises necessarily out of the matter of fact, and without it, would not be compleat. To which Powys J. agreed. Et per Eyre J. On Not guilty, the defendant may controvert every thing the prosecutor is bound to prove. He is bound to prove, where the bridges lie, and therefore Norfolk was an improper county. If a man would discharge himself himself upon a particular account, he must plead it specially; but not where the common right is his defence. If a man is charged to repair ratione tenuræ, he may throw it upon the parish by the general issue. The same suggestion was made in Sir Richard Onslow's case, and no exception taken. There is judgment entered in that case of Hornsey, Pas. 2 W. & M. rot. 31. and in the debate, as I find in my notes, Holt C. J. said, the defendants might shew it not to be a highway.

Fortescue J. thought, parcel or not parcel, could not be given in evidence on Not guilty; for 1 Mod. 112. Hale C. J. said, Not guilty goes only to the repair or not; so that as to all other questions the defendant must plead specially. And Parker C. J. held so, Mich. 10 Ann. There being three Judges to one, Judicium pro rege.

Between the Parishes of New Windsor and White Waltham.

JOH N Piffey, being legally settled in the parish of White Waltham, where he had lived two years with a woman who was reputed his wife, went with a certificate from White Waltham, owning them as man and wife, into the parish of New Windsor, where they had six children. Then the man dies, and the woman swearing they had never been married, the justices adjudge the children to be bastards, and settled in New Windsor where they were born.

Certificate concludes the parish that gives it as to all facts therein mentioned (1).

 Foley 197, S. C.

Reeve moved to quash the order, because the evidence of the mother ought not to be admitted, and because the certificate was conclusive to the parish of White Waltham, to say they were not man and wife. For as no parish can refuse a certificate-man, therefore whatever is the import of that certificate must be binding, else it would be hard to get rid of such people.

Yorke contra. It is a rule, that bastards are settled where born; and I believe it will not be pretended, that the bastard of a certificate-man can be sent back with him. But the only question will be, whether the legitimacy of the marriage could come in question at the sessions. As to the exception about the mother's evidence, I take it not to be material in this court, what evidence the sessions went upon. If the justices give an insufficient reason for their adjudication, yet that is no ground to quash the order. Their adjudication, that such a place is the place of the last legal settlement, is conclusive to this court, though they shew in the face of the order an act which in law will not gain a settlement; for they, and they only, are judges of the fact, and this court only declares the law arising from that fact. If a jury finds not only the fact, but the evidence of it; yet you put the evidence out of the case, without determining whether it be sufficient or not, and adjudge upon the fact only. The mother's evidence is good, for she is a stranger quoad the parish. Salk. 478.

As to the certificate, that cannot enure by estoppel as a deed. The sessions are quasi a jury, and not bound by estoppels. 4 Co. 53. b. Salk. 276. Adjournatur; and the last day of the term the Chief Justice delivered the opinion of the court.

to dispute the validity of the marriage, and therefore the six children, being actually chargeable to New Windsor, must be sent back to White Waltham. There is no doubt but the bastard of a certificate-man is settled in the place of his birth, for he is not such an issue as will follow the settlement of his father or mother, neither is he his or her child within the intention of the statute, so as to be sent back with the parent.

Sufficient to charge a man to repair, ratione tenura, without sue.

Indictment for not repairing a highway, which the defendant was obliged to do ratione tenura of a certain house, which in another place is mentioned to be the mansion-house of the defendant.

Yorke objected, that by 5 H. 7. 3. it appears that the occupier and not the owner is chargeable to repairs of the highway, and therefore the indictment should have been ratione tenura sua, for it may be this house is let to another, and cited Noy. 93. Lat. 206.

Et per curiam, (upon consideration) there is no necessity to lay it so, for ratione tenura implies it to be such a tenure, as makes him chargeable. And so it was held 1 Vent. 331. Rex v. Fanshaw, which is entered Mich. 29 Car. 2. rot. 12. There he was charged ratione tenura quorundam terrarum et tenementorum, and the exception was taken, for want of suorum, and the indictment held well enough. jurisdiction. And if there be a defect of jurisdiction appearing in the libel, then the party never comes too late, for the sentence and all other proceedings are a mere nullity (1). But where the spiritual court has an original jurisdiction, which is to be taken from them upon account of some matter arising in the suit, as for defect of trial; there after sentence the party shall never have a prohibition, because he himself has acquiesced in their manner of trial, which is a waiver of the benefit of a common law trial. It is true, these words appear to be spoke in London, but how does the custom of London appear to us? There is nothing of that in the libel, and though we have such a private knowledge of it, that upon motion we do not put the party to produce an affidavit, because the other side never disputes it; yet we cannot judicially take notice of it, and if any body will insist on an affidavit, we must have it in every case (2). It was never known, that the court judicially takes notice of private customs, but they are always specially returned. Mich. 9 Ann. Stone v. Fowler. There was a prescription for the parishioners to repair the fences of the church-yard, and after sentence they came and suggested, that the rector was bound to those repairs, and that the spiritual court, in as much as the prescription was not admitted, had no power to proceed; but the court held they came too late after sentence (3). Martin

Res. r. hilt. of. fil. 7. 9. 532.

Martin moved to quash the order, for the uncertainty whether the husband or wife came into the parish, it being in the singular, when it should have been in the plural number; and cited Salk. 122. where an order of two justices was doth, and quashed. Trin. 11 Ann. Regina v. Ingham, insultum fecit against two defendants, and held ill. 2 Keb. 51.

Hussey contra. The singular number will serve for husband and wife, though for no others. The case of an indictment will not govern this, for that is always construed strictly, but these have a liberal construction. Nor is the case in Salkeld at all applicable, for there the fault was in the adjudication itself, but here it is only in the complaint. I see no more necessity to shew them in the parish, than there is to say did not take 10 l. per annum, or serve a parish office which is never required. But if it be necessary, it appears sufficiently upon the whole order. It is said, endeavouring to settle themselves, and that they are likely to become chargeable, and then they are ordered to be removed from the parish. Et per Pratt, C. J. I do not think it necessary to shew they came in, but only an endeavour to settle; for that may be where the party never came in, as the case of children born in one parish, when the settlement of the parent is in another. But if it were necessary, it is implicitly set forth, which in the complaint is sufficient. To which Powys and Eyre Justices agreed. Et per Fortescue J. The only two things requisite for the Justices to adjudge, is the place of the last legal settlement, and that the party is likely to become chargeable. And these must be positive, though as to the complaint it is well enough to take it by implication. This is not false grammar, as doth was in West's case (a) for it is common for Latin authors to put the singular number, where there are two nominative cases. Horace says, Detur nobis locus, hora. If it were necessary to strain a point, we might refer is to the husband, and then the wife will follow of course. of nature, it was found necessary to establish it by act of parliament, and that can be extended no farther than the law of nature went before, and the law of nature does not reach to this case. As to the case in 1 Bulst. it is plain the word not was left out only by mistake, for the sense of the clause leads you to read it not obliged, and besides the judges were divided. The case indeed in 2 Bulst. is an authority in point as far as it will go, but that is no judicial authority, only a case at a judge's chamber. The same was also said obiter in the case of The Queen v. Fane, Pasch. 10 Ann. but it never came judicially before the whole court till now. coffee was unshipped with an intent to be relanded; and on a traverse of this they are at issue, and it is found with the King.

It was moved in arrest of judgment, that here was an immaterial issue, for the bond being only not to reland, the replication only discloses evidence of an intent to reland, which is not sufficient to subject him to the penalty. On the other side it was said, that the plea had admitted a non-performance, by offering an excuse; and then it was sufficient to meet the plea, and falsify the excuse; in all cases (that of an award only excepted) for there indeed, if the defendant pleads nul agard fait, the plaintiff must not only shew an award, but he must go farther and assign a breach. Salk. 138. On the other side it was insisted, that though here is matter of aggravation laid, yet it is still to be considered as an action of trespass, in which there is a recovery under 40s. And matter alleged only by way of aggravation cannot intitle the plaintiff to full costs. 2 Vent. 48. Salk. 642.

The Chief Justice, Powys and Fortescue Justices, were for full costs, because the consequential damage is a matter for which the plaintiff might have had a distinct satisfaction. And they likened it to the case of an action of battery, per quod consortium of the wife, or servitium of the servant amissit, which for that reason are not within the statute (1). The true distinction is, where the matter alleged by way of aggravation will intitle the party to a distinct satisfaction. Asportation of trees may be a ground for a trover, but yet may be laid as an aggravation in trespass, and the plaintiff shall have full costs. If a man enters and chafes and kills my cattle, that is a distinct wrong, but yet may be joined as matter of aggravation (2). Dominus Rex vers. Kinnerley and Moore.

Information, setting forth, that the defendants Kinnerley and Moore, being evil disposed persons, in order to extort money from my Lord Sunderland, did conspire together to charge my Lord with endeavouring to commit sodomy with the said Moore; and that in execution of this conspiracy they did in the presence and hearing of several persons falsely and maliciously accuse my Lord, that he conatus fuit rem veneream habere with the defendant Moore, and so to commit sodomy. The defendant Kinnerley only appears, and pleads to issue, and is found guilty, and now several exceptions were taken in arrest of judgment.

Conspiracy may be laid without any overt act, and if one be convicted, judgment shall be given against him before the trial of the other.

16. Q. B. 839.

Branthwayte Serjeant. The nature of the offence must appear upon the record, for by that only the court must judge, and the offence must be particularly and certainly alleged. Conatus fuit is incertain, for it might only be an act of the mind, which before it was put execution was suppressed by reason. 1 Roll. Rep. 70. 2 Bull. 276. In an action for words, per quod maritagium amisit, the plaintiff declared, that whereas he intendebat et conatus fuit to marry such a woman, the plaintiff spoke of him such words, per quod, &c. and this was held to be incertain, and the judgment was arrested.

2. It should appear upon the record, that the party accused is innocent; for it is no crime to charge a guilty person with such an offence. They should have averred, ubi revera et in facto he non conatus fuit to do the act with which he was charged. Hut. 11, 49. In actions for a malicious prosecution the plaintiff must shew the former action to be determined, and how; so likewise he must shew an acquittal upon an indictment (a). 1 Keb. 381.

(a) Lewis v. Farrel, ante 814.

3. To every conspiracy there must be two persons at least, whereas here is only one brought in and found guilty. If hereafter the other should be found not guilty, that will consequently be an acquittal of Kinnerley. If three be indicted for a riot and an assault, and one only found guilty, and the others acquitted; this discharges them all, because the riot is the foundation, and the assault only the consequence. Salk. 593. And one person alone cannot be guilty of committing a riot: so in this case one cannot be guilty of the conspiracy, though he may of the overt act, and yet the foundation (which is the conspiracy) being removed, the other part, which is only the consequence, falls of course.

Comyns. Bare words are not a sufficient overt act, without alleging something actually done towards putting the conspiracy in execution. 4 Co. 16. a. 1 Roll. Abr. 110. p. 6. 9 Co. 56. b. For if there be only words, an action of scandalum magnatum lies. If the charge on my Lord was by course of law, then the defendants are justified, till it is falsified in a legal manner, either by ignoramus or acquittal. 1 Roll. Abr. 113, 114. R. 2. And the court will not suffer the party accused to bring his action, till he has manifested his innocence; because otherwise there might be contradictory judgments, for the parties might be condemned in an action for that prosecution, which they might afterwards establish, and then those two judgments would be inconsistent. 3 Keb. 799.

The offence with which my Lord is charged is no crime punishable by our law. For a bare endeavour (which is the most that is alleged) to do such an act, is not punishable in the temporal courts. And the only reason why it is actionable, to say of a woman that she had a bastard is, because she is punishable for it by 18 Eliz. c. 3. and 7 Jac. 1. c. 4. Poph. 36. nor is it actionable then, unless it appears the parish was charged. Salk. 694. So to say she keeps a bawdy-house, because the common law punishes such a person. Cro. Car. 329. And yet it is not actionable to call a woman a bawd, which is only an offence cognizable in the spiritual court. 1 Vent. 53.

If Moore should die, be pardoned, or acquitted, how can the other be guilty of a conspiracy? Cro. El. 701. 1 Vent. 234. 3 Keb. 111. 1 Saund. 228. 2 Keb. 476. 1 Keb. 284. 2 Roll. Abr. 111. pl. 5.

Adjournatur; and at another day Reeve in answer to the objections argued:

1. As to the conatus being uncertain. This goes to their own charge; from which we could not vary, but were obliged to lay it as we could prove it. We could not lay, that he said my Lord did the act, when he only said he endeavoured to do it. The case in 1 Roll. Rep. 79. and 2 Bulst. 276. is not applicable to this. There it was in the plaintiff's power to have been more particular, and the words were not actionable without a special damage: he should have shewn a treaty and communication between himself and the lady, whereas he only says he intended and went about to marry her, and it does not so much as appear she knew any thing of the matter. In many cases it is actionable to charge a man with a bare attempt to do an unlawful act. Cro. El. 6. You lay in wait intending to murder A. you laid gunpowder der under my window minding to burn my house. Cro. El. 191. You agreed to hire a man to kill me. 2 Lev. 205. 1 Vent. 323. In actions for words the plaintiff may make his own case, but we were obliged to follow the defendant, and lay the overt act as it was. If an indictment be imperfect, yet if it be recited in an action as it is, it will be sufficient. 47 E. 3. 16, 17.

2. They object, here is no overt act. Is not the affirmation one? Surely it is. But if it be not, yet we insist there was no occasion to lay any. The conspiracy is the gist of the charge, and the other only matter of aggravation, of which the defendant may be acquitted, and found guilty of the conspiracy notwithstanding. 1 Vent. 304. 1 Sid. 174. 1 Lev. 125. So 1 Lev. 62. 1 Keb. 203, 254. A conspiracy to charge a man with being the father of a bastard child was held well laid, without any overt act. 27 Aff. pl. 44. 16 Aff. pl. 62. There were differences in opinion as to this matter formerly, but now the law is settled.

3. Say they, no judgment shall be given against Kinnerfley, because possibly Moore may be acquitted, and that will be an acquittal of both. This is arguing from what has not happened, and probably never will; for though Moore may have an opportunity to acquit himself, and is not concluded by the verdict as Kinnerfley is; yet as the matter now stands Moore himself is found guilty, for the conspiracy is found as it is laid, and therefore judgment may be given against one before the trial of the other (1). As 4 E. 3. 34. b. Br. Conspiracy 21. 1 Vent. 234. 3 Keb. 111. 24 E. 3. 73. a. Post. 7 Ann. B. R. Regina v. Herne. There the indictment was that he with A. et multis aliis did conspire to accuse B. that he did attempt to commit sodomy. The grand jury found the bill as to Herne, with an ignoramus as to A. Herne was convicted, and then it was moved in arrest of judgment, that there being an ignoramus as to A. Herne could not be guilty of conspiring with him. But the whole court over-ruled the exception, and said it was sufficient, being found that he cum multis aliis did conspire, and that it might have been laid so at first; and Herne was fined forty marks, and set in the pillory. My Lord C. J. of the Common Pleas, that now is, was of counsel in that case; and he quoted a case where several were indicted for a riot, cum multis aliis, two only were found guilty; and it was objected, that there must be three to make a riot; but upon the cum multis aliis judgment was given against the defendants.

4. Another exception is, that we have not averred my Lord was innocent of the fact charged upon him. It is expressly laid, that the defendants did falsely charge, which could not be, if the accusation was true. Trin. 4 Ann. Regina v. Best, Salt. 174, 376. indictment setting forth, that the defendants falso conspiraverunt to charge A. with being the father of a bastard child: on demurrer the exception was, that there was no averment, that A. was not the father; and upon great consideration and search of precedents, the indictment was held good. A difference was taken in an indictment for perjury, where you must aver the oath false; and also in actions for a malicious prosecution, where it must appear the party was innocent, to intitle him to damages. F. N. B. 114, 115. Rast. 117.

5. The last exception is, that the offence charged is not punishable in the temporal courts. We deny that. Attempts of this nature have been punished (2) and so have conspiracies to do a lawful act, which is stronger than this case.

(b) 12 Mod.

The whole court were unanimous in over-ruling all the exceptions. And Powys J. quoted a case in Godb. where a man was punished for an attempt to pick a pocket. And Eyre J. remembered Captain Rigby, who was pillored for an attempt to commit sodomy. And he quoted Trin. 11 W. 3. Rex v. Sudbury & al., (b) where four were indicted for a riot, two found guilty, and the other two acquitted; and this was held to be a discharge of them all, though it had been otherwise if it had been laid cum multis aliis. And Hil. 2 Ann. rot. 17. is a case to the same purpose as the Queen and Best. Et per Fortescue J. falsis allegantiis is in the commission of oyer and terminer. And Holt C. J. held in Best's case, that an attempt to do an act cognizable in the spiritual court was punishable here. In foro conscientie the attempt is equal with the execution of it, and there is a great difference between being found Not guilty, and not being found guilty.

Whereupon judgment was given for the King, and afterwards the court proceeded to sentence, and told the defendant, nothing but his being a clergyman protected him from a corporal punishment. They fined him 500 l. a year's imprisonment, and to find sureties for his good behaviour for seven years.

In Easter term, 5 Geo. Moore was convicted and sentenced to stand in the pillory, suffer a year's imprisonment, and to find sureties for seven years.

And this term Kinnersey, on affidavits of his being indisposed, moved the court that he might be admitted to the benefit of the rules. Sed per Curiam, We never do it for one in execution, which differs from the case of persons committed for high treason, who have been bailed on account of illness (3). Wraight vers. Kitchingman.

ERROR C. B. of an award of execution in a scire facias upon recognizance of bail, reciting that the defendants in Hilary term 3 Geo. coram justitiariis de C. B. manuceperunt et uterque eorum manucepit pro Richardo Welbourn in 106 l. Upon condition, that if he should happen to be condemned in a certain plea of debt upon demand for 53 l. at the suit of Kitchingman and his wife, then the said Welbourn should pay and satisfy the said 53 l. and all damages, or render his body in execution of that judgment. And then the scire facias sets forth, that licet the said Kitchingman and his wife recovered the said 53 l. debt and 15 l. for damages, yet the said Welbourn never rendered his body in execution of the said judgment, or satisfied the said debt and damages. Upon a scire feci returned, there is judgment by default, and execution awarded. The defendants assign for error, that the plaintiffs in Hil. 3 Geo. obtulerunt se against the said Welbourn de placito transgressionis ac etiam in quodam placito debiti supra demand' 53 l. upon which process issued against him, returnable in octabis purificationis: at which day the defendants entered into recognizance for his paying the debt or rendering his body: and that the plaintiffs did not within two terms, according to the course of the court, declare against the said Welbourn in placito prad', whereby the recognizance was discharged: but farther they say, that the plaintiffs in Trinity term following caused him to be summoned into the said court to answer them in a plea of debt for 53 l. and obtained judgment thereupon, and that such judgment was had upon those proceedings, and not in that action wherein the defendants became bail; but notwithstanding this, the award of execution is grounded upon the judgment in that collateral action. The other errors assigned are, that the justices of C. B. had no power to take any recognizance in this form, and that there is a discontinuance, and several variances between the recognizance itself and the recital of it in the scire facias. The defendants verify their assignment of errors, by procuring the recognizance entered with a placita of Hilary term, and the other proceedings with a placita of Trinity term, to be sent up by certiarari, with a certificate that there are no continuances from Hilary to Trinity term. And in nullo est errat pleaded.

Matter which lies properly in the mouth of the principal, or might have been pleaded to the scire facias, is not assignable for error after execution awarded. Salk. 262. 4 Mod. 306.

Strange pro quer' in errore. Before I enter into the debate of our exceptions, I must beg leave to observe, that as this record stands, the fact of our assignment of errors must be taken to be as we have alleged it; for we have not only verified it by the return of the certiorari (which is the proper trial in these cases) but the other side have come into it, by pleading in nullo est erratum, which is a confession of the matter of fact, and serves to put the law arising from that fact in issue before the court: it is in effect to say, I agree the proceedings were in the manner you mention, but notwithstanding this, I insist they are regular; they are not erroneous. So is 1 Vent. 252. 1 Sid. 147.

I shall at present omit observing what those facts are, which stand admitted upon this record, but shall make use of that observation, as occasion shall require, in speaking distinctly to each exception.

Our exceptions are of two sorts. 1. Such as go to the form; and 2. To the foundation of this scire facias.

Those which respect the form are, either such as arise upon the face of the writ itself, or by comparison of it with the other parts of the record.

The exception I take to the writ itself is, that the breach is not well assigned, for they only say, that licet such recovery against the principal, yet he never rendered his body in executione judicii predicti, which ties it up to a particular kind of render, and has not left it at large to any render which would be a good discharge of the recognizance. And therefore though I must admit, he did not render himself in execution of that judgment; yet if I can shew, that notwithstanding what the plaintiffs have alleged, the condition of this recognizance may have been performed; then I shall be well justified in saying, the breach is not well assigned.

Tid. Prac. K. B.

A render may be either before or after judgment, and it may happen, that though either of these will discharge the bail, yet neither of them may be a render in execution of that judgment. It is plain, the first cannot: there cannot be a render in execution of a judgment, when as yet there is no judgment; but yet it will not be denied, but that a render before judgment is a good discharge of the bail, for the intent of the condition is answered, inasmuch inasmuch as the party is forth-coming, and the other may have his body as a satisfaction for the debt when recovered.

And as there may be a render before, so likewise after judgment, and yet not in execution of that judgment. For suppose the bail bring the principal into court, and leave him there, and the plaintiff refuses (as by law he may) to take him in execution; I believe no body will say this is a render in execution of that judgment, and yet there is no doubt but this is a good discharge of the bail; for it amounts to a performance of the condition: and in this case the entry is not, that he was rendered in executione judicii, but in exoneratione manucaptor. And if the plaintiff will not pray him in execution, the consequence of that is, that he must be discharged. So is Hob. 210. Walby v. Canning.

Since therefore it appears, there are more ways than one to perform the condition of this recognizance, I need not cite many cases to prove, that the saying the principal did not render in one particular manner, will not amount to an averment that he did not render at all. If a man is bound to go to York or Lancaster by such a time (where according to Sir Rowland Heyward's case, 2 Co. 35. he being the party agent, has his election to go to which he pleases) it would be insufficient to say he did not go to York, because though that be true, yet he may have performed the condition by going to Lancaster within the time: and for this the book of 21 Ed. 3. 29. b. is an authority, where both parts of the disjunctive are possible, (as in the case I now put) though it was otherwise resolved there in the principal case, because it appeared that one part of the condition was become impossible by the act of God, and therefore as to that there was no occasion to take any notice in assigning the breach. If I covenant to do an act by myself or my assigns, the breach must be in the disjunctive, so as to take in both ways by either of which that act might be done. So is Cro. Eliz. 348. Salk. 139.

The same exception was taken about two years since in the case of Read v. Jenamie, but I cannot say it received any judicial opinion. The court did seem to come into it, and the plaintiffs discovering their opinion, would not stand another argument, but applied below and got it amended.

The next exceptions to the writ are such as arise by comparison of it with the other parts of the record, from which it varies in several instances. I forbear to mention them all, but shall rely upon those which I apprehend to be most material. But before I do this I must observe, that we are in the case of a description of a record, which the court requires to be made strictly, and more

Vide 1 Com.
Dig. tit. Bail
(R. 2.) 703.
seq.

strictly where the suit is founded upon that record, than where it is only described in a writ of error, in order to remove it out of one court into another. And there will follow no inconvenience, if the court in these cases ties up the party to an exact description; because if he be but careful, he may do it with the utmost exactness, and it is his own laches if he mistakes.

The first variance is, that in the writ it is said, the defendants manuceperunt et uterque eorum manucepit pro Richardo Welbourn in 106 l. whereas the recognizance runs, that they recognoverunt et uterque eorum recognovit se debere eisdem the plaintiffs in 106 l. Now the words manucapio and recognosco are of different significations: the latter indeed does import a being bound in a sum, and therefore is properly used in these cases; but manucapio was never taken in that sense: it signifies a receiving another into custody, of which the usual expression is, quod traditur in ballium. There is a great difference between recognovit se debere so much, and manucepit in so much: for recognovit se debere creates a duty to the party, and is an immediate lien; but manucepit pro J. S. is no lien as to the plaintiff in the action, no more than to any body else. It may as well refer to the court who delivers out the party, and thereupon he undertakes to the court that the party is forthcoming. It is not manucepit to the plaintiff for such a one, but manucepit generally, which form may be proper to be used in this court, where the bail is not bound in a sum certain, but the quantum left intirely uncertain till judgment; whereas in C. B. where the sum is mentioned, and thereby reduced to a certainty, they use the strongest words to bind the party, so as to make it a certain duty depending only upon a condition subsequent. And in this case I must submit, whether it is not releasable by the word debts, as a bond is before it becomes due, because it is debitum in presenti quamvis solvendum in futuro, according to Co. Litt. 292. a. But according to Hoe's case, 5 Co. (a) the word debts will not release a recognizance of bail entered into in this court, because there is no certain duty created at the time of entering into it.

(a) 89 Moor
468. S. C.

The next variance is, that the writ runs, quas quidem 106 l. iidem the bail recognoverunt de terris et catallis suis fieri, whereas the record is voluerunt et concesserunt, which are the proper words in that place, for though recognosco be proper to signify they bound themselves in that sum, yet concedo is always used when they come to describe in what manner the parties agree it shall be levied. They recognoscunt se debere so much money, which they concedunt shall be levied in such a manner.

The other instances of variance are, where the writ contains more than is in the record. And to these I would premise a distinction, inction, which I have often heard laid down in this court, and that is, where records exceed, and where they do not come up to the description: where they exceed the description, it will be well enough, for every excess implies a fullness, and if there be a full answer to the description it is as much as it required; but it is otherwise, where the record does not come up to the description, according to the cases so often cited of late of Rogers v. Lloyd and Alston v. Lucan. In one the writ of error contained an addition, which was not in the record, and for that variance it was quashed; but in the other, where the writ had omitted the addition, the record was held to be well removed.

And if the crowding in an unnecessary description in a writ of error, to which the record does not answer, will for that reason vitiate it; I may argue a fortiori in the case of a scire facias, which is in the nature of an action; for there the court is stricter than in writs of error, in requiring an exact description, because otherwise the party might bring two actions, the one varying from, and the other agreeing with the record.

The first variance is, that by the scire facias the defendants were to forfeit the money, if the principal should happen in aliquo modo defaultam facere; but there is not a word of this in the recognizance itself.

Another variance is, that in the writ the defendants are made to undertake, that if the principal be condemned in that action, or judgment be given for the plaintiffs, that then he shall pay. In the record it is only that if judgment be given for the plaintiffs, without any mention of being condemned (1).

In one he is to render damages in curia assidenda seu aliquo modo adjudicanda, but the recognizance is only for damages in curia adjudicanda, without any mention of the words assidenda seu aliquo modo.

It will perhaps be said, that these variances are not to be regarded, because they do not alter the sense. But that will be no answer at all. In Dr. Drake's case, (a) Salk. 660. (2) the word nor was put instead of not, but it was not in a place where it influenced the sense one way or the other, and yet the court held it a fatal variance, for it was the carelessness of the party: and Poulet J. said, that in all cases where the party had a record or other matter by which he might make an exact description; in such case every variance was fatal. That if the court once gave into solutions of those variances, they would never know where to stop; and for my part says he, whilst I keep up to the settled rules, I look upon myself as lying in harbour, and therefore I will never consent to set out to sea again. Mich. 2 Ann. in B. R. Chetley v. Wood, there the recognizance was described as taken in court, and upon mul tiel record, it appeared to have been taken at justice Neville's chamber, and by him delivered into court; and it was adjudged that the plaintiff had failed of his record: and yet in as much as the recognizance took its effect from the enrolment, it might not be improper in a legal sense to say it was taken in court; but because the fact was otherwise, the court held them to describe it according to the fact, and not according to the operation of law.

I have now done with what I had to offer in relation to the form of this writ, and shall therefore in the next place proceed to shew, that it is defective in point of foundation; that it has issued without lawful warrant, without any foundation at all. 1. In respect of a defect in the process by which the principal was brought into court, and upon which it appears the recognizance was taken. 2. In regard the recovery against the principal, upon which this scire facias is grounded, was in another action than that wherein we were bail. 3. Because the plaintiffs did not declare within two terms after appearance, according to the course of the court. And 4. Because the original cause was never regularly continued in court.

2 Will. 319.
3 Will. 348.
1 Term. Rep.

1. I shall endeavour to shew, that the process by which the principal was brought into court, and upon which the capias issued, and the recognizance was taken, is a naughty process; and that because two different actions are joined in it, debt and trespass; it is de placito transgressionis ac etiam de placito debiti; which cannot be joined together, for the process to bring in the party is different, in debt by summons, and in trespass by attachment. The one is founded upon a privity of contract created by the party or the law, and survives against the executor; whereas the other is founded upon a tort, and dies with the person. Besides, the same plea will not answer both, and for that reason it has been held, that assumpsit and trover cannot be joined. 1 Vent. 366. Salk. 10. 1 Sid. 244.

If therefore the original, which is the ground of all, is faulty; it follows, that whatever stands upon that foundation must fall with it. But the recognizance derives its obligation from thence; and therefore can have no force, when that is removed.

2. But

2. But if the court should be of opinion, notwithstanding this exception, that the principal was well brought into court, and the recognizance well taken; yet I must submit in the second place, whether it does not appear, that the judgment upon which this writ is grounded, was in another action than that to which the bail was given, which was in a plea of trespass with an ac etiam de placito debiti, whereas the judgment is in an action of debt upon a bond, on the recovery in which action it is admitted by this record, that the scire facias is grounded. I am sensible it would be mispending time, for me who am counsel only for the bail, to go into a long argument to prove, that the court of C. B. cannot upon an original in one species of action take any cognizance of an action of another kind against the principal: that court has no jurisdiction to hold plea in any case, but upon the king's original writ issued out of chancery, except in the case of persons having the privilege of that court, which is not pretended in this cause. The original is the commission to the court to hold plea between the parties in the particular cause described in it, but gives no jurisdiction to proceed in any other cause though between the same parties. But I do not apprehend, how the determination of that question can have any influence in this case, since whatever effect it may have as to the principal, yet it can never reach the bail, so as to subject them in any other action than that wherein they were bound; so that I need only prove these to be different actions, which cannot be taken to be the same. And I apprehend, the thing proves itself, for the court will never intend, that this action of debt, wherein the defendant appears to be brought in by summons, can be grounded upon, or receive any sanction from an original, wherein debt and trespass are both joined. Those proceedings must be taken to have another foundation, viz. an original in debt, and not to be grounded on one which will not warrant the judgment, according to the case of Chapman v. Barnardiston, where an original in trespass was held not to warrant a declaration in trover. So in 2 Vent. 152. in trespass the writ was recited to be quare clausum fregit et herban ibidem crescentem conculcavit et consumpsit, but the declaration had omitted the clausum fregit: (and so has the declaration in our case) and for this fault the judgment was arrested after a verdict. So is Cro. El. 329. 185. I do not cite these cases (as the immediate tendency of them is) to prove that the declaration shall be held ill, because it does not tally with the recital of the writ, for I am sensible the modern resolutions are, that in order to overthrow the proceedings, they must be compared with the original itself upon a writ of error: but the use I would make of them is, to shew, that if the writ and the declaration do so vary, that will be cause to reverse the judgment. And from hence I presume an original in debt and trespass shall never never be taken as the warrant for proceeding in debt only, since the only effect of such a presumption will be, to overthrow those proceedings, which it was introduced to support.

But further, we may safely lay all this aside, and there is no occasion to make use of intendments in this case; since it manifestly appears, that these are different actions; for by the record of the recognizance the principal comes into court, and is let out upon bail in Hilary term; but the action wherein the recovery is, appears to be of Trinity term, for the placita is of that term, and in that term it is recorded, that the principal summonitus fuit to answer the plaintiffs; so that it is absurd to say, the recognizance of Hilary terms shall extend to actions commenced two terms after, viz. in Trinity term.

If therefore these are taken to be distinct actions, it necessarily follows, that the defendants, by becoming bail in one, made no undertaking for the other; and though they would be liable to any recovery in the action to which they were bail, yet they were not answerable in any action which must proceed upon some other foundation; and it is already admitted upon this record, that the judgment with which they are charged, was in this collateral action.

But even admitting, that as to the principal this declaration in debt was well delivered as a declaration by the by, (though that cannot be after the term wherein bail is filed) yet what we insist upon is, that as to us who are the bail, the plaintiff is confined to declare according to the process; for though there are two different actions joined in it, yet both together make but one loquela, which cannot be split: it must be a recovery in ista actione to charge the bail. And therefore where the plaintiff has declared for more than in the process, that declaration has been taken to be one delivered by the by. 3 Keb. 16. Mich. 3 Ann. Boury v. Wheeler, and Salk. 102. And there is great reason why the plaintiff should not be allowed to vary in the least as to the bail; for I would, for argument sake, suppose, that when the defendant comes into court, and finds the plaintiff has done wrong in joining debt and trespass together in the same original; thereupon he applies to his friends, and shews them the defect, how it is impossible the plaintiff can ever succeed in that action; and upon that account he procures them to be his bail, who would otherwise have refused to stand for him in a proper action: I must submit it, whether it would not be a hardship to let the plaintiff charge the bail by delivering a declaration in debt only, when perhaps he set out wrong at the beginning with no other view but by that means to get good bail to his action. In Yelv.

52. the recognizance was, that the principal should, upon eight days warning, appear to an action to be brought for such a debt, or they (the bail) to pay the money: the breach was laid in not paying so much recovered against the principal, without shewing it to be an action wherein he had eight days warning: and for this fault the court held it ill; and Popham who gave the rule said, that as to the plaintiff and defendant a voluntary appearance without eight days warning should bind, for the defendant had submitted to it, et volenti non fit injuria, but yet they could not, by any agreement among themselves, subject the bail in any other method of proceeding than was mentioned in the obligatory instrument; so that a voluntary appearance should not bind them who became only answerable for a compulsory one.

3. But if the court should be of opinion, that the recognizance was well taken as to that action wherein the principal is condemned; yet I take it, that the bail are discharged, because the plaintiffs did not declare within two terms after appearance, according to the course of the court, and as the 13 Car. 2. c. 2. requires. This is the fact which is admitted to us, and it will be no answer to say, that though the defendant might have refused the declaration, and signed a non pros, yet if he accepts it, all will be well enough; because his acceptance, which is an estoppel to himself, can never have that effect against us, who are his bail, for the same reason that the act of the bail is no estoppel to him, according to the case of Needham v. Dewaire in this court, Trin. 1 Geo. rot. 399. There the defendant pleaded misnomer in abatement, and the plaintiff replied by way of estoppel, that he had put in bail by the name in the declaration; but the court held, that estoppels arise against a man by his own act, whereas this was the act of the bail. So is Salk. 3. and the case I cited before out of Yelverton, where a voluntary appearance was held to bind the party, but not the bail.

4. The last branch of my exception to the foundation of this scire facias is a discontinuance. For the appearance was in Hilary term, since which that action has never been prosecuted, as appears by the return of the certiorari, so that as to that action the principal and bail were all out of court, and that cause never regularly continued in court. It must be observed, that this objection in the manner I now make it, must take its rise from an opinion, that the proceedings in Trinity term have no connexion with, or dependance upon those of Hilary term. I would now consider it in another view, by supposing them to be in the same action, so as to put it both ways, either they were, or they were not; if they were, even then there is a discontinuance between Hilary and Trinity term. If they were not, then the first cause has never been prosecuted; and as to the second, the bail are not liable in that collateral action: so that taking it either way, it will appear, this scire facias has issued without a proper foundation.

[206]

To recapitulate the substance of what I have offered. First, we say the principal was never regularly in court, and consequently the recognizance was void. But if he was well brought into court, and the recognizance well taken; yet it will not subject the bail to that action wherein the plaintiffs have recovered. And if it will extend so far, yet it appears, the declaration was not delivered in time, nor that cause ever regularly continued in court. But if the court should be of opinion, this writ is good in point of foundation, yet then we say it is defective in point of form. The breach is not well assigned, for the reasons I before mentioned. And lastly though none of these points should be with us, yet the variances are fatal. And therefore I pray, the award of execution may be reversed.

Reeve contra. As to the exception to the breach; we have assigned it in the words of the condition, which are, that he shall render himself in executione judicii. And though I must admit the instances put, where this condition may be performed by a render which may not be in execution of the judgment; yet no case can be shewn, where the plaintiff is obliged to assign the breach so large as to exclude all the different ways which may be construed a performance within the intent, though not within the letter. In such a case the party must come and excuse himself, and the law, in favour of him who perhaps has complied as far as was in his power, will allow that excuse. A condition to re-enscuff is performed by lease and release; but yet it was never alleged, that the party did not make a release, but only that he did not re-enscuff; and if he did make a release, that must be shewn on the other side. The precedents are as this writ is. Co. Ent. 616. Officina Br. 277, 297.

As to the variances, I shall not enter into any debate whether they are material or not; but what I rely upon is, that they ought to have demanded oyer and taken advantage below. Now it is too late; for the recognizance is not properly before the court, and they ought not to have brought it up. And as to what is said as to the effect of in nullo est erratum, I take it in this place to be a demurrer to this part, which is immaterially assigned. I believe a deed or a bond was never sent for up by a certiorari in order to assign variances between them and the declaration, but the proper way to have advantage of those variances is to pray oyer. This recognizance is in the same reason with the bond or the deed, for it is the specialty upon which the action is grounded.

As to the other objections, which go to the judgment in the original action: the answer I give them is, that these defendants cannot assign that for error, for the bail can assign no matter which lies properly in the mouth of the principal: they alone, or by joining with the principal, cannot have error of that judgment. They cannot assign that no capias issued against the principal. 1 Vent. 38. And this answer will serve for the objection, that the declaration was not delivered in time; for they are so far from having a power to assign that for error, that in 2 Vent. 143. it was held, they could not so much as plead it to the scire facias. And every body knows, that even matter which is pleadable to the scire facias, as a release, cannot be taken advantage of after judgment in scire facias, no not by audita querela. F. N. B. 104. i.

Strange replied. Our pleading over can never cure a defect in in their assigning the breach. In 1 Sid. 184. in trespass the plaintiff had not alleged a possession, and it was held, Not guilty did not cure it. So in Butt's case, 7 Co. it is said, pleading over shall in some cases help a defect in point of form, but in no case a defect in point of substance. This case of a recognizance differs from that of a bond, one is a matter of record, and the other in pais, and it may as well be brought up as the original is. But whether it was proper to send for it or not, is not now the question, since they have admitted the fact to be as we have alleged it, and then put it in judgment, whether upon that state of the case it be error in point of law or not. It is as insufficient to assign the breach in the words, as it is to plead performance, which may be ill, Lat. 16. The covenant was to deliver all his money, and held not sufficient to plead he had delivered all. The general answer, that the bail shall not impeach the judgment against the principal, will not go to my second objection; for there I do not dispute the validity of the proceedings as between the parties, but only insist they are not binding as to the bail. As in the case in Yelverton the bail did not overthrow the judgment for want of eight days warning, but only made use of that objection to excuse themselves, without impeaching the proceedings quoad the principal.

C. J. Some of the exceptions would hold, if the party did not come too late; and others, if they came out of the mouth of the principal. But as they lie under both those disadvantages, in coming too late, and from an improper person; I think they can have no weight in this case. The objection to the breach strikes at at the recognizance itself, which is indeed but oddly penned. It should not have been so strait, for courts of justice ought to take such as will answer the effect of the plaintiff's demand. The effect will be answered by a render, though not in executione judicii, provided the party be liable to be so.

The others inclined to affirm. But it was put off to another day, when Serjeant Branthwayte pro quer' in errore, argued, that the breach is not well assigned, because they charge us with not doing an act, which can only be the act of the plaintiff in the action (i. e.) the having him in execution of the judgment. For all we can do, is to surrender him, so as the other may have him in execution; but to surrender him in execution is not in our power. I agree it is a general rule, that the breach may be assigned in the words of the condition; but it is with this exception, which goes to our case, that where the natural performance of that condition is what the words themselves do not import, there you must leave the words, and go to that which amounts to a performance within the intent of the condition. A pleader is to go according to the operation of law, and not the words of a deed. The grant of one jointenant to another must be pleaded as a release. 2 Saund. 97. As to the precedents, they were as much in favour of the case of Chetley v. Wood in Salk. 659. as they are in this case, but yet they had no influence upon the court, because they said they were against law.

As to the variances, they were so fully preft upon the former argument, that I shall not meddle with them; nor indeed is there any occasion, for I do not find it is so much as pretended, that there are any ways to be solved. But the only thing I shall apply myself to is, to prove that we are not too late to have advantage of them, which was objected to us. I agree, no variance can be assigned between the bond and the declaration, upon a writ of error; and the reason is, because in judgment of law the bond which was once in court is delivered out again to the party at the end of the term. But that reason has no place in the case of a record, which always remains in court. This court sends to inferior courts for their records, and will adjudge upon them, though the party might have had the same advantage below. A man below may have oyer of an original upon which the scire facias is built. And for the point, that he was not too late, he cited Yelv. 218. Hob. 4. 2 Cro. 331.—

Reeve contra. After a scire feci returned, the party cannot have advantage of what might have been pleaded. Salk. 262, 264. There is no difference between a record and a matter in pais, where it it is not part of the same record, as this recognizance is not. 11 H. 4. 47. b. 1 Roll. Abr. 760. The defendants might have had a writ of error tam in redditione judicii quam in adjudicatione executionis; and if upon a common writ of error the same advantage might be had, what occasion was there to provide a special one? And this differs widely from the case of an original, for that is only part of the process: but this is like a note or a bond, the ground and cause of the action.

C. J. At present this recognizance is no part of the record. The defendant by praying oyer, might have made it so; and if the court below had denied oyer, (which by the way they did) he would have had the same advantage on a bill of exceptions. I am sorry those who were concerned below had not the courage to do it, for by this means we are now to affirm a judgment, which if all the parts of it were properly before us, we should be bound to reverse, and by this artifice the justice of this court is eluded. Portbys J. accord.

Eyre J. In Trevivian v. Lawrence (a) (which I was counsel in) the judgment on which the scire facias was brought, was really of another term than the recital mentioned; and the court held, we could have no advantage of it after a scire feci.

And the last day of the term the Chief Justice said, they had perused the record, which is Trin. 9 Jac. 1. rot. 305. and nothing is entered there, but the award of execution, with a mark in the margin, that a writ of error was allowed; and whether the judgment was fetched up by a certiorari, or by a special writ of error, does not appear in the report (but they inclined it was by the latter) so that case was of small authority. The judgment of C. B. was affirmed.

Between the Parishes of Ratcliffe Culy and Exall in Civit.
Coventry.

UPON an order for removal of a widow and her two children from Exall to Ratcliffe Culy, it appeared, that some time since one A. B. was hired and served for a year in the parish of R. C. and gained no other settlement before his death, therefore the justices adjudge the wife and her children to be settled in R. C. and send them thither as to the settlement of the husband. An order to come; mon intent is good. 1 Sess. Ca p. 145. No 130 S. C.

Reeve moved to quash the order, because a married man gains no settlement by any hiring or service; and likewise because the children are called her children and not his. Sed per curiam, We never make intendments to destroy an order, and it does not appear he was married at the time of the hiring, and if he was married during the service, that will not prevent his settlement. And as to the children, we must intend them to be his by her, till the contrary appears; and that they are so is implicitly averred in the adjudication of the childrens being settled with him; for that they could not be, if they were her children by a former husband, so we must take them to be his. Order confirmed.

Cafe lies by an administrator against the bailiff of a liberty for executing a fi. fa. and removing the goods off the premises before the landlord was paid a year's rent. Upon 8 Ann. c. 17. Lill. Ent. 46. Fort. 372. 9 Vin. Abr. 157. pl. 1.

CASE by the plaintiff as administrator of J. S. against the defendant as bailiff of the liberty of the duchy of Lancaster, for executing a fi. fa., and removing the goods off the premises before the landlord was paid his year's rent, pursuant to the statute 8 Ann. c. 17. The general issue pleaded, verdict and judgment pro quer, a writ of error brought, and the general errors assigned.

Yorke pro quer in errore, made three points: 1. Whether upon this statute any action lies against the officer. 2. Admitting it does, whether in this case the plaintiff has disclosed sufficient matter to maintain an action. And 3. Whether it will lie for an administrator.

1. The first point depends upon the words of the statute, which are, "That no goods shall be liable to be taken by virtue of any execution, unless the party, at whose suit the execution is sued out, shall before the removal of such goods from off the premises, pay to the landlord or his bailiff one year's rent (if due), and the sheriff or other officer is impowered and required to levy and pay the plaintiff as well the money so paid for rent, as the execution money."

Upon this it is plain, that the plaintiff in the action, and not the officer, is the person who is to be accountable to the landlord; and if he does not pay the rent, the landlord will have his remedy against him. But what is all this to the officer? He is to execute the King's writ in the ordinary manner, with this only difference, that if the plaintiff pays the rent, then he must go farther, and levy that as well as the execution money; but if it be not paid (as in this case it appears it was not) then the payment being in the nature of a condition precedent, the officer was not obliged to go out of his way, and consequently there were no laches whereon to found an action.

He should allege notice, but the want of it is helped by ver. dict.

2. But if an action will lie against the officer, yet I apprehend the plaintiff has not disclosed sufficient matter to maintain one, no, not even to have obliged the plaintiff in the action, to pay the rent; for here is no notice or demand alleged, and as this is a matter which lies only in the knowledge of the landlord, he ought to do the first act, by giving notice. 1 Roll. Abr. 463. pl. 16. Hob. 51. Allyn 24. 1 Bulst. 12. In a quantum meruit, you always aver notice.

It will be said, that there is notice to the officer, but I take that to be as none, for no body will say the officer was bound to pay the money himself; and as to the verdict, it is true, that will help what is alledged, but can never add any new fact not mentioned in the declaration. Salk. 364.

3. This action lies not for an administrator. For the git of this action is either the non-payment of the rent, or the tort in removing the goods. If the first, then I say the officer is not bound to pay the money. If the second, then this being a personal tort, an administrator can maintain no action for it. The intestate had no particular interest in the goods (as the plaintiff in the execution after payment of the rent would have) but this is an action arising merely ex delicto. At common law before the statute de bonis asportatis in vita testatoris, it is certain an administrator could have no such action; and I take it, that statute has never yet been extended so far as this case. In the cases of ejectment, ward, and quare impedit, there was an interest vested before the death of the testator, of which there is none in this case.

Branthwayte Serjeant contra. The mischief intended to be remedied by this statute was, the fraud which tenants committed, in setting up a sham execution to defeat the landlord of his rent; and therefore it ought to have a liberal construction. The words are prohibitory, that the goods shall not be removed; and therefore as the officer had notice, he should have stopped his hand till the money was paid, and not have removed the goods, to evade the statute. And it would have been a good return, for him to say, that he had seized the goods, but could not proceed to expose them to sale, for that the landlord had demanded a year's rent pursuant to this statute, which the plaintiff was not there ready to pay.

As to the want of alleging a demand upon the plaintiff in the action, that is not the git of this suit, it is the tort in removing the goods; and there being notice to the officer, his proceeding after is a wrong to us, for which he is answerable. But surely after a verdict, every thing necessary to make this an offence, must be supposed to have been proved.

As to our suing as administrator, there are cases stronger than this. The difference is in actions by and against an administrator. This is not a wrong to the person, but to the estate of the intestate. Upon the statute of E. 6. an action lies by but not against an executor, for not setting out of tithes. 1 E. 6. c. 13. 1 Sid. 28. 407. 1 Vent. 30. In 4 Mod. 403. an executor maintained an action action for a false return. Here the intestate had an interest in the goods; they were a pledge for his rent, but are now lost. This was over-ruled in C. B.

Yorke replied. In the case of tithes there is an interest vested, and that in 4 Mod. was after execution, where the sheriff having the money in his hands, was liable to an action of debt. Cro. Car. 539. But Jones 173. the better opinion is, that upon mesne process such an action is not maintainable. In that case too the debt was absolutely lost, but here the landlord or his administrator may still sue the tenant for his rent.

Powys J. held the action lay against the officer for the tort, and that though notice is requisite (1), yet the want of alleging it, is helped by the verdict. And that the removal of the goods was a wrong to the estate of the intestate, for which his administrator might maintain an action. Et per Eyre J. As the officer had notice, that is enough to subject him (2), though it does not amount to a demand of the money of the plaintiff in the execution; which, though the statute is silent, yet upon the reason of the thing I take to be necessary. Executors and administrators may sue for an escape, and here the intestate had an interest, for which his administrator may bring an action. To which Fortescue J. agreed. And the judgment of C. B. was affirmed.

N. B. I was counsel in this cause as an assistant to a Serjeant in C. B. and took another exception, that there was no such statute as the plaintiff had declared upon, for he sets out with one made at the Parliament begun and holden 8 July 8 Ann. when it was in 7th of that Queen. But the court held, that the saying afterwards contra formam statuti in eo casu editi et provis' had set the matter at large: and then it being a publick act, they were bound to take notice of it. And the plaintiff was not prejudiced by the mistake.

There may be a partial acceptance of a bill of exchange.

ACTION upon the case upon the custom of merchants brought by the person to whom a foreign bill of exchange is made payable, against the acceptor. And the declaration sets forth, that one James Collet, being a merchant residing at Christiana in Norway, according to the custom of merchants drew his first bill of exchange upon the defendant, requesting him to pay the plaintiff such first bill (his second not being paid) of 127*l.* 18*s.* 4*d.* which bill was afterwards, viz. 9 December, 1717, shewn to the defendant, who accepted to pay 100*l.* part thereof, upon the 8th day of February following, by virtue whereof he became chargeable, et in consideration inde eisdem die et anno ultimo supradictis super se assumpsit, to pay the same on the said 8th day of February tunc prox' sequentem, which he has not done according to his undertaking. There is likewise a count for monies had and received, and an insimul computassent. The defendant as to those two counts pleads non assumpsit, and as to the count upon the bill, he pleads, that the said James Collet drew another bill for 100*l.* only, wherein he countermands the payment of the odd 27*l.* 18*s.* 4*d.* by virtue whereof the defendant paid the 100*l.* in satisfaction of the first bill, and the plaintiff accordingly received it in satisfaction. The plaintiff protestando that the defendant did not pay it in satisfaction; for plea saith, that he never received it in satisfaction. And to this replication the defendant demurs.

Strange pro defendente. I shall not trouble the court with an exception which has formerly been taken to these replications, that the payment in satisfaction being admitted, the traverse of the acceptance is immaterial; for I am sensible, it has been adjudged to be well enough in the case of Young v. Ruddle, Salk. 627. and of Hawkshaw v. Rawlings in this court, Hil. 3d of his present Majesty, upon this ground, that there can be no payment in satisfaction, without an acceptance in satisfaction; and therefore a traverse of the acceptance is an argumentative denial of the payment; for if the plaintiff did not accept it in satisfaction, the consequence of that is, that it was not paid in satisfaction.

Laying therefore the plea and replication aside, I shall take up the case as it stands upon the declaration, and upon that offer some things distinctly, both as to the matter, and as to the manner of it.

As to the matter of it, the case is no more than this; the person to whom a foreign bill of exchange is made payable, brings his action against the drawee, upon a partial acceptance for so much of it as he undertook to pay, and counts upon the custom of merchants.

The single point which will arise upon this case is, whether a partial acceptance be good or not within the custom of merchants.

chants. And I shall endeavour to prove, that this acceptance is a void acceptance, and consequently the plaintiff has no cause of action.

[216] That I may not be misunderstood when I call this a void acceptance, I would premise, that I do not mean, it is so absolutely void as to exclude any remedy against the acceptor, for I must admit, that this acceptance will create a contract between the parties, upon which an action upon the case would have laid. But what I shall insist upon is, that this is a void acceptance within the custom of merchants, upon which the plaintiff has founded his case; and if it be void within the custom of merchants, then, whatever effect it would have as a private contract between the parties, will be a matter foreign to the present question, in as much as the plaintiff has not relied on it as such, but has brought his action upon the custom.

I have inquired into the practice of merchants in this case, but have not been able to get any certain account of this matter. The true reason of which I apprehend to be, that it is a case which seldom or never happens amongst merchants, for they honour one another's bills, though there are no effects of the drawer's in their hands; and they would esteem it the greatest blemish that could be cast upon them, if their correspondent should once refuse to answer their bills any further than they had effects in his hands.

What account I have received, I shall submit to the court. Some are of opinion, that an acceptance for part is an acceptance for the whole, in as much as it deprives the party of the benefit of protesting, and so resorting back to the drawer. But I apprehend there is no reason at all for this. To say that because commonly a man does honour another's bill beyond what effects he has in his hands, that therefore he must do it, is a strange conclusion. For suppose he has but 20*l.* of the drawer's in his hands, and is bound to answer a bill for so much; it would be highly unreasonable, that in case the other should draw for 10,000*l.* this man must either pay the whole, or subject himself to an action for non-performance of the condition.

But if this notion should prevail, that an acceptance for part is an acceptance for the whole, yet as on the one hand it charges the acceptor with the intire sum, so on the other hand it discharges him of this action. For then there can be no colour to split the demand into two actions, but the plaintiff, in declaring for part ought to shew, that the rest is satisfied. Salk. 65.

Others

Others are of opinion, that the party ought not to have taken this acceptance, but protested the bill as to the whole, and sent for another to the value of what the drawee would answer. This likewise makes for the acceptor the defendant.

I am informed indeed, there is one gentleman does attend to say, that this matter has happened in his own experience; but he, by what I find, is alone in that opinion, and perhaps may not have considered the consequences of it. Vide Petit v. Benson, Comb. 452.

As there is this diversity of opinions upon a matter which seldom or never comes in practice, I shall take it upon the reason of the thing, with a view likewise to the many inconveniences which will follow as a consequence of establishing this partial acceptance,

The better to come at this, it may not be improper to state the method of transacting these affairs. When the party to whom a bill of exchange is made payable receives it, he immediately applies to the drawee to get his acceptance: if he accepts it, nothing farther is done till the day of payment, and then if it be paid the matter is at an end. But if the drawee will not accept it, then the party is to protest the bill, and send back the protest by the next post. When the time of payment comes, he tenders the bill again, and then the drawee may either pay it or refuse it: if he refuses it, then there is a second protest for non-payment, and the bill itself is returned. And so it is if he accepts it, and afterwards refuses to pay it. From all this I would infer, that there can be no partial protest for non-acceptance, which as I am informed is a protest not in the memory of any but one of the notaries publick. The words of all protests are, I exhibited the original bill to the person to whom directed, and demanded his acceptance thereof. Now an acceptance of part is not an acceptance thereof, no more than payment of part is a payment of the whole. There is a book which goes by the name of Advice concerning bills of exchange, and is esteemed amongst those who are most conversant in these affairs. And in fol. 33. of that book it is said, that nothing but an acceptance to pay secundum tenorem billæ can deprive the party of the benefit of a protest. And in fol. 16. of the same book he puts the case of a bill drawn on A. and B. who are not joint traders, and an acceptance by one only: this says he goes for nothing, and the party must protest the bill as in case of no acceptance. These are the words of the book: and by putting the case of two who are not joint-traders, I should apprehend he means, that each being charged with a moiety, the acceptance of one is but an acceptance to pay a moiety. which is but a partial acceptance, and therefore void: and this is explained by the case of of Pinkney v. Hall, Salk. 126. where one joint trader accepted a bill, and it was held to be the acceptance of both, because both were equally liable to pay the whole. And to this purpose likewise, is Molloy de Jure Maritimo in the chapter concerning bills of exchange.

If there can be no protest for non-acceptance of part, I would consider how the case would stand in regard to allowing this partial acceptance: the natural and plain consequence of that will be, to put it in the power of the drawee, to defeat the other of the benefit of protesting a bill for 10,000*l.* by his acceptance to pay one penny only; for this I would submit, that if the party may take such an acceptance, he must take it: if it will be good, he cannot refuse it, for it is not at his election to charge the drawer but upon the other's default; the drawee is the person he must first resort to, and if he refuses, then and not till then, is there a proper remedy against the drawer; and therefore in the action against the drawer the plaintiff must shew a protest, which is an endeavour to receive the money of the drawee, Salk. 131.

But even admitting there may be a partial protest for non-acceptance, yet the inconveniences which will follow of course are so great, that I hope it shall never be established by the judgment of the court.

It would be endless to put cases where it has been held, that rent-charges and the like cannot be apportioned; and therefore I shall rely entirely upon the reason of the thing, that in this case the contract between the drawer and the person to whom the bill is payable is entire and not divisible. By this contract the drawer (and consequently the indorser) subjects himself to an action if the money be not paid at the time: but though he becomes liable to one action, yet there is no reason, that by transactions between the party to whom the bill is payable, and the drawee, to which he is not privy, this contract should be branched out into several actions, which will unavoidably be the case of every partial acceptance: for I do not apprehend how this can be reduced to one action by refusing this partial acceptance, and protesting for the whole; because (as I observed before) if the party may take it, he must take it, and can charge the drawer no farther than there is a default in the drawee.

As therefore two actions are the fewest he can be charged with, I would beg leave to instance how he may be charged with a great many. The acceptor will charge him as far as his undertaking; then another for the honour of the drawer (as is usual amongst amongst merchants) may undertake for another part, and by the same reason a third, and a fourth, and no body can say where it shall stop: so many different persons may accept for so many different pence, and every one of these has his distinct remedy against the drawer.

This is too great an inconvenience to be got over; and it is such an inconvenience (I mean the multiplicity of suits) as the common law has always endeavoured to meet with. In the case of Hawkins v. Cardee, Salk. 65. it was held, that the indorsee of part could have no action, because says my Lord Chief Justice Holt, the drawer having only subjected himself to one action, it cannot be divided so as to subject him to two. If the grantee of a rent-charge levies a fine of part, the conusee cannot compel an attornment, for that would be to give two actions against the tenant. So if a feoffment were made to a man and his heirs with warranty, and he makes a feoffment to two, the warranty is gone. If two take lands jointly with warranty, and one makes a feoffment: the warranty is gone as to him, but remains as to his companion, so as he may vouch for a moiety; and at common law if they had made partition, the warranty was lost. Co. Litt. 187. a. And all this goes upon that ground, that it being res inter alios acta, it shall not turn to the prejudice of a third person. But this partial acceptance is a matter transacted between mere strangers; and therefore shall not hurt the drawer, who was no party to it. No act of theirs, which would be prejudicial to him, shall bind him. But the subjecting him to several actions will be a prejudice; therefore he shall not be subjected to several actions.

The great benefit arising to the publick from these bills is, their being negotiable and passing about as well as money; for every body is sensible, that without the assistance of these bills our trade could never be carried on for want of sufficient specie; not to mention the trouble and danger in returning money, which is avoided by this expedient. It is this benefit which the publick receives from these bills, that has intitled them to all the favour they have received, of which innumerable instances might be given. For this reason it has been held, that the bare drawing or accepting a bill, makes a merchant for that purpose. 1 Salk. 125. Show. 125. 2 Vent. 295. Now if what is contended for on the other side should prevail, the publick will be deprived of this great benefit; for no man will take this bill as so much money in the way of trade, when he is to resort to one man for one part, and perhaps send out of the kingdom for the other to a place where he has no correspondent. In the case of Jocelyn v. Laferre which was in this court Hil. 11 Ann. rot. 214. where the bill was to pay out of my growing subsistence, it was held, that in regard his growing subsistence might never amount to the sum drawn for, therefore this was not a bill of exchange within the custom of merchants, for no body would take it upon such a contingency. And the cases of promissory notes since the statute have gone upon the same reason. Smith v. Boheme, Mich. 1 Geo. in B. R. which was to pay money or surrender a man to prison. And the case of Appleby v. Biddle, in B. R. Hil. 3 Geo. which was to pay so much to A, if I do not pay so much to B. and both these were held not to be within the statute, upon that only reason that they were not negotiable.

Another inconvenience which naturally occurs upon this occasion is, that the drawee will insist to have the whole bill delivered up, when he pays but a part only. For according to the authors who treat of this subject he can never charge the drawer, when they come to make up their accounts, with more than he has vouchers for under the hand of the drawer. In Lex Mercatoria 274, it is said, that if the bill be lost, the drawee cannot justify the payment, though he has a letter of advice. And this refutes all the expedients of indorsing part, or giving a special receipt for so much, because in neither of those cases will the drawee have any authority to produce under the hand of the drawer. If the drawer then refuses to allow what the other has paid, his only remedy will be to bring his action; and how he will be able to maintain it upon the custom of merchants, I must confess myself at a loss to find out, for he will want the necessary evidence to maintain such an action, which is the bill itself that was drawn upon him.

If this then will be the case, where he pays the money without taking up the bill; I must contend that by all the rules of prudence and justice he may insist to have the whole bill delivered up to him, when he only pays part of it according to his acceptance.

Supposing him then in possession of the whole bill, I would consider in what a condition we have left the party to whom it was made payable. He must be supposed to have advanced a consideration adequate to the whole sum, and consequently is in justice intitled to his whole money of somebody or other. It will be said, that he may get what he can of the drawee, and then go back to the drawer for the residue. It is true he may do so, and the drawer may be a man of so much honour as to pay him every farthing. But what must he do when he finds he is mistaken in his man; when the drawer (instead of ordering him the money as he expected) shall tell him, No, you have nothing to produce under under my hand, and if you have been so foolish as to deliver up the bill, you must take it for your pains. I know of no remedy in this case but what would be worse than the disease, and therefore the prudentest thing he can do will be to sit down by the loss.

And this will be so far from being a trick in the drawer, that it will be no more than what every prudent man will do. For if upon the report of what has been done he should advance the residue of the money, yet still there is a bill standing out against him for the whole, upon which bill it cannot appear he has paid the money which the drawee had left unpaid. And whether in that case he would not afterwards be answerable for the whole, may be proper to be considered.

I have now done with what I had to offer in maintenace of the negative of the question I proposed to speak to, and shall therefore proceed to take notice of what was hinted at upon the former argument in behalf of the plaintiff in this case.

It was said that the drawee may (and very often does) accept to pay the money at a different time from what is appointed in the bill (1). I must admit he may do so, but surely that case can bear no proportion to this case. It is not liable to any of the inconveniences I mentioned; it is the same as if the bill had at first given him a longer time, and it is well known that after acceptance a month or two will break no squares where the man is good: with this further, that amongst merchants such an acceptance is esteemed a general acceptance to pay the money according to the tenor of the bill. Besides, Malley says, that in such a case the bill must be protested, which cannot be done in our case.

It was further urged to be highly reasonable, that the drawee should honour the bill as far as he had effects. I admit this to be reasonable, and perhaps it would not have been impossible for the plaintiff to have declared in such a manner, as to have charged the defendant to the amount of his acceptance: but we are here upon the custom of merchants, and whatever might be reasonable in case of private property, will cease to be so, when it appears to be pregnant of so many inconveniences to the publick as I have mentioned. And if the plaintiff has it in his power to frame a case wherein he may do himself justice, that makes the argument stronger against suffering him to break in upon the publick convenience for his private benefit. The policy of the law is, rather to let one man suffer, than to introduce a general inconvenience: but here we are to be led into the greatest inconveniences, even in a case where there is no danger of the party's suffering in the least; for he has a remedy, which stands clear of all these inconveniences, and there will be no harm in leaving him to that.

It was said, that if the drawer (who is supposed to know what effects he has in the other's hands) by drawing for more, subjects himself to several actions, it is his own fault. The answer to this is, that the very drawing for more, destroys the presumption that he knew how accounts stood. But amongst merchants, as I observed before, that is not the case, for they often honour one another's bill, where there are no effects at all.

But even admitting the drawer does not stand altogether clear of this objection, yet still this may be the case of one who cannot be supposed to know how the accounts stood between the drawer and the drawee: for it may happen this bill may be indorsed, and then the indorser is to be charged in the same manner as the drawer. The indorser will be liable to several actions, though he is no ways privy to any of the transactions between the indorsee and the drawee.

Upon breaking the case upon the former argument a difference was taken between the case of the acceptor and that of any other person: that he should not come and discharge himself against his own acceptance, whatever the other might have done as to refusing this partial acceptance. If this was his case only, it might be reasonable to extend this acceptance as far as it will go; but the hardship is, that what is law in his case, must likewise be law in the case of the drawer and indorser; so that here are two innocent persons who are to be involved in the same common fate; and that is never to be suffered, especially when the drawee may be charged in another name, which will not affect the drawer or indorser.

But if this partial acceptance should be thought good within the custom of merchants: yet the plaintiff can never recover in this action, in regard to the manner in which he has declared.

My first exception is, that the plaintiff by his own shewing has brought his action too soon. This is a declaration of last Michaelmas term, and the acceptance is laid to be the 9th of December 1717, to pay upon the 8th of February following, in consideration whereof he did the same day and year last mentioned, which was the 8th of February 1717, promise to pay the money on the 8th 8th day of February tunc proxime sequen'. Now there must, of necessity, be the intervention of a whole year between the 8th of February 1717, and the 8th day of February following: and then the case is no more, than that the plaintiff complains, that the defendant, on the 23d of October, had not paid him a sum of money, which, of his own shewing, was not to become due till the 8th of February following. If it were necessary to cite cases in maintenance of this exception, there are 1 Sid. 373. 1 Vent. 135.

Another exception is, that the plaintiff has not alleged any request before bringing the action, which he ought to have done; for the merchant who accepts is easy to be found, but the party to whom the bill is made payable may only be a traveller to whom the other cannot resort to pay the money. And this differs from the case of a bond, for there it is for the benefit of the obligor to save the penalty, so there needs no request to him to do an act for his own benefit. It will be said, that the action is a request; but if it be, still it recurs to that question, whether a request at the time of bringing the action is sufficient. And it is plainly not so, for then it is a request to pay the money four months before it became due.

I shall trouble your Lordship with but a word more, and it is this, the bill runs, Pay this my first bill my second not being paid, and therefore I must submit it, whether they ought not to have averred, that the second was unpaid. Indeed in the case of East v. Effington, Salk. 130. it was held well after a verdict (2); because if the second was paid, the jury could not find assumpsit as to the first: he was not to pay the first unless the second was unpaid, so the jury finding him bound to pay the first, that is an argumentative finding the second unpaid. But the court in that case inclined, it would have been ill upon a demurrer.

It will be said, that this should have been shewn for cause of demurrer. But this exception goes to the cause of action itself, and may as well be taken advantage of upon a general demurrer, as the want of setting out an attornment was in the case of Long v. Buckeridge. Astr. 106.

The whole both with relation to the matter and the manner of this declaration may be reduced to this dilemma: either this partial acceptance is good, or it is not. If it is good, yet the plaintiff has come too soon, without alleging what is necessary to make out his case, and consequently can never recover in this action. If it is not good, that alone will be sufficient to intitle us to judgment for the defendant.

(2) Held well after judgment by default. Stark v. Cheesman, Carth. 509,

Reeve contra. I am no otherwise prepared to argue this cause, than by acquainting the court, that a gentleman has often attendd, to inform you, that it is practicable to protest a bill for non-acceptance of part, and then resort back to the drawer. As to the inconveniences which are urged, they are as great of our side upon account of death or acts of bankruptcy. The drawee is not prejudiced; and as to the drawer, if part is paid, his debt is so much lessened, which is a benefit to him.

As to the first objection to the declaration, that we have brought our action too soon: it runs, in predicto octavum diem Febr. tunc proxime sequentem; so to support the declaration you will reject proxime sequentem, and then it stands as a promise to pay in February 1717. and the action is in October following.

2. No request was necessary, for upon the acceptance a duty arises, and this is not a collateral promise.

3. If the defendant had paid the second bill, he should have pleaded that matter in his discharge: and as to the case of East v. Effington, that was against the drawer upon the first contract, but this against the acceptor upon a new contract.

Strange replied as to predicto, it does not make the sentence inconsistent with proxime sequentem; for it is common to call the same day in a different year, the same day generally: and here it is no more than that the party promises on 8 February in one year to pay upon the same day in another year: and where a thing is grammatically right, the court will never reject it, as was held in the case of Wyatt v. Aland in B. R. Trin. 2 Ann.

They should have shewn the second bill unpaid, for it is in the nature of a condition precedent to their having any right to this action. As to the request, no debt arises upon the acceptance, for an indebitatus assumpsit will not lie upon a bill of exchange. Salk. 125.

Powys J. Either party might have refused this partial acceptance, and they were at the same liberty to take it: neither could force the other to it, but if both agree, volenti non fit injuria. The drawer trusts all to the discretion of the person to whom he gives the bill, and if that person leads him into inconveniences, who can help it?

Eyre

Eyre J. I think the declaration is well enough; we will reject proxime sequentem, and then all is right (3): there is no difference between the case of the drawer and the acceptor, for if he pays either of the bills, the drawer is not liable. Acceptance of one is so of both, though in fact it amounts to no more than an acceptance to pay the contents of one of them, and payment of one is a discharge of both: so that the averment that the money was not paid upon the first, goes to the second also. I searched, but could not find the record, of East v. Effington; and by my notes I find it went off immediately upon the answer, that the verdict had cured it. The precedents are as this declaration. Vidian Ent. 31. 67.

Where a bill runs, Pay my first, my second not being paid, action may be maintained on the first without averring the other was unpaid.

Fortescue J. I think there is a difference between the case of the drawer and acceptor, for the drawer is bound to pay all, the drawing being an actual promise; but the acceptor is bound to pay but one, and no action can be maintained but upon the very note which he accepts. There is another answer to the objection, that the action is brought too soon; and that is, that the plaintiff needed not set out any promise at all. 10 W. 3. Stalk v. Gheefeman, Salk. 128. Carth. 509. Lowther v. Conyers, which was upon a promissory note, and they had left out super se assumpsit, and yet it was held well enough, for the law raises a promise. And this is likewise an answer to the want of request.

In Molloy and the other books there is a whole paragraph about the partial acceptance of a bill of exchange, and they allow it to be good. So judgment was given for the plaintiff.

Strange pro quer' in errore. A peer (and consequently a peeress) cannot be attached, but should be brought in by summons; whereas this declaration runs, that the duchess attachiata fuit ad respondendum. Sed per curiam, Whether that be right or wrong is not material; for if it be wrong, yet according to the modern resolutions you cannot reverse a judgment by the recital of the writ, but must bring the very process itself before the court.

2. The duchess is put in misericordia generally, which ought not to be; the statute of Magna Charta, c. 14. appoints quod comites et barones non amercientur nisi per pares suos, et non nisi secundum modum delicti. But though it says per pares suos, yet I admit that long usage has vested that power in the judges of the King's courts, who are to be looked on as pares quoad hoc. The amercements of the nobility are now reduced to a certainty; a Duke 10 l. and an Earl or other Baron 5 l. And as to what may be said, that here is an &c. which implies an amercement according to law. To that I answer, that then there is no distinction made between the amercements of Peers and common persons, which Mr. Selden in his treatise of Baronage says ought to be, for his words are, "That in case of amercements of Barons of Parliament upon non-suits or other judgments ending in misericordia, there is a special course both for the sum and the way of ascertaining it, which differs from the amercements of common persons." And then he goes on and gives you the roll in Edward the Second's time, where a writ was directed to the justices de C. B. that they should not amerce the abbot of Crowland tanquam baro, for that he held not per baroniam. Now there was no need of this, if he might be generally amerced. And my Lord Coke, 2 Inst. 28. says, if a nobleman, and a common person join in an action, they shall be severally amerced, the nobleman at 100 s. and the common person according to the statute. So is Bro. Amercement 2. Sed per curiam, It is the constant way, to say in misericordia, &c. which implies every thing, and we cannot overturn the precedents. Judgment affirmed.

If there be a nichil returned as to the lands, there may be a ca. sa. after an elegit.

It was moved to quash the capias ad satisfaciendum, because the plaintiff by taking out an elegit, had waived any other execution. And for this all the old cases were cited. But the court held the capias ad satisfaciendum was regular, for there being a nichil returned as to the lands, the elegit was but in the nature of a common fieri facias, upon which if the part be levied, the plaintiff may afterwards have a capias ad satisfaciendum. The election is not compleat, unless the plaintiff has some benefit from the land; for the taking out the writ is not an actual election, but only in order to an election; and if there be no lands, there is nothing to chuse, and consequently no election (1).

Arnold v. Nesbitt
4 Moore 69
Whitton v. Rawns
2 Scott 639.

ERROR of a judgment in C. B. in an action of covenant brought upon a lease for years; and the breach assigned in non-payment of rent: judgment by default, inquiratur de dampnis: general errors, and want of an original, and returned accordingly: another original alleged by defendant of another term, and a certiorari prayed, and one returned and set forth; and some little variances; and in nullo est erratum pleaded.

Strange pro quer' in errore. This is an action by a man and his wife and a third person, who is tenant in common with the wife, upon a lease at will made during the coverture, of lands which are the inheritance of the wife and that third person, for arrears of rent incurred during the coverture; and therefore the wife cannot join in such an action, for 1 Sid. 224. she shall join in no action, but what will survive to her, or her administrator after the death of the husband: now the husband is fully intitled to the rent incurred during the coverture, and if she dies, he, and not her administrator, shall have those arrears. Co. Litt. 351. a. 1 Roll. Abr. 345. H. 1.

As this is but a lease at will, it is not within the statute 32 H. 8. c. 28. which requires, that the wife should be made a party to leases of her land, and the reservation be to her and heirs; for that statute extends only to leases for life or years. And though the reservation here be to her as well as to the rest, yet that will make no difference; for during his life, it is in the eye of the law a reservation only to the husband; and they are not to declare upon it according to the fact, but according to the operation of law. If one jointenant pleads, that the other concessit to him, it is ill; for it should have been pleaded as a release, that being the only proper conveyance between jointenants. 2 Saund. 97. 2 Vent. 141, 260, 266. In 3 Lev. 290. that was pleaded as a grant, which could enure only as a covenant to stand seised; and it was held ill. So is Salk. 8, 274.

Sed per curiam: The husband and wife may, or may not, join in this action at their election, as where a bond is to both of them (1). 4 H. 5. 6. Cro. Jac. 77. Cro. Eliz. 61.

2 Exception. To the manner wherein the plaintiffs have deduced their title. Under this head we are to lay the husband out of the case, and consider how the wife and the other persons have made themselves out to be tenants in common. They say, that one James Scrape was seised in fee of the demised premises, and that upon his death the same descended to him and her as cousins and heirs. Now the court cannot take a man and a woman, without more shewing, to be co-heirs. The fact I suppose is, that the mothers of these two were sisters, who both died in the life of the ancestor, and so the plaintiffs, who are the respective issues of those parceners, stand now in the place of their mothers, and claim what would otherwise have belonged to them, in case they had survived Scrape. But then in deducing their title, they ought to have shewn all this; for they must claim through their mothers to make themselves heirs to him that last died seised; for according to the case of Collingwood and Pace, it is a mediate and not an immediate descent; they must claim mediante matre. All the precedents of formedons by cousin and heir shew how he became so, and in Salk. 355. it was held, that he who sues as heir, must shew coment heir, and it is not sufficient for him to say generally, that he is heir.

In covenant the plaintiff need not set out a title for quod cum dimississet is enough, and if he does it wrong it is surplusage.

1 Vent. 413.

It will perhaps be said, that this being an action of covenant, the plaintiffs were not obliged to set out any title, but might have begun generally, quod cum dimississent. I admit they might, and then the court would have intended they had a title to make this lease, when the other accepted it. But when the plaintiffs undertake to set out a title, and fail in doing it; there is no room in that case for intendments, for the court will never intend the plaintiffs have a better title than they themselves rely upon. Every man is supposed to make the best of his own case, and upon that ground the rule is, that every man's plea shall be taken most strongly against himself. Plowd. 104. a. 202. b. And in many cases what a man does unnecessarily shall vitiate his proceedings, as where he mis-recites a publick statute. 4 Co. 48. a. Plowd. 77. b.

[231] Sed per curiam : The introduction by setting out the descent is nothing to the purpose here, where they declare upon their own demise, and therefore there can be nothing in that exception.

In a covenant to pay or cause to be paid, the breach may be general that he did not pay.

3. The breach is not well assigned : the covenant is in the disjunctive, to pay or cause to be paid to them or any of them ; but as to part of the time the breach is only that he did not pay, and as to the other part, that he did not pay to them, whereas he may have caused the rent to be paid to one of them, which is a performance. And there being two ways, the breach ought to have been so large, as to exclude both ways, by either of which the act might be done. 21 Ed. 3. 29. b. And since the plaintiffs have in one breach obviated one part of the objection, and in the other the other part ; this looks as if they were conscious to themselves that there was some variation in the fact : that where they say generally we did not pay, yet we may have caused to be paid ; and that where they charge a non-payment to all, yet there might be a payment to one of them, which is enough within the words of the covenant.

Sed per curiam : He that causes to pay, pays ; and if you have paid the money to one of them, you may plead it in your discharge.

Variance. It would have been amendable by 5 Geo. 1. c. 13.

Then I moved to quash the writ of error, which describes the suit to be between the plaintiff and one John Aleberry alias diē John Aleberry of Waltham Abbey, and the alias diē is abby in the record, one is b, e, y, and the other b, y. This variance is in the alias diē, where the court has always obliged the party to describe the specialty literatim. And in these cases you never go by the sound, because the party has something else to guide him ; and if he mistakes, it is to be imputed to his own negligence. In a plea of misnomer indeed it is otherwise, because there the party has nothing to go by but the sound.

plea of misnomer in abatement. And I apprehend the reason of all these cases is what is said down in Dr. Drake's case; that in all cases where the party has any record or specialty by which he may make an exact description, in such case the most minute variance is fatal. And Mr. Justice Powys, who held with the exception, about not and nor, said, that if the court once gave into solutions of those variances, they would never know where to stop; but being once out at sea, would find it very difficult to steer into harbour again. Salk. 660.

I must admit, that this writ of error would have been well enough, if the alias dict' had been left out, because it is sufficient if the record answers the description; and though it would contain more, yet that excess must of necessity imply a fulness, and if there be a full answer to the description, it is as much as is required. But though it would be good in such a case, yet I have often heard it said in this court, that though it is not requisite to insert the addition, yet any variance whatsoever, if the party will take upon him to be more than ordinarily particular, is fatal; for then the record does not answer the description, as it does where the writ of error makes a total omission of the addition.

Sed per curiam: The cases cited are of variances in the name of the party, which is more considerable than the place of his residence. These words are both properly used, some spell it abbey and some abby; and if there be occasion, we may take the latter as an abbreviation of the former. Per curiam: The record is well removed, and the judgment must be affirmed.

Qy. Whether one defendant may bring error of a judgment against two.

Jacob Schmidt
3 Nov 643

REEVE moved to quash the writ of error, because the judgment is against two defendants, and so described in the writ of error, but then it is laid to be only ad grave damnum of one of them. Now the persons who are named under the ad grave damnum are they, and only they, who bring the writ of error. So that the case is no more than that one defendant brings a writ of error of a judgment against two, whereas all ought to join, 6 Co. Ruddock's case.

Strange contra. The first answer I would give to this objection is, that the ground and foundation of quashing writs of error is for some variance appearing between them and the record, of which there is none in this case. The three requisites in a writ of error are, to denote the court where, the parties between whom, and the subject matter of the suit; all which are truly described described in this writ of error. And then the saying it is ad grave damnum of one only, when it appears to be a judgment against two, can never be construed to be a variance; for if it be to the damage of both, it must be to the damage of each, and so the record answers the description. Whether therefore when there is no variance, the court will quash this writ of error, or not rather put the party to demur to our assignment of errors, that I must submit to the court.

But waiving that, I take the writ of error to be well enough as it now stands. The fact is, that one of the defendants died before bringing the writ of error; but as that does not appear in the cause, I admit the case must be taken to be, that one defendant alone brings a writ of error of a judgment against himself and another, and this I apprehend to be well enough.

It will not be denied, but that as this judgment is joint, if there be error in it as to one defendant only, yet the whole must be reversed. 1 Roll. Abr. 775. E. 2. Cro. Jac. 303. Sti. 121. And this may be done at the instance of that defendant only, who can say it is erroneous. 5 Ed. 4. 7. a. is express, that if judgment in trespass be given against three, one of whom was dead, the other shall not have a writ of error of that judgment, but only the executor of the party deceased; and yet the costs being joint, the judgment must be reversed in toto. Bro. Joinder in action 77. In trespass against two, who are condemned in an erroneous judgment, it is said, they may join or sever in a writ of error at their election.

There is but one precedent, which comes up to this case, and that is in Hearn's Pleader 466. in the book, but the right page is 370. and it is thus: "Because in the record and proceedings of a fine between W. B. now deceased and J. V. plaintiffs and J. L. deforçant error hath intervened, to the great damage of W. B. son and heir of the said W. B." So that the heir alone brings a writ of error of a judgment against his ancestor and another, and assigns that for error which vacates the fine in toto. And if one plaintiff, who voluntarily joins himself with another, may when he pleases desert him; a fortiori may defendants sever in their writs of error, for they are not joined together at their own election, but at the will of the plaintiff. And agreeable to this entry is Cro. Eliz. 115.

If the defendants may not sever in their writs of error, the inconvenience will be great, that the plaintiff may if he pleases join me with a defendant who is under his own power, and will never consent to bring a writ of error; and then I shall be remediless, dilels, be the judgment never so erroneous. For as to what may be said, that summons and severance lies; that is only after a writ of error brought. If two bring a writ of error, and upon the scire facias quare executio non, one only appears; there summons and severance lies. Yelv. 4. And upon that the judgment is, that one alone shall prosecute that writ, which was brought jointly by them both. But if it be not brought by both, there can be no summons and severance; and therefore if one refuses to join, the other ought to be at liberty to bring it alone. And there will be no inconvenience to the plaintiff, for his judgment can but be reversed; and if it be erroneous, what matter is it to him whether it be reversed at the instance of all the defendants, or of one of them only?

Curia. If it had any where appeared, that the other defendant was dead; there is no doubt but this defendant alone, without the executor of the other, might bring a writ of error: but as nothing of that appears, and the judgment is joint; it should seem as if all must be mentioned under the ad grave damnum.

[235] And to this purpose was the case of Pennoir v. Brace tempore (a) 1 Ld. Raym. W. 3. 5 Mod. 338. Salk. 319. 5 Mod. 16. 69. (a) 71. S. C.

(2) The meaning of this case is that error will lie upon a judgment of nonsuit, and not that there is good ground for bringing it, because judgment has been given against the plaintiff for costs. This case was affirmed for law in the following one in C. B. "In an action of assumpsit upon a special agreement and the general issue pleaded, plaintiff was nonsuited at the Kent spring assizes: but immediately after the taxation of costs served defendant with the allowance of a writ of error: notwithstanding this, the defendant proceeded to take out a fi. fa. for the costs under which the sheriff took the plaintiff's goods in execution. A rule being obtained to shew cause why the fi. fa. should not be set aside and the goods restored to the plaintiff, Bond Serjeant shewed for cause, that no writ of error could be brought on a judgment of nonsuit in an action of assumpsit and the general issue pleaded, as the plaintiff was out of court and no error could be assigned on the proceedings, Kirby Serj. contra, relied upon its being the constant practice, and cited Newell v. Pidgeon in support of it. At first the court questioned whether a writ of error could be brought on such judgment. On the next day however, after consulting with the officers, they held that the writ would lie, but that on the affidavits it was clear that it ought not to have been brought in this case, they therefore discharged the rule. And they intimated, that they would never interfere either to stay proceedings, or to set aside an execution, because a writ of error was depending at the suit of the plaintiff on a judgment of nonsuit, unless the plaintiff could shew he had brought the writ of error for some error that could be pointed out and relied upon by his counsel." *Box v. Legacy to a child discharged by provision subsequent to the will. (1)

A Daughter having married without her father's consent, he gave her no portion, but made his will, and thereby gave her 50*l.* to be lent out for her, and she to have the use of it. Her husband being informed of this legacy, applies to the father for the money presently, who gave it him, and took a receipt for it in lieu of her portion, and of the legacy given by his will. The father died without altering his will, upon which his daughter and her husband sue the administrator in the spiritual court for the legacy, and the administrator brings his bill in this court.

(a) Qu. if not S. C. with Elkenhead's case, cited 2 Vern. 257.

Vernon pro quer' quoted Birkenhead v. Birkenhead (a) in Lord Egerton's time, where the father having by will given 1500*l.* a-piece to his three daughters, afterwards married one of them, and gave 1500*l.* portion, and died without altering his will; and adjudged the portion a satisfaction of the legacy.

Master of the Rolls. Whether this be a case relievable in the spiritual court I am not certain: I rather think this receipt is not pleadable there, being a release of a legacy before it is due. But in this court it amounts to an agreement of the son-in-law, to discharge the legacy. Besides the precedents here run all this way, that a child's legacy is satisfied by a provision subsequent to the will. Let the proceedings in the spiritual court be stayed.

THE plaintiff married the defendant without a previous settlement of her estate, which was a very considerable personal estate. Quarrels happened between them soon after the marriage, and she exhibited her bill here, to oblige him to settle her own estate to her separate use: setting forth, that upon his addressing her, she insisted on having the entire disposal of her own estate, and drew up a short writing with her own hand to that purpose; that he promised to sign it, but put her off on pretence of advising with counsel, and having writings more at large prepared; prepared; that she frequently demanded of him to execute such writings, which he constantly promised, as soon as finished by counsel, but delayed it till she married him. That after marriage she pressed him by letter to perform his promise, and he answered her by another letter, that he thought it very reasonable she should have the disposal of her own estate, that he never intended the contrary, but that she should command her own fortune as she pleased.

The defendant denied he signed any such agreement in writing, and as to any parol promise he pleaded the statute of frauds and perjuries. 29 Car. 2. c. 3.

It was insisted on for the plaintiff, that the court frequently compels the execution of promises not solemnized according to that statute, where fraud and trick appear, and where part of the agreement is carried into execution, as it is here by the marriage, which was the consideration of that promise. But Parker Lord Chancellor allowed the plea, and said this was only a breach of promise, which is a sort of injury that this court does not take cognizance of. If there had been fraud (as if pretending to execute a real deed of settlement he had imposed another on her) this might have made it a proper case for equity; but here is nothing of any such deceit: she marries him on his word and promise, without writing, and that is the very case the statute intended. To say therefore the agreement is to be executed in this court, because performed in part by the marriage, is to break the very words and intention of the statute, which has put this very case, and says it shall not be binding. [237]

The plaintiff afterwards amended her bill by a further charge, that in order to induce her to marry him without a previous settlement, and to secure the performance of his promise in executing it afterwards, he promised to take the sacrament on it, and that he did take the sacrament on the marriage accordingly. That after the marriage he wrote a letter, wherein he promised to make such settlement, and that he was ready to sign the writings according to her desire (1).

To this he confesses he did take the sacrament on the marriage, but says he did it only in compliance with a custom established in the Romish church (of which he was a member) of receiving the sacrament on their marriages, and not to give any sanction to this pretended agreement. And as to the letter, he doth not remember the particulars, but if he has wrote any thing concerning his readiness to sign any writings, it only related to some proposals he had made of settling a sum of 1500*l.* on her, and which he did soon after sign. He then pleads the statute of frauds and perjuries again.

(1) According to the report in 1 Eq. Abr. 19. the husband privately countermanded the instructions given by him for drawing the settlement, and then drew in Lady Mountague to marry him, and see the Rep. in Proc. in Chanc. 526.

Lord Chancellor. The case is very much altered now, from what it was at first. Then it stood purely on the parol promise before marriage, upon which there was no colour to relieve the plaintiff. But such parol promise on marriage is sufficient consideration, to support a settlement made agreeable to it after marriage. This has been frequently determined. So it is also sufficient consideration to establish a promise made in writing after marriage. Now here is great evidence of such a promise made in writing after marriage; he doth not deny his writing, that he was ready to execute the writings as she desired; but avoids it by saying, they referred to proposals of settling 1500*l.* which is impossible, because it appears she never desired any such settlement. And though he says he has signed that settlement, it doth not appear when he did it; and I am very jealous he did it since the amended bill. His answer to the charge of receiving the sacrament in confirmation of his promise, is not at all satisfactory. He could have no occasion to promise receiving the sacrament, but on that account; and though he might receive it in compliance with the custom of his church, yet that is very consistent with his laying hold of that solemn act of devotion, to testify his sincerity. Therefore let the plea stand for an answer.

time; and all his real estate he devises to trustees, to raise by sale or otherwise sufficient to discharge his debts and legacies, if the personal estate should fall short. A. dies; the son dies under age; the daughter marries the defendant, and they join in a suit in the spiritual court against the trustees, who are also executors, for her own legacy of 1000 l. and as representative of her brother for his 1500 l.

The executors exhibit their bill here, to stop the proceedings in the spiritual court, and compel the husband to settle the legacy on the wife. The defendant insists on his right to the legacy, independent of any settlement, he being now in a proper court for the recovery of it without the assistance of this court; and that he is intitled to the 1500 l. immediately, though the son was not to have it till his age of twenty-four.

Upon this two questions arose. 1. Whether this court could interpose on behalf of the wife, and secure the legacy for a settlement on her. 2. Whether the son's legacy of 1500 l. is not extinguished by his death before it became due. Or if it subsists, whether his representative is intitled to it sooner than he himself would have been, if he had lived.

As to this last point Mr. Vernon said, There had been cases both ways, but were reconcileable on this distinction; where interest of the legacy payable at a certain age has been given to the infant in the mean time, there the money has been held payable to the representative immediately: but where no interest has been given, the money was not payable till the time the legatee would have arrived at that age. The present case, he said, was a sort of middle way between both: no interest, but some present advantage, viz. maintenance is given.

Master of the Rolls. The 1500 l. given is first and principally a charge on the personal estate, and is an absolute legacy out of that: the real estate is only devised in aid of the personal, nor is it to be sold directly, but only at the discretion of his trustees and executors, to be disposed of so far as the debts and legacies shall require. As this then is not a direct legacy out of the real estate, the death of the party before it became payable shall not extinguish it (3). And this differs from Pawlet's case, 2 Vent. 366 (a). That there is a distinction between portions given by a parent to children, and those given by a collateral person. That in the former case the court will consider the very purpose for which the portion was given, and that if the child dies before it is wanted, it shall sink into the estate for the benefit of the heir.

son's representative being thus intitled, the next question is as to the time. Had this 1500 l. carried interest immediately to the infant, though the time of payment of the principal was deferred, yet on his death his representative would have had a right to it immediately: not that he would have been in a better condition than the infant was, since the delay of payment was only by way of caution, but with equal benefit to the legatee. And the executor is not hurt, because on payment of the money the interest ceases. The appointment of maintenance is said to be equivalent to the giving interest, but I think interest carries the whole benefit of the legacy, but maintenance is something distinct and independant of it (5). It is a decent provision during minority, and bounded, not by the profit of the money, but the necessities of his sustenance and education.

As to the wife's legacy of 1000 l. the bill is of an unusual nature. It has indeed been the common course of this court, to oblige a husband who comes hither in right of his wife for a sum of money, to make a proper settlement on her before it is given him; and that, not only in the case of trust money, which can be recovered no where else, but in the case of legacies too. Though I must say, had this been res integra, I should be very cautious, how I went so far as legacies, because there is a proper court elsewhere for the recovery of them: they originally belonged to the spiritual court only, and the sole ground of this court's intermeddling is, the discovery the testator's personal estate. But the present case is different: the persons liable to pay the legacies are plaintiffs here, and not the husband; and whether they would not have been safe in paying the legacy, if they had suffered the spiritual court to go on to sentence, I will not say.

Where the court will oblige this husband to settle what he sues for of the wife's upon her (6).

This seems to have something of the nature of an interpleading bill, wherein the executors call upon the husband and wife to interplead concerning their several rights; the husband to the money absolutely, and the wife to a proper provision to be secured for herself. And then it will be like the common case, of a husband's coming into this court to have a legacy against his wife. And I have observed a strong inclination in Lord Cowper's

Turton vers. Benson. In Canc'.

THE bill was to be relieved against a bond obtained in fraud of a marriage settlement: and the case was thus. The plaintiff being a young man in 1710. made his addressee to one Mrs. Benson: the plaintiff's mother and uncle were concerned in transacting it for him, and on 29 June 1710. marriage articles were executed, whereby Mr. Benson was to give 3000 l. as a portion with his daughter, and Mrs. Turton was to part with 300 l. per annum out of her jointure, to make a settlement on the marriage: but secretly, without the privity of the mother or uncle, the plaintiff gave bond to refund 1000 l. part of the portion, to Benson at the end of seven years; and soon after, the marriage took effect. In 1713 Benson deposited this bond in the hands of Sir Theodore Janssen as a security for a debt, but made no actual assignment. In 1714 Benson died, and his wife the defendant took out administration; but his debts being beyond the value of his estate, the creditors came to an agreement amongst themselves and with her, whereby Sir Theodore's whole debt was to be paid, and all Benson's effects to be turned into money, and divided amongst the rest of the creditors, and the plaintiff's bond, and all the debts to be got in by the administratrix: and creditors on simple contract to be in equal degree with those on specialties. During this transaction one of the chief creditors acquainted the plaintiff with their designs, and that his bond was to be assigned to them; who answered, that if Mrs. Benson was to have the benefit of it, he would never pay it; but if they were, he would not dispute it with them. In this condition the bond stood in 1715. when the plaintiff brought his bill against the administratrix to have it delivered up. When that cause was at hearing, the creditors bring a bill against the plaintiff and administratrix to discover collusion. Both causes came on before the Master of the Rolls, who decreed for Mr. Turton, and now they came by appeal before the Chancellor.

The questions were, whether this bond was void in its original creation; and if so, whether it has not been since made good by some subsequent matter, either by its being transferred for some valuable consideration, or by the promise of the plaintiff not to dispute it.

As to the first, it was said by the counsel for the plaintiff, that it was a sort of first principle and settled rule in this court, to make void all contracts of this nature, whereby marriage articles, settled by the consent of all parties concerned, are any ways defeated by the private agreements of some of them. And several cases were cited, to establish this rule. Salk. 156. where it was laid down as a rule, that a son, without the privity of the father, or parent treating the match, gives bond to refund part of the portion, it is void. Ibid. 158.

1 Vern. 348.

Sir R. Raymond cited Redman v. Redman in 1685, in this court, where on a treaty of marriage the friends of the lady insisted on the husband's discharging all his debts before the marriage. There was one bond which his brother agreed to pay for him, but underhand with the privity of the lady, who was afraid of losing the match, took a counter security of the husband; and the marriage took effect. Afterwards the brother paid the money on the bond, the husband died, and he sued the counter security against the widow, who had taken administration. She brought her bill, and though privy to the fraud, was relieved; because it was done originally to defeat a marriage agreement.

1 Vern. 475.

So in the case of Gale v. Lindo. On a treaty of marriage the fortune of the young woman not being sufficient for the husband, she prevails on her brother to make up the deficiency by a bond of his; but privately agrees with him, that no use should be made of it. They were married accordingly; and the husband dying, she took out administration, and put the bond in suit: the brother sues here for relief, but denied because the agreement was fraudulent.

Mr. Vernon quoted the following cases to the same purpose, Lamley v. Hamond, Mich. 1714. a mother for the advancement of her son in marriage agreed to part with her jointure; the son at the same time had a leasehold estate of his own, which he privately contracted to assign over to her in consideration of what she was to settle upon him: after the marriage the son died, and his representative recovered this leasehold estate out of her hands by a decree of this court, because there was no mention made of that assignment on the marriage treaty.

1 Vern. 240.

Peyton v. Bladwell, 9 March 1694. Mr. Bladwell on the marriage of his nephew Yelverton Peyton with the daughter of Sir John Roberts, agreed to settle an estate of 200 l. per annum on them for a jointure, and after his death to settle a further estate of 100 l. per annum on him and his heirs. After the marriage it was discovered, that there was a private agreement between him and his nephew, that he should demise the first estate back again to Bladwell at 150 l. per annum rent; and as to the reversionary estate, that he should release that; and such demise and release were executed accordingly: after the nephew's death his wife and Sir

Sir John Roberts sue in this court to set aside this private agreement, and had a decree, whereby Bladwell was to account for the profits of the estate in possession at the rate of 200 l. per annum from the time of the demise, and to settle the other estate of 100 l. per annum on the heirs of Peyton to commence after his own death. Sloan v. Fowler. On the marriage of Fowler's son with Sloan's daughter, Fowler by articles was to make a settlement, and to have the portion to himself; but he told his son, the portion was not sufficient to pay younger childrens' fortunes, and so got a bond from his son for a sum of money beyond the wife's fortune: this bond came afterwards into the court of Chancery, and was set aside, because it was taken without the privity of the wife's relations.

As to the second question, whether the creditors as purchasers of this bond for a valuable consideration are not in a better condition than Benson was.

For the plaintiff it was said, here was really no assignment at all; it was only deposited in Sir Theodore's hands as a security, but not designed to transfer the interest: or if there had been an assignment, that gives no property or right, a bond being a chose in action not being assignable but in equity, and then it must be attended in the assignee's hands with all the circumstances of equity with which the first obligee held it. If therefore it was void in equity in its original creation, it cannot be made good by any equitable conveyance: the creditors can have no better right than Benson had: their right is only to his estate, which if he possessed unlawfully, can be no better in their hands. So it is in case of bankrupts. Creditors under the assignment shall have no better right to the effects than the bankrupt himself had. Taylor v. Wheeler. Plaintiff had lent money on a copyhold estate, and a surrender was made accordingly: by the custom of the manor surrenders are void unless presented in a year, and this surrender was neglected to be presented: afterwards, and before the money was paid, Wheeler the debtor became bankrupt, and a commission was taken out, and this copyhold inter alia assigned: the assignees get admittance, and the mortgagee sues here for relief: they urge in favour of the assignees, that this copyhold continued in the bankrupt till his bankruptcy: the only thing that stuck with Lord Cowper was, that the plaintiff by his suffering him to continue in possession, and not presenting the surrender by which the mortgage might have been discovered, induced others on the credit of that estate to trust him, and now the assignees have both law and equity of their side; but yet the plaintiff was relieved on that maxim, that the creditors shall be in no better condition than the bankrupt himself was.

2 Vern. 60.

And in these cases where fraud has been purged by a legal conveyance on valuable consideration without notice, yet the persons that conveyed with notice of the fraud have been obliged to make it good. In the case of Ferrers v Cherry, Cherry having notice of a settlement wherein the father was only tenant for life in equity, accepts a conveyance in fee from him, and afterwards sold it to purchasers without notice: on a bill by the son for relief, the purchasers having law and equity on their side had no decree against them, but the court went so far as to order Cherry to answer for the fraud. Another case was Bovey v. Smith. Trustees had sold without notice of the trust in the purchaser; he levied a fine, and non-claim for five years: sixteen years after, the trustees purchase back this estate for a valuable consideration: this appeared to the court on a bill by the cestui que trust; and though the fraud was purged, yet the court decreed the estate became again chargeable in their hands, and the lands were decreed to the plaintiff accordingly.

As to the plaintiff's promise, it was said to be rather a compliment than a promise: or if it was one, yet there was no consideration for it.

For the defendant Serjeant Chefbyre and Mr. Talbot, could not dispute the general rule of discharging contracts made in fraud of marriage settlements; but said the plaintiff ought not to come here, because himself was not only not defrauded, but was even a party to the fraud against the mother.

The second question was chiefly insisted on. They said the original fraud was purged by the subsequent conveyance for valuable consideration, and likened it to the case of Prodgers v. Langham, 1 Sid. 134. where agreed per curiam, That though a deed be fraudulent in its creation, and voidable by a purchaser: yet it may be made good by matter ex post facto; as feoffee by covin makes a feoffment for valuable consideration, the second feoffee has a good title. So in the case of Ellis v. Warns, Cro. Jac. 32. In debt upon a bond, the defendant pleads an usurious contract between himself and one A. by which he became bound to the plaintiff for a debt he owed A. and which A. owed the plaintiff; the plaintiff replies a just debt without any privity of the usurious contract between him and A. and on demurrer held a good replication.

Sarrot v. Fielding in Lord Somers's time. Sarrot was desired by one Dod in the country to draw a bill for him on his correspondent in town payable to Dod or order: he did so, but insisted on the payment of the money before the delivery of the bill, but by reason of a hurry of business then in the shop it was neglected, and and the bill was sent to town without the plaintiff's receiving any money for it: the defendant purchased it, and sued the plaintiff at law: he applied here for relief, because he had never been paid for it; but Lord Somers dismissed the bill.

The promise of the plaintiff was said not to be nudum pactum, because though he gained nothing by it, yet the creditors parted with some of their right, for they consented to admit simple contract debts upon an equality with bond debts, and to pay Sir Theodore his whole debt; and a loss on one side is sufficient to raise an assumpsit in the eye of the law.

Lord Chancellor. These private agreements contrary to publick transactions have been always discouraged by this court, even where the parties have come to be eased against their own agreement. And this is so far from distinguishing the present case from others, that it is a circumstance of all the cases that have been cited, and indeed cannot be otherwise, since the settlements against which these private contracts are made, are always for the benefit of the parties to the marriage. The imposition which the court provides against is not upon the person that marries, but on those that are concerned in contracting for him; and I think this case as great a fraud as any that have been mentioned (1).

The next consideration is, whether the creditors have a better case of it than Benson. And first it is clear, that any assignment of Benson could not have mended it; that would be to destroy all the power and care of the court in cases of this nature at once, for is it then but to assign over, and nothing can reach it. But he cannot properly assign a bond nor the penalty of it: the sense and meaning of such assignment is, that the assignee shall have all the benefit, which the assignor would have of it, in equity (2). Suppose a person assigns a bond that is paid, can the assignee take advantage of that bond? But indeed in this case here is no assignment nor any thing like it.

But in the next place, though the party doing the fraud cannot make the bond better; it is another consideration whether the party injured cannot amend it. And I think he may as far as the consideration of it goes; for the bond is not absolutely void; and though the mother is the person injured, yet if the son independent of the marriage will afterwards give a new bond for it, I think it will stand good against him. But there is nothing of that nature in the present case: there is no assignment to the creditors. The composition and agreement amongst the creditors is beneficial to them, without any consideration of this bond. The plaintiff's promise insisted on was without any consideration at all: it does not appear that it induced the agreement, or any thing was done on it, but what would have been done without it. Creditors are indeed intitled to favour, but it is only with regard to the debtor's estate, and not other people's. I think the decree of the Master of the Rolls is right, and ought to be affirmed, and a perpetual injunction go as to the bond.

C. J. The declaration is ill, for it should have shewn when it was made into hay, and dated the wrong from thence: the replication is well enough in the copulative, because the plea is one intire matter of excuse, and the defendant relies on the whole, and not on each particular's being impassable. Et per Powys J. The defendant has not denied the wrong which the plaintiff has laid, but takes upon him to excuse the whole. Et per Eyre J. Suppose the tenant will not make it into hay, the parson has no remedy to compel him, but he may do it himself, which it appears he has had time enough for. Fortescue J. The issue is well offered, for the passages being over the ditches, (as they must be, because it is said the close was surrounded) it was proper to put it in the copulative. The time laid in declarations is for the most part immaterial (a), and in trespass it is sufficient if part of the time be according to law, because the jury may apportion it, or the party release it: it is plain, here is a wrong for some part of the time, and I believe the precedents will warrant this declaration. Hearn 725. 1 Brown 69, 70. ulterius.

Pleas, (C. 19.)

Chesbyre Serjeant pro defendente. If the parson is hindred by the act of God, or the party, from taking his tithes; it is an excuse. 1 Roll. Abr. 109. pl. 37. Though our plea is double, yet it is a principle in pleading that if the other does not demur, he must answer the whole plea. Our plea amounts to this. The way, says he, to the close was very bad, and if I could have got through, yet when I came to the close, it was so encompassed with ditches, and those filled with water, that I could not have got over. The replication puts us to prove both, when either is an excuse, and therefore it is bad. 1 Saund. 268.

The declaration likewise is ill, because the defendant cannot be guilty as to all the time; for the court will take notice, that it is impossible to make the grass into hay the same day it is cut: and the parson has of common right time to have it made into hay. If a man reserves a rose, the court so far respects the order of nature, as not to make him pay it in winter.

Reeve contra. The plea is not double, but the defendant relies upon it as making one intire excuse, and therefore we have properly traversed the words of it in our replication.

As to the declaration, it is well enough, for the measure of the damages is not how long the cocks remained after they were cut, but after a reasonable time to remove them; as in an action for beating his servant per quod servitium amisit, the smart of the servant is not the measure of the damages, but it is the loss of service which the master recovers for; and what is a reasonable time in this case, is matter of evidence, and must be left to a jury.

But if we do go for too much, they are not proper to make the objection, till they see whether we take damages for an improper time; for as part of this time is well alleged, the jury may sever the time, and give damages accordingly.

Powys J. held with the plaintiff. Et per Eyre J. The plea is not double, for the first part is only inducement, but the gist of it is the ditches being filled with water; so the replication meeting the plea is right. It is certain the defendant let his tithes lie too long, and that is a damage to the parishioner. If a continuando is laid in trespass, the jury may give damages as to part of the time only.

Replication in the copulation that ditches, ways, and passages, were not filled with water, to a plea that they were, is good.

Fortescue J. The replication is well enough, for the substance of the plea is but one fact, That he could not come at his tithes; and all the rest is only matter of circumstance. We cannot judge what is a reasonable time, because of the accidents of wind and weather, but that is to be left to a jury; and if the plaintiff had gone only from three or four days after the cutting, I do not see how that could have mended the case upon a demurrer. Judicium pro querente (2).

Int. Pasch' 5 Geo. In B. R. rot. 187.

Declaration sur attachment in prohibition, wherein the plaintiff sets forth, that before the making of the statute 3 Geo. intitled, An act for the better regulating of pilots for conducting of ships and vessels from Dover, Deal and the isle of Thanet up the rivers of Thames and Medway, he was publicly examined by the elder and more experienced members of the society of pilots of Trinity-house touching his skill and experience in the piloting of ships, Construction of statute relating to the piloting of ships. 3 Geo. 1. c. 13. Order. Delany 12. Nov. 1741.

ships, and being upon such his examination approved of, he was admitted a member of that society, and was afterwards confirmed accordingly. That after making the statute he was a second time examined, admitted and confirmed, and that according to the direction of that statute his name, age and place of abode were put into the list and hung up at the custom-houses in London and Dover, by virtue whereof he then became and has ever since continued a member of that society, and as such ought to enjoy the privilege and profits which every member is intitled to. That the exposition of all statutes, the placing and displacing of officers, matters of freehold and all other matters arising withing the body of the county, whether by land or by water, belong to the king's courts of record, and not to the courts of admiralty, unless specially provided for by acts of parliament. That the rivers of Thames and Medway are both infra corpus comitatus, and not within the jurisdiction of the court of admiralty of the cinque ports, but all matters arising out of that jurisdiction are properly determinable in the king's courts of record. Notwithstanding which the defendant intending to prejudice him, has drawn him into plea in the court of admiralty of the cinque ports for a penalty or forfeiture of 10*l.* and by his libel suggests, That time out of mind there has been a useful and well regulated society of pilots of Trinity-house belonging to Dover, Deal and the isle of Thanet, who have had the sole piloting and loadmanage of ships and vessels up the rivers of Thames and Medway. That by the rules and orders of this society every person ought to be examined touching his skill in pilotage, before his admission to be a member, or undertaking to pilot any ship or vessel up the said rivers. That by the statute 3 Geo. it is enacted, "That if any person shall undertake to pilot
 " any ship or vessel from Dover, Deal or the isle of Thanet up the " said rivers, before he shall be publickly examined, approved " and admitted into the said society, as has been usual in the " manner that has been mentioned, every such person shall for " the first offence forfeit 10*l.* for the second 20*l.* and for every " other offence 40*l.* to be sued for and recovered with costs of " suit by any person whatsoever, in the court of admiralty of the " cinque ports, if the offender be found within the jurisdiction, " or else by action of debt, bill, plaint or information in any of " his majesty's courts of record, to be distributed in the manner
 " which the statute directs." That now the plaintiff, after making the said statute (viz.) 13 July 1718, did take upon him to pilot the ship Stratford from Dover to London up the river of Thames, not having been first examined and admitted a member of the said society, as has been usual, by which he forfeited the sum of 10*l.* (this being the first offence) and because the now plaintiff lived within the jurisdiction of the court of admiralty of the cinque ports, therefore the defendant caused him to be summoned moned into the said court, in order to proceed against him for recovery of the penalty. That notwithstanding he alleged all the matters aforesaid in his defence, yet the defendant the further to oppress him libelled against him a second time, thereby suggesting, that for time immemorial there have been certain by-laws, customs and usages made and practised in the said society, and that it has been always usual for every member on his admission to take an oath to observe and keep such by-laws, customs and usages before made, or then after to be made. That by ancient usage it has been customary, on due summons, to remove any members acting contrary to the by-laws, customs or usages, or breaking the aforesaid oath, and every person so removed has been always deemed and taken to be in the same condition, to all intents and purposes, as if he had never been admitted a member of the society. That the now plaintiff was examined, admitted, sworn, confirmed and inlisted as the statute directs. But that afterwards he offended against the by-laws, and broke the customs and usages of the said society, and acted contrary to his oath: and thereupon, and upon due summons and proof of such offence, and hearing what he had to say for himself, he was, according to the ancient usage, removed and expelled from being a member of the said society, whereby he became as if he had been never admitted. That after such removal he, (not having again been examined, approved and admitted into the said society) 3 August 1718, did take upon him to pilot the ship called Stratford from Dover to London up the river of Thames, against the form of the statute, per quod he forfeited the said 10 l. That to this second allegation in the court of admiralty of the cinque ports the now plaintiff demurred in law, and put it in the judgment of the court whether he ought to be compelled to make any answer to it, ubi reuera et in facto he says, the court of admiralty had no jurisdiction to proceed against him for the penalty, inasmuch as he had been once admitted and sworn a member as the statute requires, and had alleged the same in his defence; notwithstanding which the defendant is proceeding against him after a writ of prohibition delivered. The defendant as to the contempt pleads Not guilty, and for a consultation demurs.

Yorke pro defendente. Before I enter upon the merits of this cause, I must observe, that as this record stands, the facts of our several allegations in the court of admiralty of the cinque ports must be taken to be true; for the now plaintiff has by his demurrer to the second allegation admitted the fact, and offered to put it in the judgment of the court, whether upon that state of the case it be sufficient to compel him to make any answer at all to it. There is likewise a demurrer to the declaration in this court, which if the other was out of the case would have the same effect.

fect. Neither is the power of removal to be at all questioned, but it must be taken to be a legal removal.

The main question in this case will arise upon the first clause in the act of parliament, which after reciting the great usefulness of this society to the publick, and the danger in admitting persons to pilot ships, who are not members of that society, enacts, "That if any person or persons shall after 1 August 1717, take " upon him or themselves to conduct or pilot any ship or vessel by " or from Dover, Deal or the isle of Thanet, to any place or places
" in or upon the rivers of Thames and Medway before he or they " shall be first examined, as has been usual, by the master and wardens of the said society or fellowship for the time being, touching his or their abilities, and shall be approved and admitted " into the said society at a court of loadmanage by the lord warden of the cinque ports or his deputy, and the said master and wardens for the time being, every such person shall forfeit for " first offence 10 l. (which is the penalty we go for) to be sued
" and recovered in the court of admiralty of the cinque ports, if " the offender be found within the jurisdiction, or else in the " courts of Westminster-hall."

Upon this clause I shall insist, that the now plaintiff having been legally removed from being a member of the society, is (notwithstanding his former admission) such a person as is prohibited by this act from piloting any ships or vessels within the limits that have been mentioned, and that he hath incurred the penalty for the first offence, and being found within the jurisdiction of the court of admiralty of the cinque ports, there was sufficient to found the jurisdiction of that court in the suit which we commenced there against him, and therefore a consultation ought to go.

For this purpose I shall shew, that he is both within the words and intention of the statute.

As to the words. It will be objected, that the now plaintiff did not pilot this ship before he was admitted a member of the society; for there was a previous admission, which is enough to screen him from the penalty, though as to any other benefit he is totally deprived by his expulsion out of the society.

To this answer. That this not the proper construction of those words; the plain and natural import of which I take to be, that all persons shall be excluded, who are not at the time of piloting any ship, members of that society. It may not be improper to observe, that by the preamble of this act, the members of the society are described to be persons who have been publicly examined mined touching their skill and abilities in pilotage before their admission. It takes notice of the many and great advantages of the fellowship as a fellowship, and the good orders and regulations the fellowship is under; and therefore it is considerable, whether the enacting clause, which prohibits all persons before their admission from acting as pilots, shall not be taken to be only a large description of a member of the society, by specifying the particulars that make up and constitute a member. The preamble says, "That all members have been examined, and then approved and admitted." The enacting part prohibits all persons not examined, approved and admitted; that is, all persons who are not members of that society; for this must be understood of an approbation and admission subsisting and in force, such as are valid at the time the party exercises the business of a pilot, and not such as have been made void and done away by a subsequent removal; for how can it be said that any person stands approved by this society as a pilot, who is so far disapproved that he has been turned out.

And this is further explained by the proviso which follows, and excuses persons who undertake the pilotage of ships, when no one of the said society or fellowship shall be ready to conduct and pilot the same. So again, it provides, that all masters of ships shall have liberty to make choice of such pilot of the said society or fellowship, as he shall think fit; and no person shall continue in the said society or fellowship who shall not comply with the directions of the statute in what is there mentioned. So that every clause being tied up to the being of the society or fellowship, makes it evidently appear, that whoever undertakes to pilot any ship, must be at that time a member of the society, or else that he shall incur the penalties.

This I take to be the plain meaning of the words; but even the intention of the act goes to this case: that a person once admitted, and afterwards removed, was as fully intended to be excluded from the pilotage of ships, as any other person who had never been admitted at all. But that what I shall offer upon this head may the better have its weight, I shall first obviate an objection or two which may be made.

It may be objected, that this is a penal statute, and that penal statutes are not to be taken by intendment; and therefore the plaintiff not being within the words, shall never be exposed to what may argued to be the intent of the statute.

I must admit this to be the general rule of construction of penal statutes; but then it is under certain limitations and restrictions, and many cases there are which break in upon it. For

there is an higher rule of construction than this, and that is, that all statutes which are made pro bono publico shall be expounded in such a manner, that they may as far as possible attain their end. That this statute is a law made pro bono publico I believe will not be disputed. The nature of the thing speaks it, and the statute itself takes notice of the many and great advantages of the said society or fellowship to the publick. In Magdalen college case it is said to be the office of judges, to make such a construction, as will redress the mischief, and advance the remedy, and to suppress all evasions which may be made in order to continue the mischief; that the law will never by any construction advance a private interest to the destruction of the publick; but on the contrary will advance the publick interest as far as possible, though it be to the prejudice of a private one. So likewise is 3 Co. 7. b. It would be endless to cite cases where penal statutes have been taken by intendment, and therefore I shall only single out two, which are stronger than the case at bar, inasmuch as the penalties are far greater, and one of them extends even to the life of the offender.

By the statute of 27 Ed. 3. c. 1. it is provided, "That if any person should draw another to the court of Rome for a matter which might be determined in the king's courts, or to overthrow the judgments given in such courts, such person should have day by the space of two months, and if he came not at the day, he should be put out of the king's protection." Upon this statute a question was made in 30 Ed. 3. 11 b. whether if the offender should appear and be over-ruled, he should incur the danger of a premunire; and afterwards in 39 Ed. 3. 7. a. it was resolved he should: and yet that case is as much out of the letter of the statute as our case: and many judgments have followed that resolution. 44 Ed. 3. 36. a.

The other case I shall mention is in 2 R. 3. 10. a. which was a question made upon the 8 Hen. 6. c. 12. which enacts, "That if record be razed or stolen away, by reason whereof any judgment is avoided, the offender should suffer death as a felon;" the rasure in that case tended to support the proceedings, and yet it was resolved to be felony.

Taking it therefore, that we are proper to construe the words of this statute in this manner; I shall now proceed to shew, that the offence of the plaintiff is such an offence, as was designed to be punished in the manner we are proceeding against it. The statute takes notice of the good rules and orders of the society, which tend so much to the advantage of the publick; and by requiring every member to be first examined, their design was, that no person should have the pilotage of any ship, who was not to be be under the awe, and subject to the rules and orders of the society; lest (as the statute takes notice) unqualified persons should undertake the pilotage, whereby the ships and vessels with their cargo and mariners should be lost. Every pilot is likewise required to have his name hung up at the custom-houses, that the merchants and masters of ships may know who to apply to, and what persons they may safely trust. But this man at the time of piloting this ship was not under the controul, or in any degree subject to the rules and orders of the society; his name ought not to be hung up at the custom-house, so as to be known to the merchant, or any others who wanted the assistance of a pilot, because none but the names of members are to be so listed: a person who had never been admitted could but be in the same condition; he is only prohibited from piloting of ships, because he will not be under any regulation, which is so necessary for the service of the publick.

To enforce this a little, I would submit, that persons who have been legally removed from offices or employments, are to be considered in the eye of the law to be in the same case, as if they had never been admitted into such offices or employments. Suppose the by-laws of the city of London, instead of prohibiting persons not being free from exercising a trade, had run, that no person before he was admitted a freeman should set up any trade; I take it within the reason of Wagoner's case, that such a person after disfranchisement would be as much subject to the penalties, as persons not being free are upon the present establishment. By the act of uniformity 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 4. § 14. it is provided, "That no person shall be capable to be admitted to any benefice or ecclesiastical promotion, or presume to administer the sacrament, before such time as he shall be ordained priest, according to the form of the book of common prayer, under the penalty of 100 l." Now will any body say, that if a clergyman be legally deprived, yet because he has been once episcopally ordained, that therefore he may officiate wherever he pleases? No, that ordination is to all intents and purposes as if it had never been, and the person liable to the penalty, or else this would prove a very vain provision. By the 11th section of the same statute every schoolmaster is prohibited from teaching any youth, before licence obtained from his respective ordinary, under certain penalties: now though the bishop does grant such a licence, yet it will not be pretended, but that it is in his power to repeal it; and supposing he does so, must this man still continue to keep a school? I apprehend he cannot; for if he may, the consequence of that will be, that if the bishop upon any misinformation should once grant such a licence to a person never so unfit, and in whom he was much deceived; that then this person might go on in teaching teaching school, and corrupt our youth, when at the same time there is an express act of parliament which was made to meet with, and oppose so great a mischief. In 2 Keb. 538. where the libel was for teaching school after licence repealed, a prohibition was denied. In our case may it not happen, that a man shall get the usual points of examination so well, as to pass a publick examination; and yet when he comes to act as a member of the society, he may be found to be ignorant, or not fit to be intrusted? This may be (and I am afraid has often been) the case, and will it then be pretended to be reasonable, that this person may continue to act as a pilot, and ruin the merchant who commits his ship to his care? I apprehend the reason of the thing tells us, that this man ought to be dismissed from the society; and if he ever afterwards concerns himself in the business, he shall be subject to the same penalties as in case he had never been once admitted. The same reason holds in both cases, et ubi est eadem ratio, ibi idem jus.

It will be objected, that admitting this case to be within the intent of the legislators, yet this is a proceeding in a course different from the rule of the common law: so that though a jurisdiction be given them in one matter, yet that may not be extended by equity to similar cases.

[256] This admits of several answers. In the first place I must observe, that if it be admitted (as they who argue in this manner must admit) that this case is in equal mischief, and a similar case; then it is also admitted, that it is just and reasonable it should stand within the same remedy, if it may be: if one offence be of as bad consequence as the other, what reason is there to favour one offender more than the other? which will unavoidably be the case, if the court of Admiralty of the cinque ports has no jurisdiction of this cause. Nay it will go so far, as to exclude any remedy at all against the offender; for the jurisdictions given to the King's courts, and the court of Admiralty of the cinque ports, are exclusive, and not concurrent jurisdictions, and to be made use of in different cases: the suit is to be commenced in the court of Admiralty of the cinque ports, if the offender lives or is found within the jurisdiction, or else by action of debt in the King's courts of record: now the words or else exclude the courts of Westminster-hall from any jurisdiction in cases where the party is to be found within the inferior jurisdiction: the plaintiff is to resort to one, if the offender lives or is to be found within it; but if he cannot, then, and not till then, he is to seek his remedy in another place.

We

We are now got so far as to take it for granted, that the plaintiff in this case was designed to be punished for offences committed after his removal: now if what is contended for on the other side should prevail, it may so happen, that such an offender may keep intirely out of the reach of the statute: for suppose he should continually live within the jurisdiction of the court of Admiralty of the cinque ports; then upon my former reasoning he could not be proceeded against in any other court: the consequence of which will be, that if this jurisdiction does not extend to similar cases, the offender must go unpunished.

But further, I take it to be no new thing for inferior courts, nay courts proceeding by the rules, and in the forms of the civil or ecclesiastical law, where jurisdiction is given them in a particular case, to have a jurisdiction by construction in similar cases within the like mischief. The statute of Circumspecte agatis mentions only the bishop of Norwich, but yet because what is reason in his case must of necessity be reason in the case of any other of the bishops, therefore it has been construed to extend to all. 2 Inst. 487. The same statute after mentioning fornication and adultery has the word hujusmodi, and has therefore been expounded to include incest and solicitation of chastity. 2 Inst. 488. So the statute of Articuli cleri, c. 9. gives remedy where animalia rectorum only are taken; and yet in 27 Aff. pl. 66. it was held to extend to abbots and priors, who were within the same reason. The statute 2 E. 6. c. 13. gives the double value for not dividing, and setting out predial tithes, to be recovered in the ecclesiastical court according to the ecclesiastical laws; and yet that has been extended to the case where he does actually divide them, but then carries them away before the parson has time to take them; and yet the ecclesiastical jurisdiction is given only in the case of not dividing and setting out of tithes. But because it was the intent of the statute, that the setting out should be in such a manner, as that the other might have the benefit of them; therefore this device to elude the statute was not allowed to prevail. 2 Inst. 649. The decree relating to tithes in London, which is confirmed by 37 H. 8. c. 12. has the words, "Where no rent is reserved upon a lease of a house by reason of any fine or income paid beforehand:" and upon this, 2 Inst. 659, 660. it was resolved to extend to cases where no fine or income had been paid beforehand; which was not a case within the words of the statute, any more than our case is.

Where inferior courts have been allowed jurisdiction in cases similar to those wherein they have jurisdiction.

There remains still another objection to be answered, and it is this. That to allow the court of Admiralty to proceed in this case, is to give them a power to judge of disfranchisements, and the validity of corporate amotions.

Court of Admiralty may judge of matters not originally within their jurisdiction, so as they come in by way of incident.

To

To this I answer, That though they cannot have original cognizance of such matters, yet they may examine into them where they come in only by way of incident. Out of the many cases that might be cited for this purpose I shall select a few, to shew that the rule accessorium sequitur, non ducit suum principale, holds equally in inferior and superior jurisdictions. Bracton lib. 5. f. 401. 406. Regist. 58. The spiritual court, or court of Admiralty, may judge of a statute, where it comes in incidentally. 2 Roll. Abr. 308. pl. 22. In Yelv. 134. a suit was commenced in the Admiralty for being assistant to the escape of one committed for piracy; and notwithstanding the offence in abetting the escape was committed upon the land, yet in regard it was a dependant upon the offence of piracy, it was resolved to be cognizable there. 1 Roll. Rep. 21. In a suit for tithes the defendant pleaded an arbitrement, and a prohibition was prayed for that, and denied. Latch. 228. The right to the office of Chancellor of the Bishop of Gloucester came incidentally in question in the high commission court; and because they had jurisdiction of the principal matter, no prohibition went.

If therefore the now plaintiff should be thought not to be within the letter, yet surely he is within the reason of the statute; and being so he is liable to be proceeded against in the court of Admiralty of the cinque ports, and therefore a consultation ought to go.

Whitaker Serjeant contra. I shall shew that the plaintiff is qualified within the words of the act, which is sufficient to screen him from the penalty. The demurrer can never be taken as an admission of the constitution and power of removal, for that constitution is no otherwise set out than in the libel; and if any thing stands admitted by the demurrer, what we say, that the defendant falso et subdole libellando, &c. is confessed, for that denies the truth of the libel, as in 27 H. 8. 11. quare crimen felonie falso imposuit, was held to be an absolute denial of the crime.

Then as to the demurrer below, that confesses nothing but what is well pleaded; and in this case they have not pleaded the merits as they ought, for they should have shewn, whether they are a corporation, or only a voluntary society; that they had a power to make by-laws, and that the by-law, against which my client is supposed to have transgressed, is a good and a reasonable by-law: all this should have appeared to the court; and instead of demurring to our declaration, they might have come and shewn all this by plea. Rast. 393. 18 E. 4. 29. Ca. Ent. 122. For how else can they pray a consultation, without establishing blishing the justice of their proceedings, and laying the whole matter before the court.

As to the merits, I apprehend this statute ought to be construed strictly, and that upon three accounts. 1. Because the subject matter of it is an inferior jurisdiction. 2. Because it is introductory of a new law. And 3. Because it is a penal law.

1. As it is an inferior jurisdiction, it is confined to time and place, to persons, actions and things, as they are mentioned in it. In the case of the Marbalsfea, 10 Co. 75. it was held, that trespass would not include ejectment, or where a detainer is coupled with it; and that is the case of an ancient court, this of a new one. If the sheriff's torn be held at a different time from what Magna Charta directs, it is ill. 2 Inst. 71.

2. Affirmatives in a new law imply a negative. Hob. 298. Nay where it is a remedial law, as in the case of a quod ei de-forceat in 14 H. 7. 18. and a cui in vita in 18 E. 4. 16. 2 Inst. 352.

3. This is the penal law, restrictive of that natural right which every man has to have the benefit of his labour and industry, and it gives a remedy which was not at common law before, and is therefore to be taken strictly. Keilw. 96. So the custom of gavelkind, that an infant may alien, was held not to warrant a release. 10 H. 4. 33. And the same limited construction has always been made upon the statute of limitations.

I agree the rule of exposition laid down about statutes made pro bono publico, with this restriction, that they are no way derogatory of the common law. In this case the statute provides for the punishment of persons who lose ships, and that is an argument that they had no notion of a power subsisting in this society, to remove a man for that, or any other offence.

But what I insist upon is, that the removal must be laid out of the case; and the only question now is, whether this man was ever examined, approved and admitted: it appears he has been examined, approved and admitted, and being so he is not a person in any wise prohibited from acting as a pilot. The cases where the spiritual court has judged of matters of freehold, are not like this; for in them they had original jurisdiction of the principal cause. And no case can be shewn where when an act was lawful at common law, and then an act of Parliament has come and altered the nature of it by rendering it unlawful, that such a statute has been extended to similar cases, which I am far from admitting ours to be.

Yorke replied. The argument from the words falso et subdole (which are words of course in all suggestions) is nothing to the purpose, for the truth of those facts is not yet determined, the question being, whether the court below shall proceed to examine into them. But there was a demurrer below precedent to their suggestion in this court, and that demurrer has put it in the judgment of the inferior court, whether taking our libel to be true, there is disclosed sufficient for the inferior judge to condemn the party.

I agree that by-laws must be set forth, where the point of amotion is in dispute; but not here, where it comes in only by way of incident, in which case the bare alledging, that he was removed, is sufficient. Bro. Pleading 87.

Almost all acts Parliament alter the common law, and yet many of them are construed liberally.

C. J. The question is, whether the plaintiff has incurred the penalty of the statute; for if he has, the jurisdiction of the court of admiralty of the cinque ports to proceed against him for that penalty, is not to be doubted.

As to the words of the statute, I think there is no colour to say the plaintiff is within them; for they extend only to persons not examined, approved and admitted. And therefore he is not within the words.

In the next place, to consider the intention of the statute; it should seem as if there was a great difference between the case of one never admitted, and the case of one who has been admitted and afterwards removed: a man that undertakes to pilot a ship before any admission, acts knowingly against the express words of an act of parliament; and there is room to suspect his ignorance as to the business he undertakes: but where a person has been once admitted, though he be afterwards removed, yet there is no room to doubt his skill in pilotage, because he has passed a publick examination, and it may be the removal was not for want of skill, but upon some other account, which may afford no ground to distrust his abilities: every man knows whether he has been admitted or not; but every man after he is admitted may not know whether he be legally removed, for that may be a matter of difficulty depending upon the power of the society, and the validity, reasonableness and consideration of their by-laws; for a removal de facto can never be sufficient, and it must appear to us, not only to be a removal for acting contrary to by-laws, but also for acting contrary to good by-laws. I do not think the case at bar is within the reason of the case expressed in terminis.

But even admitting it to be within the intent of the act, yet surely in the case of freehold we ought to be satisfied of the justice of that removal, by their shewing a power to make by-laws, and every other step necessary to make a lawful removal; and for want of this, as well as for want of jurisdiction of the cause, I think no consultation ought to go.

To which Powys J. agreed. Et per Eyre J. If this had been a return to a mandamus to restore, I should have thought it ill; but there is a great difference, where the point of removal is only a collateral matter. The intent of this statute was certainly to secure the pilotage of ships to skilful persons, and the understanding of the pilot was the principal thing they had in view: now can it be said, that this man is less a person examined, approved and admitted, by being removed? Does that take away all the knowledge he had before? One cannot infer any incapacity from his being removed, for that might be for a matter foreign to the qualifications of a pilot. If the parliament had intended any thing of that nature, surely it would have been mentioned.

Fortescue J. The act itself makes a distinction between qualified persons and those who are actually members. The publick is only concerned to see that they who undertake the pilotage of ships are capable of the business; which they certainly are, when they have passed examination. This act is to be considered strictly, and not by equity; for it was never said, that this court shall construe an inferior court into a jurisdiction. The admission is good to some purposes after a removal, as 1 Roll. Rep. 81. in the case of a pauper dispaupered. Per curiam, Judgment for the plaintiff (1).

Appearance cures defects in summons.

CONVICTION on 5 Ann. c. 14. for keeping a gun not being qualified; and exception was taken by Fazakerley, that here was not a reasonable summons, for it was made on 5 October to appear the same day, which might be impossible upon account of distance, or the summons being served late, and his witnesses might not be got together on so short a warning: then it is to appear apud paroch' prædict', whereas there are two parishes mentioned before, so the man may have gone to one, whilst they were convicting him at the other. Salk. 181.

Wearg contra. The defendant appeared at the time and made defence, so that cures all defects in the summons. Et per curiam, The answer is right (1).

It must appear in the conviction that the justices are of the county where the offence was committed.

Then it was objected, that the statute requires the conviction to be by justices of the county where the offence was committed, and that does not appear in this case. Et per curiam, That must appear, or else they have no jurisdiction. Et per Wearg, It does, for they distribute part of the penalty to the poor of the parish of Chelfield in com' Kane', infra quam paroch' offensum præd' commissum fuit. And the justices are justices of the county of Kent, and stile themselves so. Adjournatur.

(1) Rex v. Aiken, 3 Burr. 1785.

Between the Archbishop of Dublin and the Dean of Dublin.

THE defendant in prohibition obtained judgment in Ireland, which was affirmed in B. R. there, and came over hither by a defective writ of error, which was quashed; and now the question was, whether the defendant in error should have costs, there being none given in the courts below, either on the principal judgment or the affirmance.

Costs shall be given on quashing writ of error, though none have been given in the court below.

And for the plaintiff in error it was said to have been the constant construction on 3 H. 7. c. 10. that where there were no costs in the original action, there should be none on the writ of error; and the 4 & 5 Ann. c. 16. extends only to cases where the defendant in error would have costs on affirmance. Cro. Car. 425. In a formedon the judgment was affirmed without costs. So 1 Lev. 146. in a quod ei deforceat, 1 Vent. 166. in the case of an administrator, (and 4 Mod. 7. in replevin denied to the avowant) and the reason given for the cases before cited is, because there were no costs in the original action; and the words in 3 H. 7. delay of execution, are confined to such judgments, where there are costs and damages. 1 Vent. 88. in the case of Harrison and the Archbishop of Dublin (a), 10 Ann. in prohibition, there was judgment for the defendant in C. B. in Ireland, that judgment affirmed in B. R. there, and also in this court, and in the House of Lords, and no costs ventured to be taken, though able counsel had considered the case.

1 Bro. P. C. 418.

On the other side it was said, that though there are no costs given below in this case, yet there might have been costs on 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 11. (which they shewed was enacted in Ireland) and therefore the neglect of taking them in one court ought not to prejudice the party in another. In Cro. El. 659. there were costs in a quod permittat, and yet the judgment is, only to abate a nuisance. Harrison's case passed sub silentio; and in Hyde v. Hallagan, Hil. 2 Geo. in B. R. which was replevin in C. B. in Ireland, judgment for the avowant, and affirmed in B. R. and brought over hither; and because the first writ of error from C. B. to B. R. was defective, this court reversed the affirmance, and gave such a judgment as B. R. below ought to have done, viz. to quash the writ of error, and after several motions costs were ordered to be taxed.

C. J. The authorities on 3 H. 7. being both ways, I think myself at liberty to go into those which seem to me to be grounded on the best reason, and those are such as give costs, for indeed the others others which are built upon the words delay of execution stand upon a very slender foundation. Suppose there were no costs in the original suit, yet is there not a manifest delay to the party (1) for after a long race, when he reaches a consultation, he is but in the same condition as to the forwardness of his suit in the inferior court, as when he first set out to defend himself against the prohibition. The defendant might have had costs below if he had asked for them, and I think he is intitled to them here. Et per Fortescue Justice, cost and damages will lie in some prohibitions. Cro. Car. 559. Cro. Eliz. 617, 659. The statute has the word vexation as well as delay of execution, and will any body say, here is not a manifest vexation to the party, to be travelled thus far from one court to the other, and to have the merits of his cause so long suspended from being determined in the inferior court.

Curia advisare vult; and Trin. 6 Geo. Pratt C. J. delivered the opinion of the court, that costs should be paid.

Geo. c. 15. (1).

THE defendant being brought up from Newgate by habeas corpus, it appeared upon the return, that he was committed for deer-stealing, as the statute 3 & 4 W. & M. c. 10. directs, not having sufficient distress; and that this was done by one justice under the statute 5 Geo. and two exceptions were taken to the warrant.

23 & 24 Car. 2.
c. 12.

1. Because it does not appear, the conviction was ever confirmed in this court, or that the rule for confirmation was delivered to the justice, and the words of the statute are, "That after the confirmation of any conviction and delivering the rule to the justice, it shall and may be lawful, &c." Now this statute gives the justice a jurisdiction after confirmation, which he had not before; and therefore he ought to shew every thing requisite to found his jurisdiction, within the reason of the cases on the statute Car. 2. where orders have been quashed for not appearing to be upon complaint of the churchwardens or overseers. So Hil. 4 Ann. Regina v. Hinam, a conviction on Car. 2. for selling coals by scanty measure was quashed, because it did not appear to be done in the city of London. The word after makes what comes under it to be in the nature of a condition precedent, and imports something previous to found the jurisdiction.

16 & 17 Car. 2.
c. 2.

2. The justice only says, that it has been certified to him by the constable, that there was no sufficient distress, whereas there ought to have been a warrant to levy, and a return to that, that there was no distress: it may be the constable only told him so.

[264]

Et per Pratt C. J. and Fortescue J. (absente Powys J.) the warrant is well enough, for as to the last objection, the word certified imports it to be in a legal manner. Then as to the other objection, we take notice of our own records, and by them it appears the conviction is confirmed. The statute does not give the justice a new jurisdiction, but only revives his old one, which was suspended by the certiorari, and therefore this widely differs from the case of an order of removal, for there the overseers are in the nature of trustees for the parish, and unless they complain, it is to be supposed there is no grievance, and it is likewise to give an original jurisdiction.

Where power is given to a justice to commit for want of a distress, if he state in his warrant that it is certified to him by the constable that there is none, it is enough.

Eyre Justice contra. The old jurisdiction was absolutely taken away by the certiorari, and this is a new jurisdiction given upon terms, for the prosecutor has his election to take a levari from us, or apply to the justice, and the delivering the rule is what makes his election. We never grant execution on affirmances in the Exchequer chamber, till a remittitur. The justice should likewise shew a return, that there was no distress, before he can order the man to be imprisoned; according to Dr. Bonham's case and the case Rex v. Chandler, Hil. 11 W. 3. in B. R. where it was held, that there must be a record of every fining and imprisonment. There being two Judges to one, the defendant was remanded

UPON a special order of sessions the case was stated for the opinion of the court. That in 1702 one Richard Plower was bound apprentice to one John Emerton, who was legally settled in Ivinghoe: that he served part of his time there, and then the master went with all his family as a certificate-man to Stonebridge, where he purchased an estate of the value of 60*l.* and after such purchase the apprentice lived with him six months till the apprenticeship expired; and because the statute 12 Ann. c. 18. provides, that the apprentice of a certificate-man shall gain no settlement in the parish to which the master goes by certificate, therefore the justices adjudge the settlement at Ivinghoe, where the binding and great part of the service was.

Et per curiam : The order must be quashed : for as the apprenticeship expired in 1709, the statute 12 Ann. is out of the case, not being made with any retrospect ; and then the case is no more, than that an apprentice of a certificate-man lives forty days in Stonebridge, which before that statute was enough to gain him a settlement. But if this had been a case since the statute, yet we think the settlement would be in Stonebridge ; for according to the case of Burclear and Eastwoodhay, Pasch. 5 Geo. in B. R. when a certificate-man makes a purchase, he immediately ceases to be there in nature of a certificate-man, and becomes a settled inhabitant ; so that laying the statute out of the case (as we must do, it being nothing to the purpose) in this view here is a service for six months, as an apprentice, in a parish where the master was legally settled, which is more than sufficient to give a settlement to the apprentice.

To this the Attorney General answered, That those cases were between party and party, and bound not the crown : here the venire facias is returned and filed, so the effect of their prayer is for me to make a discontinuance. In C. B. between The King and Roberts et al', there is now depending a writ of deceit to reverse a fine of lands in ancient demesne ; one defendant demurred, red, and the other pleaded in chief, that it is frank-fee: that issue is tried and found for the king, but the demurrer is not yet determined, and yet that is a case quasi at the suit of the party, for the crown is only nominal, and not concerned in interest. Dy. 226.

In the case of the appeal, the bare award, quod cesset tractatio quousque, &c. was held to be a good continuance of the cause.

As to the principal point, it being the cause of the crown, the court took time to consider; and the last day of the term the Chief Justice delivered their opinion, That the Attorney General was at liberty to bring on either the demurrer or the trial, as he pleased. A trial at bar was ordered for the next term.

(1) Smith v. Whistler, Cas. temp. Hard. 305. S. P.

Mr. Ratcliffe's Case.

Upon an Appeal to the Lords Delegates from the Judgment of the Commissioners for Forfeited Estates.

SIR Francis Ratcliffe being seised in fee of the premises in question, by lease and release dated 19 & 20 March 1687, settled the same to the use of Edward his first son (afterwards Earl of Derwentwater) for life, remainder to his first and every other son and sons in tail male, remainder to the right heirs of Sir Francis. Earl Edward the tenant for life died, leaving James his eldest son, who entered and was seised of the tail: and 1 May 1712 (being at that time a papist) he conveyed the premises to two persons who were protestants, in order to make them tenants of the freehold, till a common recovery was suffered, which was accordingly had and suffered of part of the lands in C. B. Pasch. 1712, and of the other part, lying in the county palatine of Durham, 19 June 1712. Both which recoveries were declared to be to the use of Earl James in fee. Earl James being thus seised of the fee, by lease and release 23 & 24 June 1712, on his marriage with Sir John Webb's daughter, conveyed the lands to the use of himself for life, then to the lady for life, remainder to the first and every other son and sons of that marriage in tail male, with several remainders over, and proper limitations to trustees to preserve contingent remainders. The marriage took effect, and the claimant Mr. Ratcliffe was eldest son. Earl James 19 February 1716, was attainted of high treason, and by the statute 1 Geo. all estates tail, whereof persons attainted were seised, are vested in the crown in fee. The commissioners seize this estate as forfeited by the attainder of Earl James, upon which Mr. Ratcliffe puts in his claim, insisting that Earl James was only tenant for life, and himself had now the right to his remainder in tail, the estate for life being determined by the execution of Earl James. 23 December 1718, the claim was disallowed, the commissioners being of opinion, that Earl James was disabled by the 11 & 12 W. 3. c. 4. to suffer such recoveries, and consequently he remained tenant in tail under the settlement of Sir Francis, and so the crown is intitled to the fee. The claimant appeals to the Delegates from the determination of the commissioners.

Tenant in tail may, since the 11 & 12 W. 3. suffer a recovery to the use of himself in fee though he is a papist. 9 Mod. 172. S. C.

1 Geo. 1. c. 30.

It was argued several times at the bar on the behalf of the publick and the claimant; but there being a difference of opinion in the court, there will be no occasion to take notice of the arguments of the counsel, since every thing that was materially offered on either side is again repeated in the judgment of the court.

The delegates were five of the Judges, (viz.) Mr. Justice Powys, Mr. Justice Tracy, Mr. Baron Mountague, Mr. Justice Fortescue and Mr. Baron Page, who all delivered their opinions seriatim: and though four of these concurred in opinion to reverse the decree, yet they gave such very different reasons for that opinion, as makes it necessary to state each of their arguments at large, in order to shew the grounds they severally went upon.

The great question in this case is, whether a papist tenant in tail can since the 11 & 12 W. 3. suffer a recovery to the use of himself in fee, for it was agreed on all hands, that if the recovery had been immediately to the uses declared by the subsequent settlement, it would have been good.

This general question depends upon the construction of the disabling clause in that statute, whereby it is enacted, "That from and after the 10th of April 1700. every papist, or person making profession of the popish religion, shall be, and is hereby disabled to purchase, either in his or her own name, or in the name of any other person or persons, to his or her use, or in trust for him or her, any manors, lands, profits out of lands, tenements, rents, terms or hereditaments, within the kingdom of England, &c. And that all and singular estates, terms, and any other interests or profits whatsoever out of lands, from and after the said 10th day of April to be made, suffered, or done, to or for the use or behoof of any such person or persons, or upon any trust or confidence, mediately or immediately, to or for the benefit or relief of any such person or persons, shall be utterly void, and of none effect, to all intents, constructions, and purposes whatsoever."

And if the recoveries be within this disabling clause; then nihil operatur by the deed and recoveries, and the claimant's father remained tenant in tail as before, and the estate is forfeited to the crown. If not; then he became tenant for life by the new settlement, and the claimant has right to his remainder in tail, as limited to him by that settlement.

Mr. Baron
ment.

Mr. Baron Page's argument. This is a case of very great consequence, not only on account of the particular estate now in contest, which is very considerable, but also as it affects the estates of multitudes of papists and protestants who have purchased under them, and as it is before a court from which there is no appeal.

I am of opinion that the claim of the appellant was well founded, and consequently the decree of the commissioners disallowing the claim is erroneous; and ought to be reversed.

The great question is, whether a papist tenant in tail can since the 11 & 12 W. 3. suffer a recovery to the use of himself in fee. This is the single point to which it must all at last be reduced.

It has been insisted on for the publick, that by the words of the statute the late Earl was incapacitated to suffer these recoveries; and to make the argument the stronger, it was urged that they were two distinct clauses, which have no relation to each other, and that the last carries the incapacity of a papist much farther than the first.

Whether they are two clauses or one only, I shall not determine, since that is not material to guide us in the construction, where the only question is, whether the latter part is distinct from, or relative to the former. I think the words of both parts are relative to each other, and the latter only explanatory of the former: they are only different ways of expressing the same thing, in which one perhaps may in itself be of a stronger import than the other, but yet were intended by the legislature to convey the same sense, only in a fuller light.

It was said that unless the latter words are carried farther than the former, they will be intirely usefess: but to shew that acts of parliament are not so nice upon that head, but make use of different expressions as often to clear up their meaning in what went before, as to add new matter, I shall observe, that this very clause now before us is no new one amongst our statutes, but is used in several of them upon occasions that shew they must be merely synonymous with what was said before. Thus 1 Jac. 1. c. 4. § 6. makes persons passing or sent beyond seas into popish seminaries, incapable of inheriting, purchasing, taking and enjoying any manors, lands, profits, goods and chattels whatsoever; but not content with those words, it goes on and enacts, That all estates, terms and interests, (in the very words of our statute) shall be utterly void and of no effect. And yet it is evident, these could not carry the incapacity of papists farther than the former words had done; since those exclude him from all benefit whatsoever in any real or personal estate within the realm of England.

But what is more full if possible to our purpose is 25 Car. 2. c. 2. commonly called the test act, by which persons elected into offices, and refusing to take the oaths and receive the sacrament, are made incapable "to take, occupy and enjoy the said offices or employments, or any part of them, or any profit or advantage appertaining to them:" And yet the parliament, to prevent any equivocation, and to make the matter plain to the lay gents, declares further, "That all such office or offices, employment or employments, shall be void;" which no one will say can signify more than what was expressed in the preceding sentence.

1 Ann. st. 1.

I shall mention but one statute more, which is that of 1 Ann. concerning the purchase of the forfeited estates in Ireland, by which it appears how apprehensive the parliament was of the danger which might arise to the kingdom by a landed interest subsisting in the papists, and therefore amongst other things it was designed as a prevention of any of those estates from ever returning into popish hands: for this purpose it enacts, "That all papists shall be for ever disabled to purchase any of those lands;" and further, "That all acts whatsoever suffered or done of such lands to or in trust for any papist shall be void." This statute seems to have been the very pattern of the act now before us, and though it is impossible to find any use for the latter words, not implied in the former; yet the legislature we see did not think it improper, to express their minds different ways, both with regard to the disability of the person, and the nullity of the acts done for his benefit, though they both in the end amount but to the same thing. Here was certainly no intention in the parliament, to disable the papists from selling or disposing of their own estates: the restraint was only from purchasing and taking, and it was equal to them, who was the seller or disposer, whether the estate moved from a papist or a protestant: the papist was in all cases alike still disabled from being the taker.

Having now (as I think) cleared this case from any difficulty it might lie under upon account of the different wording of the statute, and shewn that no advantage can be taken against the claimant from the peculiarity of some expressions in the latter part, which were added by the Legislature only out of abundant caution, and to prevent mistakes; I shall now proceed to shew, that according to the true intent and design of this statute, the late Earl was not restrained from suffering such recoveries as he did.

And the first thing I would set out with is, to observe, that this is a penal law: it takes from persons what by the common law of England is their birth-right, and upon that account is to be interpreted strictly, and in such a manner as not to carry the penalty farther than the open and evident intent of the statute, which is a rule of construction that always has, and I trust ever will prevail.

Now the first and plain view of this law was, to prevent the great mischief that had been experienced from the power which the the moneyed men amongst the papists had of increasing their landed interest in England, and consequently of investing themselves with a larger share of power and influence in the country. To remedy this mischief, the statute provides, That for the future no papist shall make any new acquisition in lands; but there is not any word in it, that looks like a design to take from them their own estates, which they had before: as to those it meddles not with them, but leaves them where it found them; we should then at least endeavour to guard against any interpretation, that tends to the taking away or abridging their present estates, because in so doing we act most agreeably to the sense and meaning of the Legislature.

Before the suffering these recoveries, it appears, the late Earl was tenant in tail: every estate-tail has this property inseparably annexed to it, that the possessor of it has a right to suffer a recovery. Should, therefore, this statute be expounded in such a manner, as to hinder the effect of a common recovery on a papist's estate-tail, it would be taking away one present right which he has as an inherent quality in his own estate, and so far extending the penalty and hardships of this law beyond its principal design, which I have before shewn had regard only to new acquisitions, and being a penal law is to be construed strictly. I must therefore own myself at a loss to find out the reason, why we are to thwart that ancient and constantly allowed rule of construction, by going out of the words, and in my opinion out of the intent, of the statute. That the power of suffering a recovery is incident to an estate-tail, I believe will not be denied: Mildmay's case, 1 Co. and 6 Co. 40. are full to that purpose; and there it is said too that all conditions to the contrary are void, and that a tenant in tail has the power over, though he has not the whole fee-simple in himself.

So the case of Benson v. Hodson, 2 Lev. 26. 1 Mod. 8. where Lord Hale, accounting for a recovery's being a bar to the remainder man, says, that a recovery is a conveyance or method of defeating those limitations, excepted out of the statute de donis, which never intended to hinder it, and that the recompence in value is not the reason why the remainder-man or reversiomer is barred (1).

A recovery is a method of defeating an estate-tail excepted out of the statute de donis.

But as an answer to all this it is urged, that how true soever it is, that the Earl was seised in tail, and the power of suffering a recovery is the right of every tenant in tail; yet the statute we are now upon has in fact separated this estate and that right: they are to take the statute as they find it, and then it has sufficiently deprived him of the power of suffering a recovery, by disabling him from purchasing.

(1) Vide the opinion of Lee C. J. in Martin v. Strachan, 5 Term Rep. 110. note, post. 1179.

The ground of this argument is, that the destruction of the estate-tail by the recovery, and the taking an estate to himself in fee, is a purchase within the meaning of the statute.

Now consider the analogy between common sense and this construction: would it not surprize a man who asks who you purchased your estate of, to be told you purchased it of yourself: whose was it before? why it was mine, and I purchased it of myself. Would not a person unacquainted with the chicanery of the law think you designed to banter him by such an answer? And I believe the parliament never thought of such a purchase, where the same person is both donor and donee, grantor and grantee, [273] I agree it was the intent of the statute in general, to prevent the acquisition of estates by the papists; and therefore if there is a deficiency of any words which might directly comprehend them, we may supply it for that purpose. Thus I take a devise to be within the statute (2) or if a papist should be suffered to disseise another, and then gain a release from the disseisee; or where he is tenant for life should levy a fine and the five years should pass: in all these cases, or any other of gaining any estate or interest in lands which he could not have purely by his own act, and without the procurement or connivance of the person whose right is lost, I take it he will be disabled by the statute. But I can go no farther, this being in my opinion the utmost extent that either the words or meaning of it can bear: and if we should attempt to carry it further, the mischief aimed at will not be prevented but increased; the popish interest instead of being lessened will be considerably advanced.

For I cannot but think the effect of such a construction will be, to fix a perpetuity to the estates of all the papists in England; and instead of removing by degrees all the landed interest out of popish, into protestant hands, it will tend to keep it intirely amongst the Roman catholicks: for to make a papist incapable of suffering a recovery, equally hinders the sale to a protestant, or a papist.

Or should the latter part of the statute be interpreted in the utmost latitude the words will allow of, and as a disjoined and separate clause from the former; consider what absurdities we must run into that way. All acts for his benefit or relief are made void; and therefore I cannot but think those words, when stretched as large as some people would have them, will prevent even a sale to a protestant; since no man can be supposed to part with his estate to a stranger, but in view of some benefit to himself. But I hope it will never be pretended, that the parliament designed any such thing by that expression, when it is evident the statute was calculated to enforce and oblige papists to such a sale.

But if we must interpret the word purchase here, not according to common understanding, (which one would imagine acts of parliament were most calculated for) but in its legal sense, in opposition to taking by descent; yet then I say, the Earl was seised under this recovery much more in the way of a descent than a purchase. For this purpose it is to be observed, that by the first settlement Sir Francis became tenant for life, with a reversion in fee to himself after the estate-tail, of which the late Earl was seised before his suffering the recoveries, should be spent. This reversion in fee descended on the late Earl at the same time the estate-tail came to him, and he continued seised of both till the recovery. Now what effect had the recoveries on these estates? why as to the tail, it extinguished that, but could not touch the fee; the consequence of which was, that all the impediment being removed, he was then in possession only of that ancient reversion in fee, which descended to him from his grandfather. 4 Mod. r. the case of Symmonds v. Gudmore. Tenant in tail with a reversion in fee makes a lease not warranted by the statute, and dies, the issue before entry levies a fine; and it was held, that the lease was good, for this reason, because the tenant in tail by levying the fine did not carry off the estate-tail so as to avoid the lease, but only extinguished it, and so was in as heir at law to his father of his reversion in fee, and must therefore take that estate together with the father's charge upon it.

Now suppose the late Earl's father had made such lease and died, and the Earl before entry had suffered a recovery, would not this have let in his father's incumbrance? or can there be any difference whether the tail be extinguished by fine or recovery? Whatever act it is, that by removing the intermediate estates, lets in the reversion, it is exactly the same thing: the incumbrances on that reversion, and the incidents to it, must be let in too. And therefore if the Earl had been originally seised ex parte materna, he would have been in of the fee on the recovery on the same side (3).

Common recoveries, it is well known, are only as common assurances, to be interpreted in the same manner, and to convey a title in the same condition, as other conveyances do. Now if one seised in fee enfeoffs J. S. to the use of himself for life, remainder to the use of the feoffee in fee; the feoffee is in only by way of remainder, and not of the reversion as of the residue of the estate which was in him as feoffee. 1 Inst. 22. b. Dyer 361.

The law looks upon the deed to lead the uses and recovery as both together making one conveyance; and therefore when it happened, that the person to whom a conveyance was made, in order to make a tenant to the præcipe, was also lessee for years of the same land; it was adjudged in the case of Fountain v. Cooke, 1 Mod. 107. that the lease was not extinguished, as it would have been in any other case; because the law considers the recovery with all its appurtenances but as one conveyance, and each of the instruments to bring it about but as part of it.

What I have been saying now to prove that Earl James was in under the recovery rather by descent than by purchase, is supposing it to be true, that all are seised of their estates either by descent or purchase. But indeed I think there is another way of coming to an estate, and that is by operation of law (4), as in the cases of tenant by the courtesy, dower, and the lord by escheat: in each of which there is nothing either of purchase or descent, but the law casts the estate on the husband, the widow, and the lord, without any act of their own, or prior seisin of their ancestor. And under this rank perhaps we may place the estate gained by the late Earl under the recovery: he is not seised of any new or really different estate from his first tail, for the tail and fee are in law equal estates, and therefore capable of being exchanged. 1 Roll. Abr. 813. But by the means of this recovery the operation of the law has new-moulded it, and put it in a different form, from what it was before.

The sum of what I have said under this head is, that he is not in by purchase (taking it in the legal sense) which is prevented from having any effect by the statute: but he is in either by descent or operation of law; both which are confessedly not within the statute.

But then the objection recurs from the latter words of the statute, which say they, are general, and extend to his own acts, that the law doth not regard from whence, but to whom the estate comes; and therefore let the act be done by the papist himself, or by any other; if thereby any estate or benefit accrues to the papist, it is made void.

But first, had the statute intended the papist's own acts, it would have been natural to have mentioned any acts suffered or done by him, whereas the words only to or for, which can never include by; for to is no more than to himself, and for implies to another for himself.

But in the next place, let us consider the consequences of such an extensive construction. The act says, "Any thing done for the benefit or relief of a papist shall be void." Now let those words be but understood in their full extent, to mean all acts done by himself or others in relation to his estate, that are for his benefit; and I may venture to say, they will not leave him even the least mark of ownership in that which is confessedly his own land. Plowing and sowing, making leases (which infants are allowed to do as what is beneficial to them) mortgaging, though to a protestant, or selling in order to raise money to redeem himself from slavery, will all come within the comprehensive meaning now set up of the words benefit and relief; for not one of these acts but are in some measure done with a prospect of his benefit or relief.

I mention these, not as things insisted on in terminis, but what must follow as a consequence of leaving the main design of the statute, to find out an exposition most to the embarrassment of papists. For I am bold to say, the Parliament never thought of carrying matters to such a length: nor can it be imagined, that a papist tenant for life, with a power of committing waste, is by this act debarred from so doing, and made incapable of digging mines, cutting stone, and the like, and yet this is a stronger case than ours, since it is to the disherison of the reversioner.

Agriculture

Agriculture is much favoured and encouraged by the law, whereas we are now inventing a method, how all the lands in the hands of papists must lie for ever uncultivated.

The case most relied on by the counsel for the publick was that of Roper v. Radcliffe (a), which was adjudged upon an appeal to the House of Lords, where an estate was devised to be sold for payment of debts and legacies, and the surplus to go to a papist; and the devise of the surplus was held void upon the present statute, as being an interest and profit out of lands.

But I must own my inability to find how that case has any relation to this before us: I am sure it is very consistent with my interpretation of the word purchase: it was an interest out of land, not his own but another's: and this was such a profit, as gave him as full a power over the land, as if it had not been directed to be sold, but devised to him chargeable with debts and legacies; for he might (if a protestant) have come into a court of equity, and compelled the trustees to convey to him on payment of the debts and legacies: this therefore was to all intents a devise of another's land, which I have before admitted to be within the statute.

But say they, consider what you are doing: are not you giving a papist tenant in tail in possession a power to bar a protestant remainder-man: and does not this tend to keep the land amongst the papists, instead of drawing it to the protestants? Does not this enable the ancestor to keep the heir steady to his own religion, for fear of being disinherited? And is not this a strengthening of the popish religion?

To this I answer: That it is but a vain terror, and can follow no more this way, than that which is admitted on all hands would have been good. For did not every body agree, that if the recovery, instead of being to the use of Earl James in fee, had been immediately to the uses declared by the subsequent settlement, then every thing would have been right, and as it should be? And where is there any essential difference between the two methods of new-moulding the estate? The argument of mischief holds both ways: nay it is universal in one, and but particular in the other; for I am apt to think no body who has the settling of Roman catholick estates for the future will ever follow the precedent of this case.

Whether this recovery was suffered really in order to make the settlement on marriage; or whether we can take notice of it as such, I do not think it very material. It is true, it is not expressly averred to have been for that purpose, but yet there is testimonium rei that it was, for the Durham recovery was 19 June 1712, and the release is dated the 23d, which was as soon as a letter could come to London to signify that the recovery was suffered.

Upon the whole I am of opinion, it never was the intention of the Legislature, to deprive Earl James of any right he had to his own estate. Being tenant in tail, he had a right to suffer a recovery and new-mould his estate. He has done so, and raised a good right in Mr. Ratcliffe, whose claim I think was well founded, and ought to have been allowed.

Mr. Justice Fortescue's argument. I shall make two questions in this case. 1. Whether this conveyance is a purchase within the act. 2. If it should not come under that strict notion of the word purchase, whether it is not affected by the latter part of the statute, which speaks of all acts suffered and done to or for the benefit or relief of a papist.

Mr. Justice
ment.

As to the first; I take it for granted, that he who takes by purchase, is a purchaser; and the consideration is not material, as has been allowed by my brother; and in the case of Roper v. Radcliffe it was agreed, that there was no distinction between taking by purchase and being a purchaser. Let us then see what it is to take by purchase. Litt. §. 12. says, He takes by purchase, who comes to lands by his own act and agreement, and not by descent. The opposition between purchase and descent, is, that the former is the effect of a man's own act; the latter, the act of law, without, and perhaps against his own act. The meaning of descent is not confined to that particular case where lands come down from the ancestor to the heir; but wherever the freehold is vested in any person by the act and course of law, such person is in, in nature of a descent. 1 Inst. 18. b. I must therefore differ from my brother as to his notion of tenant by the courtesy, dower and escheat. Tenant by escheat is said to come in as heir, in loco heredis. Bro. Escheat 33. where the lord's taking by escheat is put upon the same foot with the heir's taking from his ancestor.

Ante 275. post.

The same is to be said of tenant in dower and by the courtesy: and I never till now heard of that third sort of taking estates, which my brother calls taking by operation of law, as distinguished both from a purchase and a descent (5). Lord Coke indeed does mention a third sort by creation, but that is foreign to our case, and may, besides, be very properly referred to the head of purchase.

(5) Vide ante n. (4).

If the act of law concurs with the act of the party, it is a purchase. If the act of law only works the vesting of the estate, it is then a taking by descent. This is the case of the recoveror. He is in, it is true, by operation of law, but his own act is that which first gave motion to it, and consequently he is in by purchase. No one would doubt where the recovery is to the use of a third person, but that he is in by purchase, and yet he too is equally in by operation of law. The late Earl then was within the express words of Littleton, for he not only took by operation of law, but in conjunction with his own act and deed executed.

But we are told, this is only the legal sense of the word: there is another vulgar sense more intelligible to the understanding of the generality of the world, and the statute is to be intended in that sense.

I must own this is the first time I ever heard, that Judges are to lay aside the legal sense of a law, and run about to find the meaning in which it is received by rusticks and plebeians. The word purchase has a known signification, in which it has constantly been used by lawyers without any variation: and I can never suffer myself to go from that, without an express direction in the body of the statute.

It is said this is not a purchase, why? because he took no new estate, but was in only of his ancient use. What estate had he before the recovery? Only an estate-tail with a distant remainder in fee, after several intermediate remainders in tail to the second, third, and other sons: what estate has he now by the recovery? One single fee simple in possession; that is, the several particular estates that were before partly in him and partly in others, are now joined together, and made one in him alone. Now can any one say, that the whole is the same with some of its parts? Or that he has the same estate now he has every thing in him, as he had when others shared it with him?

[279]

But then again the objection is altered, and we are told, that the recovery only removes the impediments, and leaves him in, just as he was at first. Be it so; he still gains a new hereditament, which he had not before; and it amounts to the same thing, whether this is effected by taking away the incumbrance, or adding something new. In numbers every one knows the removing a subtraction is making an addition.

But

But to prove that he was in of his old estate in fee-simple, several cases have been cited. The case of a feoffment to the use of the feoffor for life, remainder to the feoffee in fee, is very little to the purpose. It is grounded on what is said in 1 Inst. 23. that whoever is seised of an estate, has both the estate of the land, and also the use or the right to take the profits; and therefore so much of the use as he does not dispose of, continues still in him as his old estate, and so shall go to the part of the mother from whence the estate originally moved. But all this goes on the supposition of a present fee-simple in the feoffor, which in our case is removed to a great distance, after the determination of several other estates.

Another case urged with as little reason, is that of Symmonds v. Cudmore; where tenant in tail with an immediate reversion to himself in fee makes an unwarranted lease and dies, the issue before entry levies a fine; and held he shall not now avoid the lease. But this is distinguished from the present case by the same difference as the former: the reversion in fee was immediately in him after his estate-tail, so that he really had the whole estate in the land in himself, only it was cut into two parts. But here the estate-tail in possession and the fee in reversion are disjoined by the intermediate remainders in other persons, who consequently take off part of the whole inheritance. All that this case amounts to is only to prove, that where a man has two estates in him, a lease which he makes is issuing out of both, and therefore when one of them is spent, or any ways removed, it shall be served out of the other.

A case was cited upon the argument, where tenant for life with contingent remainder in tail, remainder to the tenant for life in fee, makes a feoffment to the use of himself in fee; and held that this use in fee was only his old estate. Now there is no doubt but that this must be his old estate, for he was all along seised of the fee-simple, liable only to be opened upon a contingency: all that the feoffment did, was making the contingency impossible ever to happen, and so incapacitates the person who was to be the taker; but this makes no addition to the estate; it only makes that estate absolute in the tenant, which before was liable to be broke in upon and interrupted.

When a fee-simple conditional and an absolute one meet, they are consolidated. Hob. 223. Salk 338.

The case of the Earl of Lincoln, Show. Parl. Cases 154. is stronger than this. There Edward Earl of Lincoln, seised in fee made his will, and devised the lands in question to the plaintiff; afterwards by lease and release he conveyed them to the use of himself in fee till an intended marriage should take effect, and then to the common marriage uses. The marriage never took effect, and he died without issue or other disposition of the premises. The question in Chancery was, whether this conveyance was a revocation of the will, and held there to be so: and the decree was affirmed in the House of Lords, because the estate in fee gained by the conveyance was not the old estate which the Earl had in him before, it being limited after a different manner, and to be determined on a certain qualification. Now if this variation of the estate was sufficient to destroy his old estate, and put him into a new one; there is much more reason here, the late Earl of Derwentwater should be adjudged in of a new estate, when it is agreed here is an alteration of his estate, and it is so great as to vary the very course of descent, which is certainly a mark of a different estate.
in

It has been said, here is a vendee without a vendor: but this is only a gingle of words. In the case of a devise, there is a purchase, as my brother admits, but nothing of a vendor in the case. If the words vendor and vendee cannot be made use of, the law supplies other relative words that are as much to the present purpose; there is devisor and devisee, and in our case I do not see why recoveror and recoveree may not be used, which may answer the same end, and be applicable according to the different kinds of purchase.

In supposition of law the recoveror is in by purchase: he has gained an estate from the tenant in tail, which he had not before, and the tenant in tail has, by intendment of law, a recompence in value for it; and the fee, which is recovered, is nothing of that estate which was in the tenant in tail (6); it is not derived from him; nor can the recoveror make his title under him. This appears evidently from the statute of 7 H. 8. c. 4. which was made on purpose to remove an inconvenience that arose from this want of privity between the recoveror and the tenant in tail. By that statute the recoveror has power given him to avow and justify for the rents, services, and customs reserved, in the same manner as the tenant in tail might have done, which supposes he could not have done so before: and that statute had been useless, if the recoverors had been in of the same estate which the tenant in tail had before, for then according to Doll. & Stud. c. 26. Co. Litt. 104. he might avow and justify under his title. But the recoverors do not affirm the possession of the tenant in tail, from whom they recover, nor claim by him; but rather disaffirm and destroy his estate; and therefore they cannot allege any continuance of their title by him. So that the recoverors do not come in by the per or cui, but in the post, and consequently are seised of a very different estate from the tenant in tail.

(6) Vide post. 291, 296, 179, and the authorities there cited contra.

The reason why the remainder-man has no part of the recompense in value upon a recovery is, because that recompense is a fee, upon which no remainder can be limited.

To conclude this head, I think if the old fee cannot take place, so as to make him tenant in tail at the time of his attainder; then the new one must, which I hold to be a purchase, and as such made void by the act.

But as to the second point, whether the estate of the late Earl be not within the latter part of the statute, an interest arising to him by virtue of some act or thing had, done, or suffered for his benefit.

It has been said by my brother Page, that this latter clause ought to be tied up to the former, and as intended to take in nothing more than what was before comprehended under the word purchase.

But first here are no words by which this is referred to the foregoing part. In the next place I must observe, that the latter words are more general than the former; and though sometimes subsequent particular words do restrain more general ones that precede, yet I never heard that general ones that come after were restrained by particular ones that preceded. Should we interpret this statute in the manner my brother is contending for, we should render the most common form of speaking and writing vain, where a person that would take in every thing begins with enumerating particulars, and then lest any thing should have escaped him adds the most general words he can think of to supply all possible deficiencies.

The first clause disables the party to purchase, and the second makes all estates, &c. for his benefit void. But if the latter words are to signify purchases only, there could have been no need of them, it being precisely the same thing to disable the party to purchase, and making his purchase void. I shall give you two instances of this: the first is Rex v. Corporation of Portsmouth, on the 13 Car. 2. c. 1. § 12. which enacts, That no person shall be elected into any office, that shall not have taken the sacrament; and every person elected shall take the oath, and in default thereof such election shall be void. I objected that the words in default thereof were to be understood only of taking the oaths, and not the sacrament; but the court said that could do us no service, service, because the incapacity of being elected which was created before in those who had not received the sacrament was the same thing as making their election void, and so there was no occasion for those latter words. The other instance is that of Magdalen College case, where by statute all leases and grants by that college are made void, and it is there adjudged, that this is the same thing as disabling them to make any grants or leases.

I can easily admit these latter words to be explanatory of the former, but still in such a manner as to carry the disability farther than those did: for the legislature considered, that there were several ways by which papists might come to estates, which would not come under the notion of purchase, though equally within the mischief it intended to remedy; and therefore that they might be sure not to leave any part of the danger unguarded, added those latter words, in order to take in all which the former would not.

In our case indeed the statute does not say, the conveyance to a papist shall be void, but the estate shall be so: this amounts to the same thing, as a lease to a monk for life, remainder over in fee, the whole deed is void, because it can have no effect unless it passes the particular estate, that being necessary to support the remainder. 9 H. 6. 24. b. Bro. Grants 133. But if the conveyance can have another effect, the deed shall be good to that purpose, though the particular estate be void: thus a devise to a monk for life, remainder over is not void; though the monk cannot take, it shall be good for the remainderman. But in the present case the recovery itself is void, because it can have no other effect but to pass an estate to a papist, and since the recoverors cannot take for his use, they cannot take at all.

The matter therefore may be reduced to this dilemma. Either the estate-tail is barred, or it is not barred. If it is barred, the fee is in the recoverors, and the same moment in Lord Derwentwater. If it is not barred, then the tail continues, and consequently is forfeited by his attainer.

My brother calls this a relative clause, but I can find but one word of that nature in it, which is such, and that has nothing to do with purchasers, but is used only to shew that the same persons (papists I mean) are concerned in this as well as the former clause. Indeed there are other words in it, which can have no relation to purchases, such as the words trust and suffered.

It was said the word suffered may be understood of suffered by disseisin: though I should allow of this, yet it does not follow that that it does not extend to common recoveries too. In truth the word is applicable to both cases, and many others: as in Magdalen College case, where the words of the statute are the same as here, and held that a fine and non-claim is within the word suffered: otherwise it would be to no purpose to prevent alienations, if by suffering a fine to be levied, and five years to pass without claim, the estate might be passed.

Now let us consider whether the interest gained by this recovery suffered by Lord Derwentwater himself, is not to the purposes of this act the same as if he had gained it under a recovery suffered by another. I think it is: it is an act by which he procures to himself a larger and more valuable estate than he had before, and he gets it too by taking away from another person, as Doct. & Stud. expressly says, he gets what he has from the remainder-man. It makes no difference, that all this acquisition is only in the same lands; for a larger and better estate in the same lands is all one in this respect, as a new acquisition of new lands from a stranger. Thus where one devised lands to J. S. for life, and all other my lands to B. it was held, All. 28. 1 Lev. 212. that the reversion of the lands before devised to J. S. for life passed, because a further interest in the same lands was construed by law as so much new land.

Suppose the remainder-man had conveyed his right to the late Earl; can any one doubt whether this had been a new acquisition within the statute? Now where is the difference, whether he gains the same thing by his own act, or the act of another? It is equally in both cases a new hereditament, which he has acquired in the same lands, and that is the same as other lands, 2 Vent. 286.

It is said that this statute had no intention to take any thing away from the papists which they had, but only to prevent their having any more lands, and that to suffer a recovery is a power and right inherent in every tenant in tail.

To this I answer, The statute does not (nor does my argument need it should) restrain a papist from suffering a recovery to the use of a protestant. But whether it intended to take away this power when it is to be used for the benefit of a papist, is the question. To say there is no express intention to prejudice the present right of papists to their estates, is of no weight; because whatever is comprehended under the general incapacity put upon them by the statute, has the same force, as if it was actually named; and I think I have proved, that the present case is so.

It may be said that the parliament intended not to take away any right from protestants, but yet we see it does, for it prevents their selling to a papist, who may offer more for it than another. Geo. 1. c. 30. So in the statute 1 Geo. against traitors, it was far from the principal design of that statute to injure good subjects and protestants, and yet it has taken away a real interest from them, for it vests all estates-tail of traitors in the crown in fee, whether the remainder or reversion be in a protestant or a papist; it is the consequence of the statute, and it cannot be helped.

But to make this objection the stronger, it is said, that this right of suffering a recovery is so closely connected with the very estate of a tenant in tail, that it cannot be taken away by a condition.

I agree such a condition generally is void, but not where it restrains the alienation to a particular person. This is our very case. The suffering a recovery is left open for the use of protestants, but restrained only as to a particular sort of persons. Whether a recovery by a papist tenant in tail to his own use, is not one suffered for the benefit of a papist, as well as where it is suffered for the use of another papist, is a question not at all affected by this objection: nor does the statute regard whether it be by a papist, as my brother imagines, but if it be to or for a papist it is sufficient.

I would now consider whether the law has not some known species of incapacity, under which the case of the papists upon this statute may be ranked. I think it has. Capacity and incapacity to purchase have been long known in our law, and signified certain precise conditions or circumstances of persons, which lawyers have been at no loss to determine. When this statute therefore incapacitates certain persons to purchase, it must be understood to put them into the same condition in this respect, as those were in whom the law formerly took notice of as incapable of purchasing; such as monks and other religious persons. And the parliament seems to have had their eye upon these sort of persons, and to lead us to make this comparison, in using the same form of expression to describe the incapacity in this statute which is made use of in the 31 H. 8. c. 6. which enables monks to purchase after deraignment. The papists then are to be considered in the same condition as monks, and as substantia non recipit majus aut minus, the incapacity to purchase must be equal in both: and consequently he can no more take an estate by virtue of a common recovery, by whomsoever suffered, than a monk could have taken it.

I can-

I cannot imagine how the danger of perpetuities comes be laid in the way. No body pretends that a recovery to the use of a protestant is prohibited, and as long as papists are at liberty to suffer them, though with that limitation; they may mortgage, they may sell, or any ways load their estates, and so carry forward the very end and purpose of the statute, which was to remove the land of the nation out of popish hands, by obliging them to sell; nor is this any real damage to the papist himself, since though he parts with his land, he has an equivalent for it.

It has been said by some of the counsel, that this point was determined in the case of Thornby v. Fleetwood (b): but this objection was never made in that case, and indeed it had been very impertinent; for first, one of the recoveries in that case was before this statute; but if both had been since, it could not have made for the plaintiff; because if they had been void, it would have given him no title, for then Charles Lord Gerard had been seised in tail, and the heir in tail is now living: but the true point in that case is, whether Lord Gerard took any estate at all, so as to enable him to suffer a recovery. (b) Post. 313.

Another objection has been made, that to destroy this recovery of Lord Derwentwater, would be dangerous to many protestant purchasers, who have come in under such titles. But whatever this might have been formerly, it is now removed by the statute 3 Geo. cap. 18. which secures protestant purchasers, and looks backward as well as forward, by enacting, "That no purchases made or hereafter to be made by protestants of papists shall be impeached, on account of any disability the papists were laid under, either by 1 Jac. or our statute."

Having thus answered the inconveniencies urged on one side, let us now see whether there are no unanswerable ones of the other. And I think there are: for, 1. To establish this recovery, is to give papists a power of cutting off protestant remainder-men, and so far taking away the very landed interest of protestants. 2. They will be able by this means to turn the course of descent, as it shall serve the purpose of removing the estate out of a protestant, into a popish line. 3. They will have a power of making themselves tenants in fee, and upon occasion to distribute freeholds in a county, and influence the state of our legislature by the votes they make at their election. 4. It puts the heir too much in the power of the ancestor, who may make use of his liberty, with a view to prevent the conversion of his successor.

Upon the whole I am of opinion, this recovery is within the words of the statute, both as a purchase, and as a greater and better estate which is gained from the remainder-man, and turns to the benefit of a papist. For the danger can never be the less, where he gets it for nothing, than where he pays a valuable consideration. If it be within the words, why is it not within the meaning? Is not the meaning to be collected from the words, and the words to be interpreted according to law? It is certainly right, what the Judges said in Roper's case, that the words of a statute are to be taken in a legal sense, unless the intent appears to the contrary; and to say the acts of a stranger only are restrained, and not of the papist himself, is to speak without any warrant from the statute, for that makes no such difference, but leaves the persons conveying, all upon the same foot, with no other regard but to whom it is conveyed.

I would now mention some cases to justify and clear my opinion. Roper's case I apprehend is much stronger than this, that was a devise of lands to trustees to be sold, and after payment of debts and legacies the surplus was to go to a papist; and it was adjudged in the House of Lords, that this devise of the surplus was void, not upon account of the possibility that the papist might have the land itself; for in such cases, if the Chancellor takes care, that the trust be executed, and the land sold, the papist can never have the land, and in fact the land was sold, when that cause came into the House of Lords; so that it was really but a pecuniary demand: but because of the connexion with land, and because it might draw that along with it; it was held to be within the statute. And in the present case here is a greater and more valuable interest in land gained by a papist, which makes it much stronger.

Another case I shall mention, was Humphrey's case, which came out of the Northern circuit to be argued above. Lessee for ninety-nine years yielding rent surrendered to a papist the reversioner in fee; and held, nothing passed, and the surrender void. It was held so by my Lord Chief Baron Ward. Now I would observe, that in that case the reversioner did not take by purchase, but the benefit which accrued to him was by a merger of the term; but because it was an enlargement, and a bettering of his estate, it was held to be within the statute. And where is the difference, whether his estate be enlarged before or behind; by the addition of a particular estate, preceding intervening or coming after his own? The only thing that is material is the increase, and there is that in our case, as well as in the other.

To

To conclude, the words of this statute are general, and as large as could be contrived to take in all conveyances, and to obviate such objections as are now set up. The rule of law in construction of these statutes warrants the taking them in a full latitude, for its being a penal law will intitle it to no favour, where religion and the publick are concerned. And so it was resolved in Foster's case, and Magdalen College case. The statute takes in both considerations: it is made for the preservation of church and state, and therefore is to be carried to its utmost extent.

For these reasons I am of opinion, that the claim was well disallowed, and consequently the decree of the commissioners ought to be affirmed.

Mr. Baron Mountague's argument. This is a case of great importance, as it is on the construction of a statute, which though made twenty years ago, has never yet been fully considered: and it is of difficulty too, because two learned Judges have already differed, and I believe I shall differ from both in many points.

Mr. Baron
Mountague's argument.

It appears that at the time of suffering this recovery there was a marriage settlement on foot, and it is evident to me, that the recovery was had for that end. Lord Derwentwater is tenant in tail of an ancient family estate with remainders over. When a treaty of marriage was on foot between him and Sir John Webb's daughter, in order to make a jointure and provision for the marriage, he agrees according to the common method of conveyances, to make a tenant to the præcipe in order to suffer a recovery, and declares the uses to himself for life, then to his wife for life, remainder to the claimant as first son in tail. Such recovery was had, and the marriage took effect: he was attainted of high treason: and the question is, whether the estate is forfeited, so as to exclude the first son of the marriage.

N. B. He mistakes the case, for the use of the recovery was only to himself in fee; and the uses he mentions were afterwards declared by an original deed of settlement, and the Baron's whole argument depends upon a mistake of the case.

For my own part I think the matter will come to this dilemma, either Lord Derwentwater took by virtue of this settlement, or he did not. If he did take, then it was for life only, and he could forfeit nothing but an estate for life, and being dead, the claimant's estate-tail must take place. If he did not take by virtue of this settlement, what hindered him? The statute, say they, of 11 & 12 W. 3. which makes him incapable of purchasing. And if so, then nothing was in him to forfeit.

The only way of avoiding this dilemma is, that which brother Fortescue has taken, by saying that not only the uses to Lord Derwentwater himself are void, but the whole conveyance is void also: nihil operatur by all this: here has been a bargain and sale to make a tenant to the precipe, a recovery suffered, uses declared, and all this comes to nothing. This I take it is the foundation of the judgment given by the commissioners. But surely he that considers the words of the statute, which says only, "That all estates and interests for a papist shall be void," but mentions nothing of the conveyance itself, cannot be of that mind. But it is said it amounts to the same thing in the present case; for if the uses made are void, and he is disabled to take, and so the conveyance carries nothing, it is really making the conveyance itself void: and the case of a monk is put to support this, where a lease to him for life, remainder over, is void as to the whole conveyance on account of his incapacity. I agree it is so where the conveyance is to a person incapable of taking; and so if in our case the conveyance had been to a papist, this might have been true; but here are several persons capable of taking concerned in this conveyance: there are several remainders over that may be good, since they are to persons who do not yet appear to be papists, and the present claimant is young and may become a protestant: there are also trustees to preserve the remainders from the ceasing or forfeiture of the particular estate. So that I cannot see that Lord Derwentwater's incapacity will make the whole conveyance void, when it may, and was intended to subsist for other purposes than that of passing an estate to a papist.

Let us consider this whole conveyance particularly. Here is first a bargain and sale to Vaux for a valuable consideration, (viz. 5 s.) he is a protestant, therefore without doubt every thing is right thus far, to vest the estate in him and make him tenant to the precipe. Supposing now the subsequent recovery intirely void; the estate then remains in him. This appears evidently from Poultier's case, 1 Co. that though superstitious uses are void, yet if a penny had been given as a consideration, it would be sufficient to pass the estate absolutely to the feoffees to their own use; otherwise it would revert to the feoffor. In our case the consideration is greater, for 5 s. was actually paid. And this shews that the uses to a papist may be null, and yet the conveyance not void.

If then the bargainee is seised of this estate, it must be out of Lord Derwentwater; and it cannot be otherwise, unless the precipe be ill brought against Vaux.

The next thing is the recovery, and this is gained by one Ridley. He too is a protestant capable of taking, and consequently the recovery vests the fee-simple in him. Should now the uses of this be void, the consequence would be that Lord Derwentwater would gain nothing by it, and it would make him incapable of losing any thing also, since all the estate he had is passed away to others already.

Brother Page says, that it is the right of tenant in tail to suffer a recovery: I agree it is so, with this limitation, that no act of parliament declares his suffering it a forfeiture, as in the case of a tenant for life. But how comes it to be his right? It is the right in common justice of all mankind to bring a precipe when they have a better right than the tenant in tail; and when the recovery passes against him, it is because in intendment of law the demandant has the better right. This is the ground of the judgment, and this is the true reason of its being a bar to the remainder-man, as well as to the tail. The demandant recovers a clear fee-simple (on which no remainder-man can depend) without any regard to, or being at all affected by the particular limitations of the estate of which the tenant was seised. All the dependants on the estate tail can have nothing to say to him, who comes in under the recovery paramount to the tail. Ante 271.

My brother who argued first, mentioned the case of Benson v. Hodson in 1 Mod. but did not make use of the point resolved by the court, but only the saying of Lord Hale in relation to recoveries. I never found my opinion on the dictums of reporters, in which they are very apt to mistake the words and sense of the Judges from whom they take them; and so it seems to be in that case. Lord Hale is there reported to have said, that the recompense in value is not the reason why common recoveries are bars to the remainder-men, but because those are conveyances excepted out of the statute de donis. But it is the text of Litt. § 688. that if tenant in tail suffered a feigned recovery, the issue might falsify it in a formedon. This shews that at common law such recoveries as we now make use of to bar estates were not known; and therefore it would have been ridiculous in the statute de donis to have excepted recoveries, since common recoveries were not used, and recoveries on good title could not be imagined to be included. If issue was taken on the disseisin alledged in the writ of entry, and found for the demandant, and so the recovery on a point tried; this at common law would bar the issue, there lying an attain against the jury; though where it was by default, it would not. But afterwards another middle way was found out, and favoured by the Judges, to prevent the inconvenience of perpetuities; and that was where the tenant in tail appeared and vouched over, and the vouchee made default, and so there was a judgment for a recompense to one, and for the land demanded, to the other. This judgment, though by default, and without issue tried, was held a bar, on account of the recompense in value.

My brother Page's notion of Lord Derwentwater's coming in under this recovery by operation of law, as something distinct from either a purchase or descent, is very new and uncommon. One of his instances of an estate passing in that manner is the case of a tenant by escheat: but I think my brother Fortescue's opinion is right as to that, for he certainly comes in by descent, in loco hæredis.

But why is not this taking by the recovery a purchase? I wonder how that can be made a question amongst lawyers: is not this the very point in Shelley's case, where old Edward Shelley is adjudged to be a purchaser of a new estate, by suffering a recovery?

But then the question is, Whether this be a purchase within the meaning of the statute of King William? As to that, I think I need not enter into it, because the case turns upon the dilemma I mentioned before.

My opinion is, that the conveyance and recovery are good, and if my Lord Derwentwater gained any estate, it was but for life. If he gained none, he had nothing to forfeit. So that taking it either way (he being now dead) the commissioners had no right to seize this estate, and consequently their decree ought to be reversed.

argument.

Mr. Justice Tracy's argument. I am of the same opinion with my brother who argued last, that the decree of the commissioners ought to be reversed.

The question is, Whether the recovery be void, or not; which depends on that part of the statute, by which every papist is disabled to purchase in his own or another's name, and all estates, terms and interests had, done and suffered for his benefit or relief, are made void. I take this to be one entire clause, and the latter part put in only to explain and enforce the former; and there was great reason for it. The first part only disables papists to purchase lands, but not interests or profits out of lands; and therefore the latter was necessary to disable him to purchase those as well as the lands themselves. But if the latter part is to be construed as a distinct independant clause, then the first part would be rendered wholly insignificant; since the latter has all that the first has, and much more. So in 1 Jac. 1. c. 4. from whence this clause is taken: persons passing or sent into popish seminaries beyond sea are made incapable, as to themselves only, and not as to their heirs, of inheriting, purchasing or taking any manors, lands, &c. "And all estates, terms, and interests made, suffered "suffered or done to or for their benefit and relief shall be void." Now this must be taken all together but as one entire clause, for otherwise the latter part will be a repeal of that part of the foregoing, which makes them incapable only as to themselves, and not as to their heirs.

But now as to the meaning of the clause before us. It sounds strange to me, that the act of the tenant in tail himself on his own estate should make him a purchaser of it. A purchase I take to be acquisitio rei alterius, either by free-gift of the former owner, or for a valuable consideration. 1 Inst. 18. b. But what is a common recovery? It is nothing but a common conveyance, and the only method which the law gives the tenant in tail of enjoying his estate in its full latitude; and it is as much the proper conveyance of a tenant in tail, as a feoffment is of a tenant in fee-simple (7), and therefore very unlikely to be restrained by the general words of a statute. I think it could not be the intent, since there are no express words to that purpose; and I am the more inclined to such an opinion in this case, because it appears to me, that such a restraint, instead of promoting any end of the statute, serves to defeat its principal design.

The strength of all that has been said to bring the recovery within the disabling clause lies in this, that the fee gained is a new and greater estate than Lord Derwentwater had before, and so makes him a purchaser.

But this is more in appearance, than in the nature of the thing. I think the recovery cannot be said to give any new estate, because it operates only by way of bar; and an estate or interest barred is extinct and gone, and cannot properly be said to be transferred. The suffering a recovery is no more than making use of that very power which the law had given him over his own estate, and when he has by this gained the fee, he has in reality got no greater interest in it than he had before; the course of descent only is altered, so that it shall now go to one sort of heir, whereas during the continuance of the tail it would have gone to another: but as to himself, he had the whole estate absolutely at his own disposal before, and he has no more than that now. How then can this be said to be a purchase, especially in so penal a law?

(7) See this doctrine with respect to the nature of the operation of a common recovery suffered by a tenant in tail, recognized by Lee C. J. in delivering the opinion of the court in Martin ex dem. Trengowell v. Strachan, 5 Term Rep. 107. n. and by Lord Kenyon C. J. in Roe ex dem. Crows v. Baldwre, ib. 111.

But

[229] But if this is a new estate, from whom does it come? Not from the remainder-man or reversioner, for their estate is gone and extinguished. And therefore the case of a grant from the reversioner of his reversion, is very different, and so of a surrender of a tenant for life to the reversioner; in both which cases there is an estate really taken from another man by his own act and consent. So in Lord Lincoln's case cited by my brother Fortescue: he had devised the estate, and then made a lease and release to the use of himself and his heirs; and it was held to be a revocation of the will. But this would be the same, if a man after making his will makes a feoffment to the use of himself and his heirs; this is a revocation, because it shews an alteration of his mind, but yet in that case it is confessed he would be in of the same estate.

The recoveror is merely a nominal person, which the law requires, in order to fulfil the solemnity of a recovery; but has nothing at all to do with the estate; and if the tenant makes no declaration of uses, the law will do it for him, for the estate passes only from the tenant in tail, and not at all from the recoveror; and so it was held in the case of Abbot v. Burton, Salk. 591.

The case of a feoffment and refoffment is very different; because the estate in that case was once really out of the feoffor, and when it comes back again by the express act of the feoffee, it comes as a perfectly new estate: but in our case, in consideration of law the estate was never out of the tenant in tail. The bargain and sale to make a tenant to the præcipe are but one conveyance, and to whomsoever the use is limited, he takes immediately from the tenant in tail.

Ante 275. 278. I cannot think the lord by escheat comes in by descent, as has been said; there is no foundation for it in Co. Litt. 18. b. He only says, that such an estate differs from one by purchase, because he comes in by operation of law, as he does that comes in by descent. But this does not prove that the lord by escheat comes in by descent.

But now if the law itself, as I have said, would make a declaration of uses of the recovery to the tenant in tail, in fee, which can be nothing but the old estate which he had before this conveyance; it is the same thing if there be an express limitation in the same manner as the uses would have resulted. This was adjudged upon two ejectments in the case of Godbolt v. Freestone, 3 Lev. 406 (8). A man seised ex parte materna makes a feoffment to the use of himself for life, remainder to his wife for life, remainder to the issue of his body, remainder to his own right heirs. He and his wife died without issue, and the question was between the heir of the part of the father, and the heir of the part of the mother; and held that this was the old use remaining in him; and there was no difference whether the use be by express limitation, or implied by the law without limitation, and therefore should go ex parte materna.

Some stress has been laid on the word suffered in the statute, as particularly adapted to the case of a recovery; and I should think this of some weight, could that word be applied to no other recovery but this. But there is room enough for the use of that word, without taking in the present case: it may be applied to the case of a fine; to a recovery of a stranger's estate by a papist, fairly or by collusion; and in general to all recoveries whereby a papist is to gain some really new estate.

But if this recovery should be strictly within the letter of the statute, yet I do not think it is within the meaning of it. The intent of the statute was to take away the capacity papists had of acquiring new estates, not the power of disposing of their old ones: and on this ground I conceive there may be several cases put, where even new estates may be gained, and yet not be within the meaning of the statute. As if a papist had before the statute made a settlement to himself for life, with remainders over, and a power of revocation, and after the statute he had executed that power; he has now gained a new estate, and yet as this is only making use of the power he had over his own estate, I think it will not be within the statute. Suppose a papist should in an ejectment recover an estate, will any body say this is within the statute? Or suppose before the statute he had a particular estate with a condition of accruer of the fee on performance of a certain act, shall he not perform this and gain the fee to himself, notwithstanding the statute? Surely he shall, for the statute had no retrospect to take away any right vested in a papist.

Another reason why I think it not within the statute is, because it will not answer any end of the statute to construe it so. The end of it was to lessen the papists' property in land; but how can this be answered by forcing them to continue their ancient estates? By virtue of the tenancy in tail they have an equal share of power and influence in the country as if they had the fee. They have the same power in elections: they may give freeholds; and not only make votes, but even give capacities to stand as candidates for an election; for he may make them an estate for life, and I am apt to think a tenant in fee would go no farther.

But not barely to say this construction will not answer the end of the statute, I am bold to say this construction will in a great measure defeat it, by making the estates of papists much more secure than they were before: by allowing these recoveries all papists in remainder and reversion are cut off: the estate becomes affets in the hands of the heir: it is liable to charges in favour of younger children: and all sorts of incumbrances, which are excluded by the continuance of the tail, are let in; and it is subject to more forfeitures, particularly for felony, which the tail is not liable to; and thus by loading the estate a papist will be at last obliged to sell, and then the end of the statute is answered.

No argument can be drawn from the unreasonableness of putting the remainder-man and reversioner into the power of the tenant in tail, for we see the statute of forfeitures has taken no care of them at all: and why we should be more solicitous for them than the Legislature was, I can see no reason.

The case of Roper v. Radcliffe I think not at all like this, the true reason of that judgment was, that if he had taken by the devise, it was looked on in nature of a purchase of the land itself (9). My brother Fortescue says, the estate was sold before the hearing in the House of Lords, but I do not know that.

This statute is now twenty years old, and many purchases made under such recoveries as these, which were never questioned till now: and though there is a statute lately made for the security of such purchasers, yet I cannot but pay a very great regard to the opinion of so many learned men, who have gone on in this method ever since the statute.

As to the point of the reversion in fee, expectant upon the intermediate remainders, being now let in by this recovery; it was mentioned by the counsel, but I shall not give my opinion upon it, because I think it not necessary; and besides it is a very important point, only the case of Symmonds v. Cudmore goes a good way to prove it.

Upon the whole, I think this recovery to the use of Lord Derwentwater in fee was good, and therefore the decree of the commissioners ought to be reversed.

(9) Vide in Hawkins v. Chapple, 1 Atk. 622.

Mr. Justice Powys's argument. Before I deliver my opinion, I would just take notice of what is agreed in this cause; which is, 1. That a papist may suffer a recovery, in order to make a title to a protestant purchaser. And 2. That if the recovery had been declared immediately to the use of Lord Derwentwater for life, &c. prout the settlement, it would have been well enough, which I take to be a great concession.

ment.

I am of opinion to allow the claim. There have some things been mentioned in this case, that seem not so necessary to be insisted on, because that which I take to be the main point is not affected by them. As whether the estate is so fixed in the tenant to the præcipe, as to continue in him if the recovery should be void: but I take it, the whole conveyance is of a piece, and must stand or fall together: and if the recovery is made void, I think the whole conveyance must be so too.

Another matter not so necessary is, quid operatur by all this? Whether under this recovery Lord Derwentwater is in of his old, or a new estate? I shall take no notice of this, but go directly to that which will determine the whole case. And I am clearly of opinion, that the recovery suffered in this manner is not within the statute.

Originally an estate-tail was fee-simple conditional; and the tenant had the same power of aliening it after issue had, that a tenant in fee-simple now has. It was this poteestas alienandi, that was struck at by the statute de donis, which had no intention to alter the nature of the estate, but left it to continue as it was before. Salk. 619.

But then they began to feel the inconvenience of perpetuities, and upon that they looked out for a method to trip up the statute de donis, and make these intailed lands capable of being purchased. For this purpose common recoveries were set up and allowed, and these are said, Salk. 338. to have taken off the protection of the statute de donis, which is as pretty an expression as I have met with. And the use of these recoveries for that purpose is grown so common, that they are now looked upon merely as a method of conveyance, by which the power of alienation that tenants in tail have over their estates is to be exercised; and the estate conveyed is not supposed to arise out of the estate of the recoveror, but of the tenant in tail only. Hence it is, that recoveries have all along been construed most favourably, not under the notion of a judgment in a suit at law, but as a common assurance, and Cromwell's case directs the Judges not to look into them with eagle's eyes. They have been allowed even of advowsons,

Ante 294.

Co. 74.

vowfons, though no præcipe lies of them. 5 Co. 40. Ray. 7. The preciseness of form, which is required in other writs, is not necessary in them. 2 Roll. Rep. 67. Remainders and reversioners expectant on estates-tail are so much in the power of the tenant in tail, that they are of little or no consideration in law.

[296] It is said that the recovery enlarges the estate; but I deny it, for the estate-tail is still a fee-simple conditional as before the statute of Westm. 2. and that in the eye of the law is equal to an absolute fee-simple, and therefore capable of being exchanged for it. It is not an enlargement, but only a removing of an obstacle.

Suppose before the statute Will. 3. a papist had been in possession of an estate defeasible upon tender of a ring, and after the statute that right of tender had been released; will any body say this is a purchase of a new estate, and as such made void by the act; I believe no body would offer to assert it.

As the estate is not enlarged by the recovery, so what is gained under it is served out of the old estate. It is not a new estate which is gained, but only an excrescence; as a new sprout can never be called a new tree. Hence all grants and incumbrances made by tenant in tail are still charged on the estate in fee (10). It takes them as related to the former estate; whereas if this was a real recovery of an estate paramount to the tail, all those charges would be gone.

I think this right to suffer a recovery is such an inseparable interest, as cannot be taken away without express words. 1 Inst. 223. b. And I am of opinion with my brother who argued last, that to allow of these recoveries is a weakening of the popish interest, for the reasons which he has given.

There is another thing proper to take notice of, which arises out of the statute we sit upon, which vests the estates-tail of traitors in the crown in fee. This shews the sense of the Legislature as to the tenant in tail's estate; that it is in effect the same as a fee, and that he is the perfect master of the whole fee; otherwise they would be guilty of an injustice too great to suppose them capable of, in stripping the remainder-man (who has committed no crime) of his estate, merely because the intermediate tenant had committed treason (11).

DE B T upon a bond; the defendant prays oyer of the condition, which recites, that whereas the defendant had been convicted for unlawfully killing one deer on a place called Whinnyrigg Ground in the parish of Clifton in the county of Westmorland, and within the chase of the Earl of Thanet, on or about the third day of August then last past, and had brought a certiorari to remove such conviction into the court of B. R. If therefore on affirmance thereof he pays such costs as the statute directs, then the bond to be void: Quibus lectis he pleads, that the conviction recited in the condition for killing a red deer at the time and place mentioned was never affirmed in B. R. and prays judgment of the action.

The plaintiff replies, and sets out a conviction of the defendant for killing a red deer between the last day of July and 6th of August, in a chase of the Earl of Thanet called Oglebird alias Whinfield in the parish of Clifton in the county of Westmorland, which which was removed into B. R. and affirmed: and then avers, that the defendant never was convicted for killing any other deer in the said chase, or any part thereof; that the deer and killing mentioned in the conviction, are the same with those in the condition; that the place called Whinnyrigg Ground, mentioned in the condition, lies in the chase called Oglebird alias Whinfield in the conviction mentioned; that the chase in the conviction and condition are the same; and the parties the same both in one and the other.

The defendant in his rejoinder craves oyer of the conviction, which is set forth in hac verba, and agrees with the recital of it in the replication; and then taking by protestation, that the killing in the condition and the killing in the conviction are not one and the same, for plea he says (as before) that the conviction in the condition mentioned for killing a red deer in Whinnyrigg Ground on or about the 3d of August was never affirmed in B. R. And to this rejoinder the plaintiff demurs.

Filmer pro quer argued, that the rejoinder was ill; for it appears sufficiently to the court, that the conviction upon account of which this bond was given has been affirmed. The conviction answers the description of the condition in every part, but as to the time and place, which are not material variances. 1 Saund. 116. Or if they are, yet it is cured by the averments, which have been always allowed in cases of this nature. 4 Co. 71. 8 Co. 115. 11 E. 4. 2. Cro. Car. 501. Lutw. 1414, 1415. 3 Lev. 179. Nor does any prejudice arise from this to the other side; because if it be not true, he may traverse the identity: here he had an opportunity so to do; he has not done it, and so has by his silence admitted the fact to be as we have alleged; for whatever is materially alleged on one side, and not traversed by the other, is always taken to be admitted. 2 Vent. 170. Salk. 91. So that, be this variance material or not material, either way it is against him upon this record.

Agar contra. The averment as to the identity can have no force, because it is contrary to what appears upon the face of the record; the killing in the condition being in a particular part of the chase, and the other laid to be in the chase at large, so the same evidence will not serve both: Besides, here is no averment of the identity of the conviction, but of the crime only, whereas a man may be doubly convicted of the same offence.

But if the averment should be taken to have cured the variances, yet the plaintiff should have gone on and assigned a breach in the replication; for as it now stands, the bond is not forfeited, unless the plaintiff was put to charges, and those charges unpaid, and nothing of that appears. 1 Saund. 102. Yel. 78. Salk. 138. Show. 140.

Per curiam, It is certain that the identity must appear to us, before we can give judgment against the defendant. But though there are variances, yet the averments (which are consistent with the record) have sufficiently solved them. It would have been improper to have averred the identity of the conviction, and so have sent that to a jury, especially when it is consequentially determined by the other averments, as it would have been if the defendant had taken issue upon them. Then as to the objection for want of a breach in the replication; certainly there was no occasion for that, because the defendant has not made his case upon the performance of the condition, but upon a collateral point by way of excuse, which admits a non-performance; and it has been often resolved, that where the defendant pleads matter of excuse, which admits a non-performance, it is enough for the plaintiff in his replication to meet the plea, and falsify the excuse, except in one instance (which stands upon a particular reason) and that is the case of an award, where it has been held indeed that upon nul agard fait pleaded, the plaintiff must not only reply and set out an award, but he must go farther and assign a breach, that it may appear to be in a good part of the award; for since it has been held that an award may be good for part and void for the rest, it is necessary to shew a breach of a good part, or otherwise the plaintiff has no cause of action, for the bare finding there is an award will not intitle the plaintiff to recover. Besides this, payment of the costs goes in defeasance of the bond, and should have been shewn by the defendant, being for his benefit. Or if the replication had been ill, yet the plea is so too, for it is not ad idem, the condition being for killing a deer, and the plea a red deer, and then the declaration must stand (2) and the plaintiff have judgment.

a motion for an information in nature of a quo warranto against them, it was objected by the counsel for the defendants, that the court never grants these informations, but in cases where there is an usurpation upon some franchise of the crown, whereas in this case the King alone could not grant such powers as are exercised by the trustees; the consequence of which is, that this authority was no prior franchise of the crown.

To this it was answered and resolved by the court, that the rule was laid down too general, for that informations have been constantly granted, where any new jurisdiction or a publick trust is exercised without authority (1). That this case came even within the defendant's own rule, for all havens belong originally to the crown. The publick trade and revenue are much concerned in the regulations of ports; and there being a particular method of election required, we will always keep people up to that method; and rather than suffer them to vary from it, we have construed corporations to be absolutely dissolved. An information was granted.

Per curiam, The order of sessions must be quashed; not for want of any power in the sessions to look into the jurisdiction of the two justices, for that they certainly have (1); but because that want of jurisdiction is not sufficiently alleged; since they might have a jurisdiction, though it did not appear upon the charter of Albrighton. The sessions should have said in general, that it appeared to them, that the two justices were neither of them of the quorum, and that would have been good cause to quash the order of the two justices (2).

Costs.

UPON trial of the issue a case was made and afterwards argued in court, but the fact not being sufficiently stated, so as the court could give judgment according to the justice of the cause, it was recommended to the parties, and accordingly they agreed, to go to a new trial; where the plaintiff was nonsuited. And now the question was about the costs, whether the master should tax the common costs of a nonsuit, or take into his consideration all the former proceedings. And upon motion for the court's direction to the master it was ordered, that he should tax the defendant his costs upon the whole, as well with relation to the first trial as the last (1).

(1) But in Hankey v. Smith, where a cause was sent to a new trial on account of the imperfectness of the special case reserved, and nothing was said about the costs of the first trial, it was held, that the party succeeding on the second trial was not entitled to the costs of the first. 3 Term Rep. 507. If the plaintiff be hung up a year by injunction, he must have a scire facias (1).

THE plaintiff obtained judgment of Michaelmas term generally, but was stopped from taking out execution by an injunction out of Chancery; which being afterwards dissolved, he takes out execution teste the last day of the subsequent Michaelmas term; and whether he could do it in this case without a scire facias was the question.

How the year is to be computed.

And the whole court held the execution irregular, as taken out after the year; for the judgment being general has relation to the first day of the term, and so there is all Michaelmas term over and above a year. And they said the statute of Westm. 2. which is infra annum, must be computed by calendar months, and not by terms; for it was insisted, that taking one term inclusive and the other exclusive, there was but four terms.

It being thus determined, that the plaintiff was without the year; the next question was Quid operatur by the injunction? Which was compared to a writ of error, and there it has been often resolved, that though the party be hung up never so many years by a writ of error, yet there may be execution sued out immediately upon affirmance without a scire facias. But the court said, there was a great difference between the case of a writ of error and an injunction; the former being a judicial proceeding appearing to them upon record, whereas an injunction is not a matter of record so as that the court can take notice of it (2).

The defendant, as to the count upon the note, pleads, that he gave a bond in satisfaction of the said 60 l. and the plaintiff received it as such. And as to the said several sums of 36 l. 9 s. 5 d. and 36 l. 9 s. 5 d. that he gave a note for so much in satisfaction, and upon issues tendred the defendant demurs.

Upon standing in the paper, no body appeared for the defendant; but it was observed by the court, that there was a discontinuance. And at another day Strange for the defendant argued, that there were two discontinuances. 1. As to the note for 65 l. where the defendant in his plea has artfully dropped 5 l. and pleads only a satisfaction for 60 l. And 2. in the plea of a note in satisfaction, which covers no more than two several sums of 36 l. 9 s. 5 d. whereas there are three such sums in the declaration. Pasch. 4 Geo. Nichols v. Backhouse, in an indebitatus assumpsit, the defendant quoad so much parcel of the damages, pleads one plea; et quoad so much, residuum, pleads another; and on error, when it stood to be affirmed, Eyre Justice observed, that between the two pleas the defendant had dropped a penny, and the court held it a discontinuance. So is Yelv. 5. Carter 51.

What manner of pleading makes a discontinuance. Salk. 179. 2 Roll. Abr. 104. N. 1. 5 Com. Dig. tit. Pleader, (E. 1.) 384. (M. 2.) 467.

To this it was answered, and resolved by the court, that as to the first part of the objection, there was no discontinuance, it being pleaded quoad the whole promise; and though it be in law only an answer to part, and by that means a naughty plea, yet it will not make a discontinuance; so vice versa, if it be pleaded as to part, it will be a discontinuance, though in law it is an answer to the whole. As to the other point, they all held it a discontinuance; but then Eyre Justice observed, that it being a record of this term, the plaintiff might yet take judgment by nihil dicit dict for so much as is uncovered by the plea; and cited two instances where it was so done, Vincent v. Preston, Mich. 11 W. 3. Lord Raym. rot. 183. and the case of Marcas v. Johnson, Hill. 3 Ann. 716. Salk. 180.

Whereupon the cause was adjourned, to give the plaintiff an opportunity to set it right, which he did. And at another day, Strange for the defendant argued, that though the discontinuance was now out of the case, yet the plaintiff ought not to have judgment, because by his replication to the first part of the plea he has offered an immaterial issue: the declaration being upon a note for 65*l.* the issue offered is, whether any bond was given in satisfaction of a note for 60*l.* And he cited Hob. 113. Kent v. Hall, where in debt upon a bond for 10*l.* 10*s.* the defendant pleads payment of the 10*l.* secundum formam conditionis, upon which they were at issue, and found for the plaintiff: but a rep- leader awarded, for that the issue was not ad idem. And he likened it to the case of Merri v. Jocelyn (a), where in debt upon a bond the defendant pleaded payment before the day, and found for the plaintiff: but reversed upon error, because the issue did not leave room enough for the jury to find an absolute breach of the condition. And so it was held in two cases in C. B. Pasch. 5 Ann. Steele v. Manby, Idem v. Hill.

Count upon a note of 65*l.* plea a bond given to plaintiff in satisfaction of said 60*l.* if issue be tendered thereon it is an immaterial one.

Though there is a verdict in this case for the plaintiff, yet the matter assigned for error is such as at common law would have vitiated the judgment. In the case of a person of full age want of warrant of attorney was always held to be error, till the 32 H. 8. and then surely the want of an admission of a prochein amy is much more so, because according to 1 Roll. Abr. 287. A. 2. and many other books, where it is said, that the reason why an infant cannot authorize an attorney to appear for him is, because he is not supposed to be capable of chusing a proper person, and therefore (says the book) he shall have a guardian appointed, against whom he may have an easy remedy in case of misbehaviour: but before he can sue by prochein amy there must be the appointment of the court, and that must likewise appear upon record; whereas in this case it is admitted there never was any appointment to prosecute this suit. The statute Westm. 2. c. 15. which appoints an infant to sue by prochein amy runs in omni casu quo minores infra etatem implacitare possunt, concessum est quod propinquiore amici admittantur ad sequendum pro eis, which in 2 Inst. 261. is taken notice of to be thus rendered by Fleta, Sequatur unus de propinquis amicis et admittatur, and this admission, says Coke, must be by order of court.

As this is an error at common law, it lies upon the other side to shew, whether it be within any of the statutes of jeofails. There is no such thing mentioned in any of them, and there was a case, which is a tacit admission, that it is not within them, and that was Read v. Waldron (a) in B. R. Hil. 6 W. 3. rot. 249. Trespass by prochein amy, Not guilty pleaded, and a verdict for the the plaintiff: the same error assigned as here, and upon a certiorari returned, that there was no admission, in nullo est erratum was pleaded. But after this a certiorari was awarded ad informandum conscientiam curiæ (which need not have been if the verdict had helped it) and then an admission was returned, and the judgment affirmed.

But it will be objected, that in this case the very fact of our assignment of errors appears upon view of the whole record to be false; for that Isaac Knight is returned at the head of the record to have been admitted to prosecute and defend all suits in C. B. on behalf of the infant.

To this I answer; that the admission returned is not such an one as we have assigned the want of for error, which is an admission to prosecute in this particular cause; and I have an affidavit that according to the course of C. B. there must be a separate admission in every cause to prosecute or defend in placito predicto, and such an admission it is that is wanting in this case; so that to say here is a general admission, is begging the question, because a general admission is not sufficient.

Indeed in this court it is taken, that an admission of a guardian to appear in one cause will serve for others, but that depends upon the particular practice of this court, that one in custody at the suit of A. is bound to answer all other suits against him of the same term, without a distinct process to bring him in. But still in suits by an infant (which must be by several processes) there must be separate admissions, for the reason fails which supports the contrary practice in suits against an infant. And agreeable to this is the entry Rast. 396. a. Concessum est quod W. B. sequatur pro J. C. qui infra etatem est, versus H. E. de placito terre; and the admission returned upon the second certiorari in Read v. Waldron was particular, to prosecute that suit.

At common law, before the statute which enabled men to make attornies, all parties appeared secundum exigentiam brevis in proper person, unless where they purchased the King's writ of dedimus, and that always recited the pendency of such a particular cause: and in the case of an infant, Register 172. a. 93. b. 27. b. there are writs to the Justices of C. B. signifying that such a person is deputed to sue for the infant, and so requiring them to admit him; and these recite a suit depending between A. plaintiff and B. defendant de placito transgressionis, or as the case is.

A general admission of prochein amy is sufficient.

ERROR of a judgment in C. B. in trespass and assault by one infant against another; verdict pro quer: and assigned for error, that whereas the plaintiff had appeared to prosecute this suit by one Isaac Knight her next friend, as one specially assigned by the court, yet the said Isaac Knight was never so assigned, nor does any such admission appear upon record. In nullo est erratum pleaded.

Strange pro quer in errore argued, that the defendant having come in gratis, and pleaded in nullo est erratum, had thereby taken away the necessity of the plaintiff's procuring the return of a certiorari to verify the error, for now the fact is admitted, and put in judgment of the court, whether upon that state of the case there be error in point of law or not.

Though there is a verdict in this case for the plaintiff, yet the matter assigned for error is such as at common law would have vitiated the judgment. In the case of a person of full age want of warrant of attorney was always held to be error, till the 32 H. 8. and then surely the want of an admission of a prochein amy is much more so, because according to 1 Roll. Abr. 287. A. 2. and many other books, where it is said, that the reason why an infant cannot authorize an attorney to appear for him is, because he is not supposed to be capable of choosing a proper person, and therefore (says the book) he shall have a guardian appointed, against whom he may have an easy remedy in case of misbehaviour: but before he can sue by prochein amy there must be the appointment of the court, and that must likewise appear upon record; whereas in this case it is admitted there never was any appointment to prosecute this suit. The statute Westm. 2. c. 15. which appoints an infant to sue by prochein amy runs in omni casu quo minores infra etatem implacitare possunt, concessum est quod propinquiore amici admittantur ad sequendum pro eis, which in 2 Inst. 261. is taken notice of to be thus rendered by Fleta, Sequatur unus de propinquiribus amicis et admittatur, and this admission, says Coke, must be by order of court.

Warr

Wearg contra. In nullo est erratum confesses no errors which are improperly alleged, but as to such it serves for a demurrer, and that we say is this case, for the error assigned is contrary to the record, which runs, et unde eadem Susanna qua infra etat' 21 annorum exist' per Isaacum Knight proximum amicum suum per curiam domini Regis de Banco nunc hic specialiter admissum existentem queritur, &c. Cro. Eliz. 655. Held that you cannot assign for error, that there was no such attorney as the defendant has appeared by, because it is contrary to the record, which calls him his attorney.

As to the practice, I am told that when this general admission was entered, it was objected to by my client, and the officer of C. B. informed him it must be so.

But if it should be error at common law, yet it will be cured by 18 Eliz. which helps want of warrant of attorney; and this is a case within the same reason.

Strange replied. There are no general words in 18 Eliz. and to say it shall extend to cases of the like nature will be making that statute entirely useless, for the 32 H. 8. c. 30. had before helped want of a warrant of the party against whom the issue was tried, but went no farther; and then the making the subsequent statute to extend to the warrant of the other party, shews the judgment of the Legislature, that similar cases were not within the former provision; and it is stronger too, because in the 32 Hen. 8. there are general words.

The recital in the declaration can never be set up against the admission returned at the head of the record, which is, Concessum est that Knight be admitted tam ad prosequendum quam ad defendendum all suits by and against the infant. In Read v. Waldron there was the same recital (prout per roll, which was brought into court and inspected.)

[307] Curia. The practice of this court warrants a general admission, and there is no inconvenience in it: it amounts to the same thing, whether the admission be general or particular, and no reason can be given why it should not be one way as well as the other. The judgment of C. B. was affirmed.

Brocas. versus the Mayor and Aldermen of the City of London.

THE plaintiff moved that he might have a copy of the poll, and that Sir John Ward, who as mayor presided at the election, might produce the original at the trial; and Serjeant Chefbyre pro quer. cited two cases and produced the rules, where a copy of the poll was ordered to be given, and the original to be produced. 12 Ann. The court never orders a poll to be produced without a particular reason.

(a) 10 Mod. 198. but not S. P.

Strange contra. As to a copy they have had it already: and as to producing the original, we take that to be an extraordinary attempt, because no use can be made of the original which they will not have the same advantage of from a copy. Mich. 5 Geo. Rex v. Smith, (on consideration) the court declared, that where things are evidence of themselves, as corporation books, &c. they never will make a rule to produce the original, unless it appears to be necessary to be inspected upon account of rasure or a new entry; and so it was held likewise Mich. 4 Geo. the Company of Gunsmiths versus Turville. In Smith's case indeed there was a rule on a justice of peace to produce an examination, but that was upon account of the necessity of proving the hand of the party, before it could be read against him; and in that case the court was so tender, that they would not oblige the justice himself to attend, but pronounced the rule, not quod producat, but produci faciat, the examination at the trial.

As to Delme's case, I observe upon the rule, that it was made without any affidavit; from whence we may apprehend, there was somewhat of a consent to it: but as to Parminter's case, I remember there was a juggle about the poll, and some suspicion of alterations, so great, that the mayor attended here a whole year upon an attachment for not producing it; and that was the particular ground upon which that rule was made.

Per Pratt C. J. We never order the original to be produced, where the copy is evidence, without such a particular foundation as has been mentioned (1). It was denied in Sir Gilbert Heath-

The plaintiff took nothing by his motion.

ERROR e C. B. in case upon several promises, demurrer to the declaration, and judicium pro querente, and want of an original and warrants of attorney assigned.

The court will take notice that London is a city.

Strange pro defendente in errore. As to the warrants of attorney, the plaintiff has not verified that error by the return of a certiorari, so we have entered a non misit breve, and laid that matter out of the case.

As to the original, I apprehend the plaintiff has not verified his error in the manner he has alleged it, which can only be done by one of these two ways, either by the other party's coming ing in and confessing it, or by his own procuring the return of a certiorari, that there is no original in the cause: here is no confession of the error, and therefore the question will be upon the return of the certiorari, whether by that return the plaintiff in error has so far established the truth of his assignment of errors, as to be intitled to have this judgment reversed. And I take it he has not done so in this case, for the action being laid in London, therefore the certiorari commands the custos brevium of C. B. Quod scrutatis brevibus originalibus de predicta curia de Banco, de London, termino Pas. anno 5 of the King, he should certify to the court, what he found about it. To this the custos brevium returns, Quod scrutatis brevibus originalibus ipsius Domini Regis civitatis sue London, non habetur aliquod breve originale civitatis London de predicto termino in his custody: all which may be true, and yet there may be an original to warrant the judgment, directed (as all other writs are) vicecomitibus London only: and therefore the command being to search for a writ directed vic. London; and the return being that there is none directed vic. civitatis London; that amounts to no more than if he said, I am it is true ordered to search the files of writs in London, but instead of that I have perused all the writs of the city of London, and find none between these parties; or in other words, I cannot find an original directed, as never any original in the world was ever made.

As they who procure this return are labouring to reverse a judgment, I apprehend the court will hold a stricter hand over them, than they would do if it were in order to an affirmance: and the court is always very exact in making the plaintiff in error verify his errors in the manner he has alleged them. There was the case of Lord Peterborough v. Atkins in the Exchequer Chamber in Trin. 5 Geo. where we had assigned several matters of error, and in order to verify them we prayed a certiorari to the custos brevium of the court of Exchequer; and it was objected of the other side, that this was no prayer of a certiorari, there being no such officer in the court of Exchequer; but the writ ought to have been prayed to the Barons: I was counsel in that case, and I did offer it to the court, whether they would not take the words custodi brevium to mean any person who had the custody of the writs, and not confine it to any particular person as an officer called a custos brevium; but the Court said they would construe nothing in our favour, and so the judgment was affirmed.

As to the variance between London and civit. London, there is Bro. Repleader 6. Dett. against A. B. nuper de Bristol: the defendant pleads, that the day of the writ purchased he was commorant at Dale, absque hoc that he ever lived apud predictam villam Bristol; and found for the defendant: but a repleader awarded, for that the writ was Bristol and not villa Bristol, and yet there was was the word predict. to tie it up to what went before, which is wanting in our case.

And as to what may be said, that every body knows that London and the city of London are synonymous expressions to denote the same place: To this I answer, 1. That taking this return as a matter of fact, then though London and the city of London are one and the same; yet in point of fact a writ directed vic. London is not a writ directed vic. civit. London. 2. In the next place, to take it as a matter of law, it is to be considered how this certiorari and return are possible to be reconciled; and I can see but one way to do it, viz. by the court's taking notice judicially, that London is a city, which I apprehend they never will do.

It is true, and therefore I must admit, that the court will take notice of counties, for they are to be considered as part of the common law, delivered down to us from time immemorial: but then in relation to cities, the applying the rule, quod ubi est eadem ratio, ibi idem jus, is (as I apprehend) begging the question, for I must insist that the same reason does not extend to both cases.

Every city must be so, either by charter, or prescription; and therefore to say the court will take notice of cities, is to say the court will take notice of charters and prescriptions, which is a notion I believe was never advanced, otherwise than as now by way of consequence.

If they take notice of charters, there will be the same reason to take notice of the nature of every incorporation; and when that is done, I much question whether the same reason will not introduce all the by-laws and customs of particular places into the judicial knowledge of the court, which would be the absurdest attempt imaginable. In the case of Argyle v. Hunt in B. R. Trin. Ante 157. 5 Geo. after sentence the defendant came for a prohibition, alleging that it appeared upon the face of the libel, that the word where was spoken in London: but the custom of London did not appear, and they could not go out of the libel after sentence for a ground for a prohibition; and therefore the court did declare, that they could not judicially take notice of it, and that though they had such a private knowledge of it as not to put the party to produce an affidavit in every case; yet they could not proceed in any case without proof of the custom, if the plaintiff below thought fit to insist upon it. And to this I may add the constant form of pleading, which is setting out at first, quod civitas London est antiqua civitas, not to mention the innumerable authorities which require all inferior jurisdictions (of which London is one) to set out out quo jure their courts are held, in all cases where the point immediately concerns themselves.

[312] For any thing appearing upon this record London may as well be a ville as a city; and though I can cite no cases where the court has said they will not take notice of cities, yet I rely upon this as a strong argument it was never so much as thought they would, till the other side produce authorities to shew they will. In the case of the King v. Clerk, 5 Mod. 162. Salk. 349. Holt C. J. put the case of a nonconformist living in a borough that sent members to parliament contrary to 17 Car. 2. c. 2. and he was discharged, because not averred in the return, that London sent members to parliament, for the court could not take notice of it.

But further: when this return comes to be narrowly considered, it will appear to be in a manner insensible. The words are, non habetur aliquid breve originale civitat. London, which in English will run, That there is no original of or belonging to the city of London; whereas the writ in this cause can belong to no body but the plaintiff. And how then can it be said to be a verifying the error, when he is commanded to send up the writ which the plaintiff purchased to found the jurisdiction of C. B. for him to say he has not the writ which belongs to the city of London.

Since therefore the judgment may not be erroneous, the court will take it to be right; and we had no occasion to allege diminution, and put ourselves to the charge of fetching up the right original, when there is nothing appearing upon this record to obstruct our having the judgment affirmed.

Wearg contra. This being a matter of form must be governed by the practice, and it is the constant form which the custos breviarum uses. It is agreed, that the court will take notice of counties; and then London being a county, you will take notice of that too. If there had been a county called London, and a city called London; as Oxford and Gloucester, and others; there might be some colour of objection upon account of the uncertainty. But in this record it appears, London is a city, for the writ of inquiry is executed apud Guildhall civit. London. A writ may be said to be of, or belonging to London, without a necessary implication that London is the owner of it.

C. J. We ought to support this judgment if we can: the error assigned is so much against the honour of the court of C. B. by supposing them to usurp a jurisdiction, and proceed without authority, that I must have the clearest proof in the world, before I can

I can declare they have done so: and I will intend there is an original, till it appears impossible there should be one. To maintain this return, and set aside the judgment, we are to be led out of the record, and take notice that London is a city: and if the court would not do it in the case in Bro. to support a verdict, I am sure there is no reason we should do it where the consequence is to overthrow the proceedings: though London is a county, yet it may not be a city, as is the case of Poole, and Haverfordwest.

Fortescue J. We take notice of publick acts of Parliament, and in many of them London is called a city: we take notice what is couched under an &c. in the award of a venire, and when an avowant speaks of the locus in quo, &c. we know what he means.

Adjournatur. And this term Powys J. being also in court, the Chief Justice and the rest were of opinion, that they must take notice that London was a city, it being mentioned to be so in several acts of Parliament; and therefore held the error to be verified, and the judgment of *C. ON error from Ireland, it was objected, that the defendant was an infant, and therefore there ought not to have been a capiatur. case was no more than this. By the charter the mayor is to be chosen by the capital burgesses out of the capital burgesses, who are twenty-four. The usage for fifty years has been, that the common burgesses have put five of the capital burgesses in nomination, out of which five the capital burgesses have chosen one to be mayor: and this the jury find was according to a by-law not now extant in writing, and that there are no footsteps before these fifty years of any election in any other manner.

At the charter day the common burgesses met and put eight capital burgesses in nomination, whereof the plaintiff was one, and he had the majority of the capital burgesses for electing him to be mayor.

It being agreed that this election was not according to the usage, the counsel for the plaintiff insisted, that it was an unreasonable usage, for here the common burgesses who have no right in the election under the charter, have it in their power to dissolve the corporation by their neglecting to return five; or if it were good, yet it can only have allowance in cases where they do nominate, and if they do not, then the capital burgesses may make the election under the charter out of the whole body.

Per curiam, This is a good usage, being to avoid popular confusion: but here the election pursues neither the charter nor the by-law. It is not under the charter, for that says it must be out of the capital burgesses at large, and here they confined themselves to eight; nor is it according to the usage, because more than five were nominated, which brings in all the confusion that was designed to be avoided by that provision. Judicium pro defendente.

UPON Not guilty in ejectment for lands in the county of Stafford on the demise of the most noble James Duke of Hamilton and Brandon and Elizabeth his wife, on a trial at bar in the court of Common Pleas, the jury find this special verdict.

That Thomas Lord Gerard had two sons, Gilbert and John, and died 1617. That Gilbert (the elder) had issue Dutton and Alice, and died 1623. That Dutton had issue Charles, who had issue Digby, who had issue Elizabeth now Dutchess of Hamilton, lessor of the plaintiff. That Alice the daughter of Gilbert married Roger

Owen, Esquire, and had issue Thomas, who had issue Roger Owen, now living. That John, the younger son of Thomas and brother of Gilbert, had issue Richard, who had issue Charles, William, Philip, Joseph, and Frances wife of the defendant Fleetwood. This being the pedigree, they further find, that Charles the son of Dutton, being then Baron of Gerards-Bromley, and seised in fee of the premises in question, by lease and release dated 28 and 29 November 12 Car. 2. conveyed the same to trustees to the following uses. As to part of the lands to the use of himself and the Lady Jane Digby his intended wife, for their joint lives and the survivor of them; remainder to the first and every other son and sons of that marriage in tail male, remainder to the heirs male of the body of Charles, remainder to the heirs male of the body of Thomas first Lord Gerard, great-grandfather of Lord Charles; remainder to the right heirs of Lord Charles. And as to the residue of the lands not in jointure, to the use of Lord Charles for life, remainder to the first and every other son and sons of that marriage in tail male, with the like remainders over as before. That the marriage soon after took effect, and Lord Charles and Lady Jane, by virtue of the said deed of release and the statute for transferring uses into possession, being jointly seised of part of the premises, and Lord Charles sole seised of the residue for life, had issue Digby their only son: and afterwards Lord Charles died, and Lady Jane survived, and became sole seised of her part. That Digby entered into the residue of the lands not in jointure, and was thereof seised prout lex postulat, and also of the jointure lands in remainder expectant upon the death of Lady Jane; and being so seised, died 8 November 1684, leaving issue Elizabeth, now Dutches of Hamilton, his only daughter and heir. That John the younger son of Thomas, and Richard the son of John, died in the life-time of Digby; and Richard left issue Charles, William, Philip, Joseph, and Frances wife of the defendant Fleetwood. That Charles the son of Richard, as Baron of Gerards-Bromley and heir male of the body of Thomas, entered into the lands whereof Digby died seised, and was thereof seised prout lex postulat, and also of the jointure lands in remainder expectant upon the death of Lady Jane. But the jury further finds that Charles, William, and Philip, sons of the said Richard, in the life-time of Richard and Digby, 1676, (being then infants under the government of their father, and he being then a subject of King Charles the Second, and under his obedience in the kingdom of England) by the said Richard their father were sent, did proceed, go and pass out of the said kingdom of England into parts beyond the seas, out of the obedience of the said King, viz. to St. Omers, and at and in a popish seminary or college of jesuits, under the obedience of the King of Spain then being, there to be educated in the popish religion and superstition used in the church of Rome; and did there reside for the space of five years amongst jesuits and papists, and during that time were instructed and educated in, and did profess that religion. That Charles in 1681, and Philip in 1693, returned into England. That Charles, after the death of Digby, 22 May 1685, granted the lands to Whitgrave and Jervis, and their heirs, to make them tenants of the freehold till a common recovery was suffered, which was accordingly had and suffered Pasch. 1 Jac. 2. to the use of Charles and his heirs. And then Charles in consideration of 10,000 l. portion with Mary his intended wife, grants the same lands to uses which by the death of Charles without issue of that marriage are all extinct except a rent-charge of 1000 l. per annum to Lady Mary, who is still living. That 27 October 1703, Lady Jane died seised of the jointure lands, and Charles entered and suffered a common recovery, to the use of himself in fee. That William and Joseph, sons of Richard, died without issue in the life-time of Charles their brother. That Charles always from his going beyond sea to the time of his death was and continued a papist, and died 21 April 1707, without issue, nor was his wife then pregnant. That Philip, brother to Charles, is living, and heir male of the body of Thomas; and always from his going beyond sea was and did continue a papist, and is so now, using and exercising the said popish religion. That Mary, widow of the second Charles, is living. That Roger Owen, Esquire, grandson of Alice the daughter of Gilbert, is now living, and the next protestant of kin to Philip Gerard. That immediately after the death of the second Charles Lord Gerard, the defendants Fleetwood & al entered, and were seised prout lex postulat upon whose possession the Duke and Dutcheß of Hamilton, in right of the Dutcheß, did enter and were seised in manner aforesaid, and made the lease to the plaintiff, who entered, and was possessed till ejected by the defendants. But whether, upon the whole matter, the re-entry of the defendants be lawful or not, the jury pray the advice of the court: Et si pro quer', pro quer' ; et si pro def', pro def'.

The great question in this case is, whether upon this state of the fact, the statute of 1 Jac. 1. c. 4. will have wrought such a disability, upon account of the foreign education of Charles and Philip, as that in judgment of law the remainder to the heirs male of the body of Thomas, the common ancestor, (the death of Digby without issue male having determined all the former limitations) must be taken to be spent, so as to let in the Dutcheß, who is the reversioner. If it has, then it is with the plaintiff, otherwise it is with the defendants.

The matter in law upon this special verdict was argued three several times at the bar in C. B. Trin. 11 Anna, by Serjeant
Hooper

Hooper for the plaintiff, and Serjeant Pongelly pro def'; in Mich. following by Serjeant Pratt pro quer', and Serjeant Selby pro def'; and Hil. sequen' by Sir Thomas Powys pro quer', and Serjeant Chefbyre pro def'. But the same persons having argued it again in B. R. upon the writ of error, where the matter was taken up more at large; I shall omit the arguments they made in C. B. and take notice only of the resolution of the court, which was delivered by Lord Trevor, C. J. Pasch. 12 Ann.

Lord Trevor, after stating the heads of the special verdict, went on as follows. The plaintiff's title depends upon the construction of the several acts of parliament of 1 Jac. 1. c. 4. 3 Jac. 1. c. 5. and 3 Car. 1. c. 2. For the lessors of the plaintiff must intitle themselves to the lands in question upon some disability wrought by one of those statutes, which disability must enure to make the recovery suffered by the second Lord Charles to be void, and work a determination of the precedent estate-tail, or at least a present cesser of it: and since the estate-tail is not absolutely determined; as it is not, because Philip who is heir in tail is still living, and may have issue who may be inheritable to the estate-tail; therefore the lessors, who claim after that estate is determined, cannot entitle themselves to enter, unless some or one of those acts of parliament give a title to them so to do; for if those recoveries are good, their remainder is barred; or if they are not good, yet if the estate-tail has in judgment of law continuance, they cannot enter by virtue of that remainder.

The only act insisted upon by the counsel for the plaintiff is the act of 1 Jac. for the other subsequent acts cannot intitle them, and the question upon them is only how far they have altered the act of 1 Jac. Therefore the counsel did endeavour, with a great deal of art and ingenuity, to shew, that the act of 1 Jac. had so far disabled Lord Charles to take the estate-tail by descent, that the recovery suffered by him was void, and that the same disability being still upon Philip, and there being no person in being who can take the estate-tail, they must be intitled, as if it was actually spent: then as they insisted, that this act wrought such a disability; so they endeavoured to shew, that this act is still in force, and not repealed or any wise altered by the subsequent acts of 3 Jac. or 3 Car. for I did not observe they insisted (nor was there any foundation so to do) that either of those two later acts could give any title to the plaintiffs, for 3 Jac. gives the pernanancy of the profits, in cases of disabilities under that act, to the next protestant of kin; and the act of 3 Car. gives the forfeiture to the crown upon conviction.

So

So that this case will depend upon two things to consider,
 1. What is the operation and effect of 1 Jac. admitting it still in force, and as if the other acts had never been made. 2. How far that act does still continue in force, and whether it be repealed or any wise altered by the subsequent acts, or either of them.

1. To consider what construction must be put upon the statute of 1 Jac. That act says, "If any person shall pass or go, or shall send or cause to be sent any child or other person under their government, into any parts beyond the seas out of the King's obedience, to the intent to enter into or be resident in any college, seminary or house of jesuits, priests, or any other popish order, profession, or calling whatsoever; every person so sending or causing to be sent any child or other person shall forfeit 100 l. And every such person so passing or being sent beyond seas to any such intent or purpose shall, as in respect of him or herself only, and not to or in respect of any of his heirs or posterity, be disabled and made incapable to inherit, purchase, take, have, or enjoy, any manors, lands, &c."

Then there is a proviso, "That if any person or child so passing, sent, or then being beyond seas as aforesaid, should after become conformable and obedient; during such time as they shall continue in such conformity and obedience, they shall be freed and discharged of every such disability and incapacity."

I would observe first, as this act is penned, it was very difficult to determine what the effect of this clause would be, and what would be the consequence of that disability, and who should have the lands during it; for in these particulars the act is silent, therefore these things must be left to the construction of law, because there is no express declaration who shall have the lands in the mean time.

The counsel for the plaintiff have endeavoured to construe this act in such a manner, as would have a different effect upon lands that were descended before the disability incurred; for they seem to admit, that if lands were descended to any one that did afterwards incur this disability, it would disable him only to receive the profits; but they said, where the disability is precedent, it ought to be construed so as to prevent any descent.

Now I would observe, that this would be a pretty extraordinary construction, thus to distinguish between lands coming before the disability incurred, and all those cases that may happen upon this act: for though this construction will provide for the case before before us, yet it renders the act wholly ineffectual as to all other cases that may be upon it.

Suppose it had been the case of an estate in fee, that was to descend to a person disabled; according to this construction the estate could never descend upon him; who then shall have it? It cannot be pretended his next heir shall enter in his life-time, for he is not heir to him, he cannot claim the estate till his death: the disability is only personal, and the act says it shall not prejudice the heir, but that after the death of the ancestor he may inherit, but it does not say he shall take in the life of the ancestor. So that if this be the construction, there is no body to take; the consequence of which is, that the disability is of no use, for though the party be disabled, yet if nobody has a right to enter, he may keep it himself, since nobody else can recover it against him.

This would be the case upon this construction, where an estate in fee descended: then put the case of an estate purchased by one disabled: the act disables him from purchasing, but no body will say but that the estate shall vest in him, so that his heir may claim through him. An heir cannot claim through a purchaser, if the purchase did not vest in him; so that this case too would be unprovided for upon this construction, for the heir cannot take in the life of the ancestor.

This was compared to the case of a monk or a person professed, but they are not alike; for there the disability is grounded upon the maxim in law, that one professed is civilly dead, but it cannot be said that a person disabled by this act is dead in law, for it is not an absolute disability, but only during nonconformity. As to the case of lands descended before the disability incurred, it was admitted, that the estate and interest should continue in him; but that the act is to have this effect, to disable him to take the profits; and if in that case, why not so in the other?

Where a statute inflicts a disability to take lands, or a pecuniary penalty for a publick crime, and does not declare who shall take it, it shall go to the crown.

As this is the natural, so it is the legal construction: it is not expressed, who shall have the land; but the act having inflicted this disability for a publick crime against the government, I think the construction of law is, that the land during the disability should go to the crown. Where an act inflicts a pecuniary penalty, or a disability; if the parliament doth not declare who shall have it, the crown must have it; otherwise the act is wholly ineffectual: and the King being the head of the government, all penalties for publick offences go to him. Indeed where a particular person has a private injury, the law may give him him the penalty by way of recompence; otherwise the crown has the forfeiture; and so it was resolved in the case of Woodward v Fox, 2 Vent. 269 (a). where an arch-deacon sold the office of register, and the question was, who should have the forfeiture? It was adjudged, that the crown should have it. So it is in many other cases, for if you do not give the forfeiture to the crown, you cannot give it to any body else by implication: you cannot give it to one subject more than another.

(a) 3 Lev. 289.

And as the matter rested on the act of 1 Jac. as it was doubtful who should have the benefit of the disability, so it was more doubtful in what manner the crown should have it, whether before conviction or after; by office or inquisition; so that as the forfeiture was uncertain, the method was also uncertain: and these doubts upon the penning of the act did in a manner render it ineffectual.

But however this might stand upon the act of 1 Jac. if that was the only act, I think that by the act of 3 Car. it is explained and altered, so that since that act it will be much plainer than it was. But before I consider that act, let us see how it stands upon 3 Jac.

Now the words of that act are to this purpose, "That if the children of any subject (not being soldiers, mariners, merchants, &c.) to prevent their good education in England, shall be sent or go beyond the seas without licence, every such child or children so sent shall take no benefit by any gift, conveyance, descent, devise, or otherwise, of or to any lands, &c. and the next of kin, which shall be no popish recusant, shall have and enjoy the said lands, till such time as the person so sent shall conform; and the person so sending shall forfeit 100 l."

As to this act, I do not think it has made any alteration of the act of 1 Jac. for it seems that this act was made for another purpose, to prevent going beyond sea without licence, and this is a distinct thing from what the former act prohibited; for by this act, if they had a licence, they incurred none of the penalties; but if they went with intent to be popishly educated, they would incur all the penalties of 1 Jac. This act never intended to repeal 1 Jac. but was made to prevent their going beyond sea upon any pretence whatsoever, without licence; so that it is plain, this has not altered the other: and this seems to be an answer to Tredway's case, Hob. 73 (b) for that was founded on 3 Jac. and the offence was going without licence, and it doth not appear she went with an intent to be bred up in a popish seminary, though it appears she was afterwards a nun professed. So that case doth not at all influence this.

(b) Jenk. 297.

it

The next thing to be considered is the act of 3 Car. how far that act has either repealed, altered, explained or enlarged the act of 1 Jac. and in order to form a right judgment of this matter, all the parts of this act are to be considered, and compared with the provisions in 1 Jac.

The title of this act is, "To restrain the passing or sending of any to be popishly bred beyond the seas;" to lay a further restraint on that great inconvenience, that was found to grow every day, notwithstanding the act of 1 Jac. so that it seems to be made to prevent those inconveniences, by some provisions that were not made in the first act. And it seems that this act was made to the same intent and purpose with the first.

The next is the preamble. "Forasmuch as divers ill affected persons to the true religion established within this realm have sent their children into foreign parts, to be bred up in popery, notwithstanding the restraint thereof by 1 Jac." Therefore the first enacting clause is, that that statute shall be put in due execution: the next enacting clause extends to all the cases comprized within the act of 1 Jac. and to several that are not within that act. For 1. It extends to persons sent into any private popish family beyond sea, which was not a case within 1 Jac. that extending only to some publick college or seminary. 2. In the next place this act extends to the sending any sum of money for the maintenance and relief of any such child, so sent abroad, or under colour of charity. Then it inflicts the same penalty on the person sending and the person sent, whereas by 1 Jac. the person sending forfeits only 100 l. with this difference between the sender and sent, that the last is discharged upon conformity, but there is no provision for the sender. It is further observable that these penalties and disabilities are only upon conviction.

Now the penalties here, are all the penalties in 1 Jac. and some more: they are not capable of bringing any action or suit at law or in equity, nor to be committee of any ward, or capable of any legacy, or to bear any office; none of which were in the act of 1 Jac. And further shall lose and forfeit, (in the same words as 1 Jac.) and mentions who shall take the advantage. Those are the same penalties with respect to the person, as are in 1 Jac. but it was not said who shall take the advantage of them; therefore this act says, he shall forfeit to the crown upon conviction: so that this act seems to be made as a further and clearer provision against the mischief, to prevent which 1 Jac. was made.

Then there are two provisos in this act relating to conformity, which differ from that in 1 Jac. First, That if the person shall conform within six months after his return, he shall not incur the penalties; whereas by 1 Jac. he was to be discharged upon conformity at any time. Then the other proviso is, that upon conformity at any time he shall be restored to his land, but that does not go to the other disabilities: so this act, as it has much enforced 1 Jac. so it goes further, and has made alterations in point of conformity.

I would now make some observations, to shew that this act of 3 Car. (though it is not a repeal of 1 Jac.) yet it has enlarged, explained and enforced it, so that now the measure of the disability to be incurred by 1 Jac. is to be governed by 3 Car.

It was insisted on by the counsel for the plaintiff that this act of 3 Car. should not be construed to repeal 1 Jac. because the first clause says, that act shall be put in due execution: I do not think it is a repeal, but that clause coming immediately after the preamble, may very naturally be construed to be put in to shew, that though the act was altered for the future, yet as to all cases and offences that had been committed against that act before 3 Car. it should remain in force, which offences could not be punished by 3 Car. it having no retrospect.

In the next place I would observe, that this act of 3 Car. is far from repealing 1 Jac. for the provisions made by 3 Car. are for the better execution of 1 Jac. therefore it was natural enough for them, at the time when they were making provision for the better execution of that act, to say, it shall still be put in execution; for they were providing for several things not sufficiently provided for before, so that the putting in execution this act of 3 Car. may properly be said to be putting in execution the act of 1 Jac. for it has strengthened that law, by appointing to whom the forfeiture shall go, and in what manner it shall be taken advantage of by the crown, viz. upon conviction.

It must be admitted, that upon 1 Jac. either the forfeiture must be to the crown by implication, and then 3 Car. only expresses what was implied before. Or if it should not receive that construction, then it must be agreed, that act would be defective in most cases that would happen upon it, and the person disabled, being in possession, must hold the land, because no body could make a title against him: I say, in most cases; for in the case at bar, the counsel insisted, that the remainder-man might enter, as if the estate-tail were spent; but that will not answer all the other cases that may be upon this act, for if it were the case of an estate-tail that descended before the disability, there might be a recovery suffered of that, and the estate might be barred. In case of an inheritance in fee descended, either before or after the disability, or in case of lands purchased, or which should come in the nature of a purchase, there would be no body intitled to the lands in the life-time of the disabled person; therefore this act of 3 Car. seems to be the rule by which the disability is to be governed, and it shews what is to be the consequence of that disability, viz. a forfeiture to the crown upon conviction.

The counsel for the plaintiff seem to allow, that 3 Car. should have an effect upon some lands, and they said the forfeitures therein mentioned should extend to lands that were descended before the disability, or to lands which were purchased, and that these might be forfeited to the crown; but that it should not extend to lands that came after the disability, for that they never vested in him.

But as to this I would give this answer. I think upon the act of 1 Jac. the construction would have been to give it to the crown in all cases. If that be so, it will be a full answer, and this act of 3 Car. will be only explanatory of what the law was before. But if that were not so; if it did not go to the crown by 1 Jac. but did enure for the benefit of the remainder-man; yet it must be admitted, that this point was doubtful at that time when 3 Car. was made: it was a point that had never been settled; and if it was doubtful, and 3 Car. was made to explain those doubts; shall it be explicatory only of some things that were doubtful, and not of all that were so? especially when the words are so general, that they may extend to all cases. It seems to me, that this act must extend to all those doubts, and to explain the former act so far, as that all those penalties should go to the crown upon conviction.

Upon the whole matter: if this case depended only on the construction of 1 Jac. and there had been no other law, though that act had not expressed that the forfeiture should go to the crown, yet I conceive, the disability being inflicted for a publick crime, the forfeiture must enure to the crown; or if it did not, yet it could not intitle the lessors of the plaintiff to enter, whilst the estate-tail continues. For though there is a personal disability in Philip, yet it is but personal, and the estate-tail must continue for the benefit of the issue. If he had issue born, no body could pretend, that the plaintiff could enter; and though he has not, yet he may have issue.

In the next place the act of 1 Jac. being so doubtful in this point, who should have the benefit of this forfeiture, the act of 3 Car. being made to enforce that law, does so far explain it, that this last act is the measure by which we are to construe this disability.

Accordingly judgment was given for the defendants. And the plaintiff brought a writ of error in B. R. and the general errors assigned, Hil. 1 Geo. rot. 564. And Mich. 2 Geo. it was argued by Mr. Fortescue for the plaintiff, and Serjeant Pengelly for the defendant. [328]

Fortescue. In this case I shall make three points: 1. Whether the recovery suffered by the last Lord Charles be void, as suffered by one who was out of possession, and consequently could not make a good tenant to the præcipe? 2. Whether Philip's being alive, who is heir male of the body of Thomas first Lord Gerard, be such an impediment, as that the reversion cannot be executed in the lessor of the plaintiff as right heir of the first Lord Charles. 3. Whether the statute of 3 Jac. or 3 Car. have altered or repealed the act of 1 Jac. c. 4.

The first point, whether the recovery be good or not, depends solely on the words of 1 Jac. "That every person so passing, &c. shall in respect of him or herself only, and not to or in respect of any of his heirs or posterity, be disabled and made incapable to inherit, purchase, take, have or enjoy any, &c." Therefore Charles's being out of the realm was a disability in him, so as he could not take the estate when it should have vested in him. By this clause, omitting the words in (in respect of himself and not in respect of his heir) the act intended that the offender should take nothing, either for the interest of himself, or any other; and by a subsequent clause all estates and conveyances made to such person or to his use are void.

There is a difference between a disability by act of parliament, and a disability at common law; yet considering this as a disability at common law, the law never throws any interest upon a person disabled. If an alien purchases lands to him and his heirs, albeit he can have no heir; yet he is of capacity to take, but not to hold, for upon office found, the King shall have it. If a man be attainted, he is of capacity to purchase, but not to hold; for he can only purchase for the benefit of the King; he can neither have an heir nor be heir to any man, for by the attainder his blood is corrupted. 1 Inst. 2. b. 8. a. 1 Vent. 417. Now though an alien may take by purchase by his own contract that which he cannot retain against the King, yet the law will never enable him by act of his own to transfer by hereditary descent, scient, or take by act in law, for the law, que nihil frustra, will not give an inheritance to one who cannot keep it.

If the common law be so, that an estate will not vest in a person disabled, the case at bar is much stronger, for this incapacity is by act of Parliament. The words are, shall be disabled and made incapable, so that he is disabled to take, either for his own or the crown's benefit. The clause as to the heir can be only declaratory and explanative, for words affirmative implying a new law, infer a negative, for the words precedent were full before, he shall not take, that is, he himself in his own person shall not take, but his heir shall. The reason of inserting the clause therefore was only to satisfy the scruples of the ignorant as to the difference between a temporary and a total disability, as in the case of attainder, though the difference may be well known amongst lawyers. Where one is attainted of treason or felony, that is an absolute and perpetual disability by corruption of blood, for any of his posterity to claim as heir to him, or any ancestor paramount; but when one is disabled by act of parliament, to claim any estate for life, that is a personal disability for his life only, and his heir after his death may claim as heir to him or any ancestor paramount. 11 Co. Lord Delaware's case. Where Thomas Delaware petitioned the Queen for his place in the House of Lords, which his great grandfather had, though William his father was disabled by parliament, 3 E. 6: during his life, to claim any dignity: and it was objected, that his father being disabled by act of parliament, the petitioner could not convey the descent to himself through the disabled person; but the Judges and House of Lords were of opinion, that he might claim by him, this being only a personal temporary disability, which differs from an attainder.

Though nothing vested in the ancestor, yet the heir make take. The clause not in respect of his heirs can signify nothing, the disability extending only to the recusant himself: it is not during life, but only till conformity. This case being a limitation in tail, will be different from what it would be if a fee was limited, for the estate-tail is by the statute de donis, and the issue in tail cannot be disabled, but must take by the statute. Therefore if tenant in tail is attainted of felony, and has issue and dies, although by the attainder the blood is corrupted, so that nothing can descend to his heir; yet the issue in tail, as to those lands, is not barred, because he is inheritable by force of the statute de donis, but the wife of tenant in tail shall lose her dower, because she claims by the common law. Lit. § 746, 747. In this case tenant in tail himself may have a right to take, that so it may descend, to enable the issue in tail to inherit, but he does not take such an estate as that he shall have power to alien. A feoffment by by tenant in tail gives away all the estate tenant in tail had, as concerning himself, or any benefit that he may receive; but for the sake of his issue, and him in reversion, there still remains in him a right of that intail by force of the statute. And by that right the tail may be recovered again, as by the root which is still alive, and the heir shall bring a formedon in descender, and lay in his count, descendit jus from that ancestor to him as heir per formam doni. Hob. 335, 337. Raym. 354. 2 Roll. Rep. 418. For the statute de donis says, that notwithstanding an alienation by tenant in tail, the land shall remain to his issue, and so says our statute.

It may be objected that it is impossible for the heir to take unless the ancestor was seised, and therefore the estate must vest in the recusant. To this I answer, That at common law it is not necessary, that the ancestor be seised, to enable the heir to claim by descent; for the rule of law is, that where the ancestor might have taken the estate and been seised, there the heir shall inherit. 1 Co. Shelley's case. Nay in some cases the heir shall take by descent, although the ancestor never was or could be seised of that estate; as if lands be given to A. and B. for their joint lives, remainder to the right heirs of him that dies first; A. dies; his heir shall take by descent, and yet the remainder never vested during the life of A. Co. Litt. 378. b.

But even admitting that this act of parliament cannot have this construction, and at the same time agree with all the strict rules of the common law; yet when by an act of parliament estates are limited for particular purposes, the validity of those limitations must not be measured by those strict rules, for it is supposed the act was made purely for a repeal of those rules or maxims, and the mechanick rules of reason shall not obstruct the intent of the act, for the statute over-rules all private rules of law. 3 Co. 64. b. 6 Co. 40. b. 8 Co. Prince's case. An estate-tail may be barred and cease for a time, and afterwards revive again: it may cease as to one person, and be in force as to another. 9 Co. Beaumont's case. J. B. and his wife were tenants in special tail, he alone levied a fine, and died leaving issue; during the life of J. B. the intail was barred, and nothing was left but a possibility to the feme; for if she survives, she shall be tenant in tail as before, for the whole tail revives and is restored to her.

Cro. Eliz. 379.
1 Co. 87. b.

An estate-tail may in itself be perfect and alienable, and yet may not descend, though there be issue in tail. Archer's case; and Hob. 258. An estate-tail may descend, and yet it cannot be aliened. 3 Co. 50. It may be full, and yet cannot be aliened or descend, as in Beaumont's case, it could not descend to the issue from the mother though she had the whole estate-tail in her, because the issue was barred before by the fine levied by the father; and it could not be aliened by the wife, because it was aliened before by the husband. Hob. 257. Though those points are singularities, and contrary to the known rules of law, yet they being introduced by statute, must not be carried to the rules of law as to their standard. The rules of law as to inheritances are arbitrary, and do not depend on the rules of reason; and that is the reason why the rules of law vary in different countries.

Objection. That the estate must vest in the offender, because the proviso says, that the offender conforming shall be freed and discharged of all and every such disability and incapacity; and there being no clause of restitution, the party conforming would have no benefit of his conformity, unless the estate always remained in him.

Answer. This objection is capable of the former answer; that an act of parliament enacting such things, they ought not to be impugned, because they are inconsistent with the rules of law. But this admits of another answer, that it was not the meaning of the act, that the party conforming should be restored to that estate which was once vested in the next protestant; but the meaning of it was, that he should from thenceforwards be able to take any other estate, not to have that estate which was once forfeited, for he could not take it again by purchase or descent. Such a construction as is contended for on the other side, instead of weakening, would very much encourage popery, and give recusants an opportunity to play the hypocrite; for if by his conformity the estate should be re-vested in him, he would conform outwardly, go to church, receive the sacrament, and be obedient to the laws for awhile, and then get a dispensation and re-enter, and so toties quoties, which would be to evade the act.

The preventing our youth from being sent into popish seminaries, to suck the poison of their pernicious principles, and stir up the subjects to rebellions and tumults, is the greatest bulwark to the protestant religion. The taking the estate by the ancestor for the benefit of the heir, as is contended for is in short giving the recusant a power by a recovery to bar his heir, and dispose of it as he pleases, which overthrows that clause, the intention of which was to preserve the estate for the heir.

2. The life of Philip is objected to be an impediment, that prevents the execution of the reversion, for whilst he lives say they, they, the estate-tail continues. But I give the objection this answer. That Philip can take nothing, no more than Charles did: the rule of law is, that where any limitation is to a person not in esse at the time the estate ought to vest, the estate must go over to the next in remainder. Here the limitation is to Philip and the heirs male of his body, but when that limitation ought to take effect, he is incapacitated to take, and then the limitation over to the lessors must take effect immediately. Cro. El. 422. Devise to R. in tail, and after his decease without issue to Edward his son in tail; R. dies leaving issue, living the testator, and there it was held, that Edward should have the estate presently, and not wait till the death of R.'s issue. 2 Roll. Abr. 415. C. 6. Devise to one for life who is a monk, remainder over is good. If a man dies seised leaving issue only an alien, the land shall escheat immediately, and not come to the crown. If a man has issue two sons, and the eldest be an alien, the law takes no notice of him, and therefore as he shall not take by descent himself so he shall not impede the descent to his younger brother, on supposition that he may have issue a natural born subject.

In respect to the incapacity, an alien resembles a person attainted, with this difference, that a person attainted is one that the law takes notice of, and therefore if he be an eldest son and survives his father, he shall hinder the descent to the younger son, though he cannot take himself. 2 Vent. Collingwood v. Pace. An alien, or person attaint, may purchase; because it is their own act, which the law cannot hinder; but it disables them from taking by descent, and impedes the descent from them, because they must there come in by act of law, and the law will not trust them with an estate.

If it be contended that during the life of the offender the estate shall be in abeyance: I answer, There is no cause to frame abeyances needlessly, which the law loves not, nor admits, but in case of necessity. If in this case the land should be construed to be in abeyance, then it must be framed against the benefit of the church, whereas it ought to be only for its benefit. Hob. 338.

3. Whether the statute of 1 Jac. be still in force. And 1. To consider it with respect to 3 Jac. this last relates to a quite different matter, for though both are levelled at popery, yet the offences are distinct. In 1 Jac. the intention of a foreign education is the offence, so that a man may offend against that statute, and be innocent as to 3 Jac. Again; a protestant may offend against 3 Jac. papists only against 1 Jac. By 3 Jac. the offender is capable of taking the legal estate, and loses only the profits till conformity, whereas the offender against 1 Jac. takes neither the issue from the mother though she had the whole estate-tail in her, because the issue was barred before by the fine levied by the father; and it could not be aliened by the wife, because it was aliened before by the husband. Hob. 257. Though those points are singularities, and contrary to the known rules of law, yet they being introduced by statute, must not be carried to the rules of law as to their standard. 3. Whether the statute of 1 Jac. be still in force. And 1. To consider it with respect to 3 Jac. this last relates to a quite different matter, for though both are levelled at popery, yet the offences are distinct. In 1 Jac. the intention of a foreign education is the offence, so that a man may offend against that statute, and be innocent as to 3 Jac. Again; a protestant may offend against 3 Jac. papists only against 1 Jac. By 3 Jac. the offender is capable of taking the legal estate, and loses only the profits till conformity, whereas the offender against 1 Jac. takes neither the estate nor the profits. The words of the 3 Jac. are, that he shall take no benefit by descent, not that he should not take by descent; and then the statute shews the meaning, by giving the profits during his non-conformity to the next protestant of kin. Hob. 73.

2. And as 1 Jac. stands unimpeached by 3 Jac. so does it likewise by 3 Car. The first business of this latter statute is, to enact 1 Jac. to be put in due execution, which could not be, if the law-makers had intended it for a repeal. Besides the effects of these statutes are different, for by 1 Jac. the recusant is disabled to take the lands which were not vested, but by 3 Car. he only forfeits what is vested; for the words are shall forfeit all his lands; so that these two statutes are very consistent, for 3 Car. was made as a farther provision to 1 Jac. for that only prevented the vesting the lands after his recusancy, so that a person in possession before his offence could feel no effect of 1 Jac. and therefore to adapt the punishment to both cases the statute of 3 Car. came and took away the estate vested. But as in the case at bar the disability was attached in Charles and Philip before the descent of the estate on either of them, therefore the statute of 1 Jac. must be the measure by which this case must be ruled; and then it follows, that no estate ever vested in Charles, and he having no possession the recoveries are void, and Philip being disabled, the land must go over to the lessor of the plaintiff as right heir of the first Lord Charles; the consequence of which is, that she had a good title to make the lease, and therefore the judgment must be reversed, and judgment given in this court for the plaintiff.

Pengelly Serjeant contra, argued, That under 1 Jac. the estate-tail vested in Charles, and would have descended to his issue, if he had had any. That the subsequent statutes have altered that penalty, and given the forfeiture to the crown upon conviction. That in this case there was no conviction. The consequence of which is, that the estate continued in him all his life, and the recoveries were well suffered by him.

But if these points should not be with me, yet under the first settlement there is an estate-tail subsisting for Philip and his issue, and therefore the reversioner cannot enter till the whole estate-tail is spent.

1. Then, the legal estate vested in the recusant, for the construction of the statute ought to be, that only the perception of the profits of the estate of the recusant, or at most some uncertain interest determinable on his conformity, ought to vest in the crown; so that the estate-tail vested in Charles, and would have descended to his issue male if he had left any, and had not barred them them by the recovery. The words in 1 Jac. that he shall be disabled to take in respect of himself, and not in respect of his heir, were not inserted in the statute by way of proviso, but are incorporated into the body of the act, to preserve the estate to the heir; lest the heir, who is innocent of the crime, should be involved in the punishment designed only for the offender. The act did not intend to prevent the inheritance from vesting in the recusant, and consequently prevent the descent to the issue per formam doni, for there is no clause to carry the estate to any other person, which provision is in all other statutes: as 6 R. 2. c. 6. which disables ravishers and women ravished consenting after the rape, to have any inheritance or dower, appoints the next of blood to whom the inheritance ought to descend, revert, or remain, to enter incontinently. So the 11 H. 7. c. 20. appoints him in remainder or reversion (as the case is) to enter on discontinuances by women. But this act had no view or design to abridge the estate given by the donor, or to hasten the interest of the reversioner; for the penalty was inflicted, not to affect the estate or inheritance of the recusant, but his person only; the heir was not intended to suffer any punishment, but on the contrary the act designed to preserve the right and estate of the heir. The clause that all conveyances shall be void, can extend only to conveyances made to the recusant himself, or to his use, and not to conveyances made forty years before (that is to say) it can never affect the settlement of the first Lord Charles, ancestor to this Charles, for Charles and Philip were not such persons against whom the statute ordained this punishment, when this conveyance was made.

This act of 1 Jac. having then only disabled the recusant as to a small interest in the land; it follows, that the residue of the estate must remain in him. If the heir is to take any thing by this act, the estate must vest and continue in the ancestor during life; for the heir, whether he be a general or special heir, must derive his title by the rules of law under the settlement of the first Charles.

There is no difference, when the estate is vested, and when it is to vest; for it will be agreed, that by this statute lands vested are not to be divested from the recusant. Our objection is, that if there is a total disability in the ancestor himself, none can claim as heir to him, and that is proved by the case of Collingwood v. Pace, Ante 333 cited by the other side, and then this disability must destroy the settlement, and stop the blood; for if there be grandfather, father and son, and the father is attainted, though neither the blood of the grandfather, or son be corrupted between them, yet the corruption of the father's blood draws a consequential impediment upon the son to inherit to the grandfather, because the father's corruption of blood obstructs the transmission of the hereditary descent between the grandfather and the son. If tenant in tail is attainted of treason or felony, and at the time of his attainder had no issue, and after the obtaining his pardon has issue, such issue is inheritable to him; but if he had issue before the pardon, the descent to such son is hindered, for the blood between him and his father is corrupted, which case contradicts Lit. § 76, 77. for though the eldest son born before the pardon cannot take, nor the youngest son living the eldest, yet there is no cessor of the estate-tail upon supposition that the eldest will die without issue, and then the youngest son will inherit. In our case, if there is any right of the estate-tail remaining in the recusant, the reversion shall not be executed. In the case of Lord Delaware the disability was imposed for life, and the court held that one might claim as heir from a person disabled only by act of parliament.

This construction which I am contending for of the intent of the clause in imposing only the forfeiture of some uncertain interest till conformity, will be supported by the proviso for conformity. By that clause the party conforming "shall, for and" "during such time as he shall continue in such conformity, be" "freed and discharged of all and every such disability and incapacity." Now it would be strange, that the party complying with the act, in conforming to these laws, should not have the benefit of such conformity, that is, have the estate again; which he could not, if the estate was once vested in another, there being no clause of restitution. The intent therefore of the act was, that the party conforming should be in the same condition as before his offence, that is, receive the profits of his estate to his own use. An act of Parliament may indeed make an estate cease and rise again, as in The Prince's case, but then the words of that act must be express.

It may be demanded, to whom did the statute intend to give the profits of the estate? I answer, that forfeitures given by statute, either for non-feasances or mis-feasances, for public offences, fines and penalties for offences at common law against the public good (no person being appointed to take the benefit of them) shall go to the King, as pater patriæ, the head of the government and fountain of justice, who is concerned to see the laws executed. But when the offence is private, and affects only particular persons; there it is but just and reasonable the sufferer should have the forfeiture or fine for a compensation. In the case at bar the offence is of a public nature, against the common good of the kingdom, and consequently the forfeiture accrues to the crown, according to the case of Woodward v. Fox, 2 Vent, 267.

267. 3 Lev. 289. In 2 Inst. 650. on 2 Ed. 6. c. 13. the forfeiture of the treble value for not setting forth tithes was therefore by express words given to the owner of the tithes, and so is Moor 238. 1 Roll. Rep. 90. 11 Co. 60. 2 And. 127. As to Beaumont's case, the fine by the baron, of the lands whereof the baron and feme were seised of a special tail, was no cesser of the estate-tail of the feme, and in that case it is not pretended that the estate-tail shall go over to the reversioner, whilst there remained issue of tenant in tail so levying the fine.

This construction, that the forfeiture shall go to the crown, prevents all exceptions; but the other construction, that no estate vests, prevents the penalty designed by the statute; for if no estate vests, the crown cannot have the profits. The act intended no difference, whether the recusant had the estate before or after the offence, nor of the quality of the estate, whether it was fee or tail; but in reason, of the two the estate-tail ought to be more favourably construed to be preserved, the statute de donis taking so much care to preserve the estate for the issue against the alienation of the tenant in tail; and therefore by that statute the issue was not barred, though the father was attainted of treason, though it is since altered by the 26 H. 8. c. 13.

Besides, in this statute there are express words preserving the estate to the heir. It is more beneficial to the subject, that the crown should have the profits, than the next of kin, who may perhaps employ them under-hand to the use of the recusant in all or in part; which bargain may be easily made, considering that he is but tenant at will to the offender, who whenever he pleases may conform, and take the land, and recover the mesne profits.

But admitting that no estate vests by 1 Jac. yet the recovery is good; for the right of the entail continued in Charles. 3 Co. 6. Baron and feme seised to them and the heirs male of the body of the husband, remainder to B. in tail: the baron alone levied a fine and suffered a recovery, in which he only was vouched, and not the wife, who had a joint estate for life with him; yet it was adjudged, that the baron coming in as vouchee, came in in privity of the estate-tail, and not of any other estate, and so the recovery is good,

If the estate did not vest in Charles, then he is a disseisor, and that way the recovery is good. 3 Co. 59. Lincoln Coll. case. If there be tenant for life, remainder in tail, and he in remainder enters upon the lessee, and disseises him, and after suffers a common recovery; that shall bind the tail, for the disseisin does not divest [337] de vests the tail, but he is a disseisor of the estate for life only, and as to himself he is seised by force of the tail. 2 Roll. Abr. 395. C. 3. 6 Co. 32. And so he concluded this point, that the estate vests in the recusant, and only a perception of the profits is forfeited to the King: or if no estate vested, yet the recovery is good, as suffered by a disseisor, and consequently quacunque via data the lessor of the plaintiff can have no title.

2. But admitting that no estate vests in the offender, and that the recoveries are void, yet the plaintiff cannot recover: for if Philip cannot take himself, yet there is no cesser of the estate-tail, whereby the reversion can be executed in the plaintiff, till the death of Philip without issue, 1 Inst. 28. as long as any right of the estate-tail remains, the law looks for issue; and though the tenant in tail be 100 years old, yet the law sees no impossibility of his having issue; and Litt. § 34. is, that none can be tenant in tail apres, &c. but one of the donees in special tail, for a donee in tail general cannot be said to be tenant in tail after possibility, because always during his life there is a possibility that he may have issue inheritable to the same intail.

It is admitted, that if Philip has issue at any time, the issue may inherit; and then the estate must continue in Philip, because the law expects his having issue. Tenant in tail may suffer a recovery and bar his issue, because he has the whole inheritance in him. As to 2 Roll. Abr. 415. where a devise to a monk is held void, and the remainder good: in the same book, pl. 4. it said, that if a lease be made to a man who is not capable (as a monk) for life, the remainder over is not good: so that in a devise, because the intent of the devisor is regarded, it is good; but not in a conveyance at common law. As to the case, Cro. El. 422. there the only question was, whether, if the devisee in tail die in the life of the devisor, his heir in tail could inherit, and it was held that a subsequent limitation to take effect on the death of such a person without issue should take effect immediately, because there was no possibility for the issue to inherit. Plow. 557. b. 29 Aff. 61. Tenant in tail was bound in a statute merchant, and had issue; the issue was outlawed of felony, but pardoned in the life of the father; the father died, the issue entered, the conusee sued execution of the land, and the heir brought an assize; and it was held that the outlawry for felony so disabled him in his blood, that he could not take by descent the lands in tail, any more than lands in fee, notwithstanding the charter of pardon, which could not restore his blood to its former purity; and when the father died the land could not revert to the donor, because the donee had issue, though that issue was disabled, and upon the father's death the freehold was in no person, person, but in nubibus, and because every man in the world had equal title, the land conceditur occupanti. Bro. Descent, pl. 23. As to 9 Co. 140. a. that there may be an estate-tail which may not descend to the issue; the reason is, because there is a total disability by the fine of the baron, whereas the disability in the case at bar is only temporary, and is removed upon conformity. 4 Leon. 84. Gouldf. 102. An alien born purchased lands in tail, remainder to a stranger in fee, and suffered a recovery; and it was held, that the remainder was barred, for before office found he was a good tenant to the præcipe, and that the alien had a good fee-simple; and though in this case it was impossible for him to have issue inheritable to the intail, yet the recovery barred the remainder. If there is in the eye of the law any person that by possibility may be inheritable to the tail, the reversioner shall never enter, till the first limitation is fully at an end. Till 1705, Joseph the younger brother of Charles and Philip was alive, and a protestant; and it is not pretended that he could enter, though he was issue in tail; and then if the life of Philip prevented his entry, consequently it must prevent the entry of the reversioner. Though Philip was a recusant, yet no claim ever came to him, therefore no disability could come to him in respect of the lands, but only in respect of his person: if the reversioner should enter, there would be no remedy for the issue born after.

The disabilities are pardoned by 2 W. & M. c. 10. which is a general law, and therefore to be taken notice of by the court, though not found.

3. This act of 1 Jac. is altered by 3 Jac. which extends to all the offences in 1 Jac. Hob. 73. seems to admit, that the punishment ought to be according to 3 Jac. for that he that enters on the land of the recusant is only tenant at will. 1 Keb. 263. The court was of opinion, that 3 Jac. meant no other cause but what 1 Jac. intended, to prevent the education, and that the King hath not an interest in the land of a recusant, as by 3 Eliz. c. 3. of fugitives, only a right to a perception of the profits, which by the return and conformity of the offender immediately vanishes.

4. The statute of 3 Car. has also made several alterations in 1 Jac. for it alters not only the disposition of the estate, but the forfeiture; for by this statute there must be a conviction, and then Charles not being convicted can forfeit nothing; and the opinion of C. B. was that this statute must be the rule. By this the King is to have the land, and by 3 Jac. the next of kin, which is inconsistent. It is not necessary to cite all the cases where it has been held, that a subsequent statute being contrary to, to, or inconsistent with a former, is an implicit repeal of that former law. 11 Co. 61. 1 Jones 22. It is agreed, that 3 Car. extends to more offences than 1 or 3 Jac. If it had extended to fewer, there might be some colour to say, that the other statutes are necessary; but if both 3 Car. and 1 Jac. inflicting different punishments for the same offence, should be in force; the consequence would be, that the offender would be punished twice for the same offence, contrary to the rule, nemo bis puniri debet pro uno et eodem delicto.

Though after the preamble of 3 Car. it is enacted, that 1 Jac. shall be put in execution; yet the intent of that could only be to continue 1 Jac. for the punishment of offences committed between that and 3 Car. for without this those offences would remain unpunished, 1 Jac. being implicitly repealed. If 1 Jac. continues, the punishment designed by 3 Car. though the heavier, will be avoided; for if 1 Jac. prevents any estate from vesting in the recusant, nothing can be forfeited by 3 Car. for he cannot forfeit what he has not, and he can have nothing by reason of 1 Jac. But if 3 Car. is a repeal of 1 Jac. (as I apprehend it plainly appears to be) it follows, that Charles being never convicted, had a good estate to make a tenant to the præcipe, and being himself tenant in tail under the settlement of the first Lord Charles, has by coming in as vouchee in a recovery barred the remainder to the right heirs of Lord Charles, under which the Dutchess claims. But if that recovery be not good, yet the life of Philip who may possibly conform, or leave issue capable, will stand in her way; so that taking it either way, the judgment given below for the defendants was well given, and ought to be affirmed.

Fortescue replied. 3 Car. can be no repeal of 1 Jac. for though the penalties are different, yet they are consistent. The difference between a forfeiture and a disability is, that a forfeiture can be applied only to what the offender has, but a disability cannot be forfeited. The books are full of cases, wherein it has been held, that a possibility cannot be forfeited, or a right. A disability is an incapacity in the offender to take any estate. Nil dat quod non habet. This case is like that of a monk, who on his de-raignment may fetch back the estate wheresoever it is gone; and so may Philip on conformity, or his issue inheritable, enter upon the reversioner in the case at bar.

Parker C. J. This seems to be a matter of great difficulty: two different constructions of the act of Parliament have been set up, viz. for the plaintiff, That the disability is total in the recusant, and no right at all of the estate-tail shall vest in him, but it shall go over to the next issue in tail capable; if there be none, to the reversioner; because otherwise the recusant would be able to defeat the intent of the act, which was to preserve the estate to the heir or posterity. That for the defendant is, that the compleat legal estate shall vest in the ancestor, because otherwise they who must claim through him could not take by descent, so that the intention of a benefit to the heir would be defeated that way.
but

Now both these, though they have a colour of being for the heir's benefit, yet tend to defeat it, and will not answer the intention. If the first should prevail, that nothing vested in Charles or Philip, but the estate passes over to the reversioner; then the estate-tail must be totally determined. Then if Philip should have issue capable (of which there is still a possibility) they will be barred, for if the estate-tail be once determined, nothing can set it up again. Indeed where a man takes an estate, and afterwards a more worthy heir comes in esse, who may take the same estate, it shall devert out of the former and vest in the latter: as if tenant in tail has two sons, and dies, the eldest enters and dies leaving his wife privement-enseint with a son; the estate presently vests in the younger brother, but as soon as the posthumous son is born, he shall have it; but this is, because both come in under the same estate-tail, and there is no determination of it: but he in reversion can never enter, so long as any right of the tail which he has granted out remains.

The other construction, by making the compleat legal estate vest in the recusant ancestor, enables him to alien: so that though the act says the ancestor shall be disabled to take for and in respect of himself, and not for and in respect of his heirs or posterity; this construction enables him to take for his own benefit, contrary to the benefit of the heir. Consider therefore, whether there be not a middle way between these two, which may better answer the intention, (viz.) that the right of the tail shall vest in the ancestor, so far as is necessary to convey the descent to the issue, but not to enable him to alien: then indeed the defendants will have no title, but how can the lessor of the plaintiff enter in Philip's life-time?

The act of 3 Jac. seems to be quite out of the case, being made for another purpose.

The act of 3 Car. does concern the same persons and crimes (amongst others) with that of 1 Jac. but it is not therefore a repeal of it. It is objected, that it inflicts inconsistent penalties; but but why are they inconsistent, since one may have a proper operation upon some estates, and the other upon others?

I do not see what advantage can be taken of the act of general pardon; for though it is a publick act, yet he that will take the benefit of it must shew how he is intitled to it, and that he is not within any of the exceptions; so it should have been found.

Pratt J. The clause which says, that all estates, terms, and other interests, made to such recusant, shall be void; does not indeed concern descents, but purchases: but consider whether an argument may not be drawn from thence, that the intent of the act was, that they should take no right, no interest at all.

Paf. 2 Geo. it was argued a second time by Serjeant Hooper for the plaintiff and Mr. Lutwyche for the defendant.

Second argument.

Hooper Serjeant. The disability by 1 Jac. happened before any thing descended either to Charles or Philip: it might have descended to Joseph, but he being dead without issue, it reverts to the donor. The statute of 1 Jac. induces such a temporary disability, as prevents any thing from vesting. Charles and Philip were no lords, though the verdict calls them so; for the statute disables them to take any hereditament, as a dignity is.

As to the point, whether this act be repealed or not, it seems strange to imagine, that an act made with such deliberation should in two years after be repealed; especially if we consider what happened within those two years; the powder plot was then just discovered, and immediately an act passed for a publick thanksgiving for that deliverance; the conspirators are attainted, and then at the same parliament is this statute made, which is set up for a repeal of 1 Jac. the great bulwark against popery. These have different operations, and may well stand together; the one prevents estates from vesting, and the other meddles with estates vested.

But supposing for argument sake, that which otherwise I can never admit, that 3 Jac. does amount to a repeal of 1 Jac. yet surely then the statute of 3 Car. has revived it; for it enacts it to be put in due execution, which plainly shews it was not thought to be repealed by 3 Jac. or intended to be repealed by 3 Car. and it is to be in execution as well against crimes to be, as those actually committed.

The common recovery can have no effect, being suffered by one who had no estate in him at the time, and therefore could not not by deed inrolled make a tenant to the precipe. By deed inrolled (that is, by bargain and sale) nothing passes but what may lawfully pass, for it does not work a disseisin or any tort. The act 1 Jac. is express, that such person shall be disabled to take; by the recovery he may extinguish his right, but he cannot alien it, he has jus extinguendi, but not jus alienandi. On 1 Jac. the crown can have no right, because nothing vests in the party; and therefore if the father is seised of lands in fee, and the son is attainted of treason in the life of the father, and the father dies; the land shall escheat, for that the father died without heir, and the crown cannot have the land as a forfeiture, because the son never had it to forfeit. 1 Inst. 13. a. Here nothing is vested in Charles or Philip, and so consequently they can forfeit nothing. They have scintilla juris to preserve the estate-tail, but not to forfeit or destroy it. The crown can never take but by record, either judicial or ministerial, as in the case of an escheat the crown takes by office, which is a ministerial record.

I come now to the chief point, whether the dutchess can enter, living Philip? At common law before the statute de donis all estates were fee-simple; and the statute was calculated more for the benefit of him in reversion, than the tenant in tail or his issue, for now the reversion is certain, and the donor may limit as many remainders as he pleases, which he could not do before, for there could not be one fee-simple depending upon another; and the reversion is now fixed, which before was but a possibility, for now the tenant in tail can neither bar nor clog the reversion, except by a recovery which is not mentioned in the statute de donis; since which there is no one statute that gives the tenant in tail power to charge the reversion. As to the case now before us, the statute of 1 Jac. has repealed the statute de donis, for by that Charles and Philip are made inheritable as issue in tail, but now by this latter statute they are disabled.

At common law before the statute de donis a formedon in reverter did lie on failure of issue; and in our case if there are no issue inheritable to the estate, it must revert to us, who are the right heirs of the donor. If tenant in tail dies leaving his wife priveement enfeint with a son, the estate-tail must revert to the donor, subject to the entry of a posthumous son. (C. J. Have you any case to that?) Hooper, I did not look for any, thinking it constant experience.

This estate must go to the reversioner, otherwise where can it go? The act of 1 Jac. takes away and abrogates not only all rules and maxims of law, but also all acts of parliament prior to it, that are contrary and repugnant. 8 Co. Prince's case. That was a settlement settlement of part of the duchy of Cornwall by act of parliament, there the estate (as it has lately done till King George came to the crown) when there was no Prince of Wales, lay dormant for many years; and when there was a Prince of Wales, rose again. In our case, if Philip should have a son, he might enter; but in the mean time the estate must go over to the reversioner. Some persons are capable to take by purchase, that are not capable to take by descent; but no case proves that one may take by descent, that is disabled to take by purchase.

Lutwyche contra. As to the first point, whether any thing vests in Charles or Philip: if the statute had intended to induce a total disability, there would not have been the saving clause as to the heir; which implies, that the ancestor shall be capable to take for the benefit of the heir. The heir is not to be a purchaser, but the ancestor himself, and consequently it must vest in the ancestor, for otherwise it cannot descend to the heir; be the inheritance either fee-simple or fee-tail, the ancestor must inherit, to transmit it to posterity. If no estate vests, and it be an inheritance, where can the freehold be during the life of the offender? It cannot be in abeyance, and therefore the right of the intail shall vest in the recusant, but the crown shall have the profits.

Had this statute intended a total disability, it would have provided to whom the land should have descended in the mean time, as in 6 R. 2. c. 6. 11 H. 7. c. 20. and 4 & 5 P. & M. c. 8. On 6 R. 2. the heir is a purchaser, but on the 11 H. 7. he takes by descent. 3 Co. 37.

As to the Prince's case, that was by act of parliament; and resolved that it would not be good at common law.

It is objected, that if the offender has the estate, he may destroy it, and bar the issue for whom the statute is so careful. To this I answer: that if by this statute the estate tail vests in him, a common recovery is as incident to his estate, as alienation is to a tenant in fee-simple. My Lord Coke, 1 Inst. 223. b. enumerating the several incidents to such an estate says, That the tenant in tail may suffer a common recovery, and therefore, says he, if a gift in tail is made, with condition restrictive of such an incident, the condition is repugnant and void, for such a tenant has a right to turn the fee tail into a fee-simple for the benefit of his heirs, by barring strangers. C. J. Can he make a deed for a tenant to the præcipe without an alienation? Lutwyche, Such an alienation only with intent to suffer a recovery, may not amount to such an alienation as is prohibited within the intent of this statute. 4 Leon. 84. Land was given to an alien in tail, remainder to to another in fee: the alien suffered a recovery, and died without issue; it was urged that the recovery was void, for that the alien was not tenant of the freehold at the time of the recovery suffered; but the whole court held that the recovery was good to bar the remainder.

Another question is, whether the reversion can be executed living Philip? 1 Inst. 28. n. is, that if lands be given to a man and his wife and to the heirs of their two bodies, and they live till each be 100 years old, yet do they continue tenants in tail, for the law sees no impossibility of their having issue. In our case, if Philip has any issue, he may inherit; but if the reversioner once enters, he must enjoy it for ever, and then what becomes of the saving clause as to the heir?

C. J. Is there any case which proves that the estate shall not be divested out of the reversioner?

Lutwiche. I could not find any. The issue in tail cannot enter in the life of the offender, and a fortiori the reversioner shall not.

He insisted on 1 Jac. being repealed, and the disability pardoned, as in the former argument.

Parker C. J. It has been insisted on for the defendant, that the clause in 1 Jac. as to the heir makes it necessary; that the legal estate should vest in the ancestor, in order that the heir may convey a title through him; but it is considerable, whether the effect of that clause be not rather, that whatever difficulty would regularly arise to the heir from the ancestor's not being seised, that shall not be any objection to the heir in this case. Not that the ancestor shall be seised for his sake, but his want of seisin shall not prejudice the heir. The heir shall take the same advantage, as if the ancestor had been seised.

It is contended that the disabled person shall take by purchase in respect of his heir; but that is a notion I cannot understand; how he that cannot take for himself, can take by purchase in respect of his heir. The words in respect of himself and not in respect of his heir must be applied, secundum subjectam materiam; i. e. as the subject matter of the clause will bear. The disabled person is made incapable to take a personal estate by the same clause, but it is plain that other intervening clause cannot be applied to that, and so it seems to be in the case of purchases. No authority has been cited of either side, and it seems a very considerable question, whether in the case of tenant in tail with a remainder over, the remainder being once vested in default of issue in tail, can be divested by reason of issue after born. Suppose the case of a fee-simple, the land escheats for want of heirs; shall it divest out of the lord, and vest in a posthumous heir?

[345] The statute of 3 Jac. is entirely out of the case. 3 Car. inflicts a penalty of another kind, viz. a forfeiture of the estate vested: but if 1 Jac. be taken to be entirely repealed, then 3 Car. will not provide for all the cases that may happen; as if lands descend after the disability attached. Therefore the most natural construction seems to be, that the first clause of 3 Car. which enacts that 1 Jac. shall be put in execution, leaves 1 Jac. its full force and effect, as to all cases not afterwards provided for by 3 Car.

The difficulty as to the Dutchess's taking during the life of Philip seems the most considerable; for suppose the other part of it as to the divesting the estate out of the remainder-man were out of the case, how can she enter, while there is any issue in tail in being? Suppose there had been a disseisin, and she was to bring a formedon; must not she lay it, that all the issue male of the body of Thomas are dead?

It is said that issue must be issue inheritable, which Philip is not; but he may inherit upon conformity, and issue inheritable sub modo, sub conditione, is still issue inheritable.

Pratt Justice. That objection indeed has the greatest weight; for as to the clause, for and in respect of, &c. that can have no other construction, but that the ancestor shall be disabled, but that disability shall not hurt the heir.

Disability may be either total or temporary. Total, such as that of an alien, would have prejudiced the heir. This is a temporary one, and therefore though the saving for the heir had been left out, I should have thought it must have had the same construction, as it will now have; and regularly the disability should not have prejudiced the heir in all cases. But such temporary disabilities may in some cases by intendment be prejudicial to the heir, as in case lands in tail descend after the disability attached, and no issue in tail is then in esse, they must go over in that case. And so it seems to me it will be now, notwithstanding the addition of that clause; if there be an heir in tail capable of taking at the time of the descent, that he shall have the land; but if not, he will be prejudiced by that accident, and it must go over: at least till some person comes in esse capable of taking the estate-tail, tail, the remainder-man shall enter, for the freehold cannot be in abeyance.

Hilary 3 Geo. it was argued a third time by Mr. Reeve for the Third argument plaintiff, and Serjeant Chefbyr for the defendant.

Mr. Reeve. The title of the Dutcheſs depends on three acts of parliament, 1 and 3 Jac. and 3 Car. which were all made to prevent the growth of popery. And he argued, ſhe had a good title under 1 Jac. which remains unrepealed, either by 3 Jac. or 3 Car. [346]

1. It is not repealed by 3 Jac. Theſe two ſtatutes relate to different perſons and different offences. 1 Jac. relates to all perſons, 3 Jac. only to children. In 1 Jac. the offence is paſſing or being ſent beyond the ſeas to be there educated; in 3 Jac. the offence is going without licence. The penalty in 3 Jac. is leſs than in 1 Jac. 3 Jac. is only the profits, in 1 Jac. the eſtate itſelf is forfeited, and the reaſon is, becauſe the offence againſt 1 Jac. is greater than that againſt 3 Jac.

2. The ſtatute 3 Car. is no repeal of 1 Jac. The rule indeed is, Leges poſteriores leges priores contrarias abrogant, but thoſe two ſtatutes may conſiſt together. Though both extend to the ſame perſons, yet the penalties are different and conſiſtent. 1 Jac. works a diſability to take after the offence committed, 3 Car. a loſs of what the offender had before the offence. If it ſhould be conſtrued, that 3 Car. is a repeal, then papiſts will be bettered by that ſtatute, for they will be reſtored to their capacity of purchaſing, which was taken from them by 1 Jac. neither can they be convicted upon 3 Car. if they will but be content to ſtay abroad; no proceſs can reach them there, for they can only be outlawed in the caſe of high treaſon. 26 H. 8. c. 13. 5 Ed. 6. c. 11. 3 Inſt. 32.

The ſtatute therefore of 1 Jac. being in force, and the meaſure between us, I come in the next place to conſider whether any and what eſtate veſts in the offender. If the ſtatute had intended he ſhould take by deſcent, it would not have diſabled him to purchaſe for the benefit of the heir. In the caſe of a purchaſer the lands muſt veſt in the anceſtor, or elſe the heir cannot take. The offender is diſabled in reſpect of himſelf only, and not in reſpect of his heir: whereas if it ſhould be conſtrued, that he may take by purchaſe or deſcent, it will then be in his power to bar the heir. If he takes any right, it muſt be for his own benefit, and not barely jus alienandi. And when it is ſaid that admitting he does take, yet he has no advantage, becauſe he forfeits feits the profits; that may be avoided as I said before, it being in his power to prevent a conviction on 3 Car. by his keeping beyond sea, and then the whole profits notwithstanding the statute may be applied towards the support of popish seminaries.

If it be said, that by construction of law the crown shall have the profits during the disability of the offender; I answer, that if the offender cannot take the estate, the crown cannot have the profits. 1 Inst. 13. a. If the crown were to take the profits, it would be only a pernancy of them, as in outlawry in a personal action; and it would be in the power of the offender to deprive the King of the pernancy of the profits by his alienation. 21 H. 7. 12. Raym. 17. Hardr. 101. Salk. 395, 408. 5 Mod. 109. Whereas if it be construed, that the offender is disabled to take, he will be consequently disabled to alien, and then the act will have its full force.

It will not be improper under this head to consider some of the disabilities at common law, and compare them with the present case. 1. Propter delictum, as by attain. 2. Propter defectum subjectionis, as an alien. 3. Profession in religion.

1. The first of these works a forfeiture of the estate to the King for treason, and to the lord for felony; it corrupts the blood; the crown shall have the purchase of such a person upon office found; and this disability differs from that created by 1 Jac. 1. Because that created by 1 Jac. is temporary. 2. Personal, and works no corruption of blood. 3. Because an offender against 1 Jac. has no capacity to purchase, which one attainted has for the benefit of the crown.

2. An alien has no inheritable blood in him: he can have no heir, nor be heir to any man: he has a capacity to purchase, but not to hold, for upon office found the King shall have it. And this disability differs from that under 1 Jac. because on the one hand the issue of an offender may inherit, which the issue of an alien cannot, and on the other hand an alien may purchase, which our offender cannot.

3. The next disability is that of a monk, or one entered into religion: that comes the nearest to the present case. For, 1. The purchase of a monk is void, so is that of the offender. 2. Neither of them can inherit. 3. Their heir is not disabled. 4. In both cases the disability is temporary, for the monk is restored upon his deraignment, and so is the offender upon his conformity. It is true, in 1 Inst. 2. b. a monk is called civilliter mortuus, but that is only a similitudinary expression: that he is not not a dead person is proved by his being restored upon his de-raignment, he may be abbot, executor, bring and join in actions.

1 Inst. 132. b. The disability therefore of a monk comes very near the present case; and it is no foreign supposition, to intend the parliament designed to bring the offender under the same incapacity, as a monk, who transgressed no statute, was under at common law. And the rule of construction is always to be guided by the reason and practice in parallel cases. 3 Co. 85. b.

[348]

The principal difficulties started in this case are two. 1. Whether the Dutchess can enter in her remainder during the life of Philip, who is issue in tail though disabled. 2. In case she may, whether upon Philip's conformity or leaving issue inheritable, the estate can divest out of her, and Philip or his issue enter.

1. As to the first: Supposing then Charles, William and Philip disabled to take this estate: since Charles and William are dead without issue, Philip is now the only person who, as heir male of the body of Thomas first Lord Gerard, is next remainder by virtue of the settlement, and the disability as to him being before the estate devolved upon him, it must go over to the next in remainder, who is the lessor of the plaintiff. The law will never cast a descent upon one that is attainted, though he may hold what he acquires by his own act, till office found. 1 Vent. 417.
1 Inst. 13. a. Fitzb. Mortdancesfor, 47, 55. The second son recovered, because the first was beyond sea. Carter 198. 3 Co. 10.
b. 3 Co. 28. 9 H. 6. 24. b. 3 Co. 61. b. Grandfather tenant in tail, father attainted, grandfather dies, the issue of the father may enter. The Dutchess does not claim by descent from the disabled person, but by virtue of the remainder limited to the right heirs of Lord Charles, upon this presumption, that the former remainders are all extinct, Philip still continuing under the same legal incapacity.

2. But the greatest objection is, that the statute having provided, that the land which descends to such an offender shall not escheat, neither shall the issue be hurt; if the estate was to go over to the reversioner, the issue of Philip, or he himself conforming, cannot take, for the estate is gone.

Answer. The statute says, the offender upon his conformity shall be restored to his capacity as before, but doth not say he shall be restored to what he forfeited by the disability.

But admitting he is designed to be restored to all upon his conformity, then I insist he may call for the estate, and so may his issue, though it be gone over. It is a maxim in law, that a freehold cannot be in abeyance. 1 Inst. 342. b. It cannot be in Philip, by reason of the disability, nor in the crown, Philip never having been in possession, and there being no provision in the statute for that purpose: nor in the lord, for the whole estate is not spent; and therefore it must be cast upon the reversioner, the law being careful that the freehold shall never be in abeyance. 5 Co. 52. b. Bro. Escheat 33. Prerog. 947. 1 Inst. 2. b. Philip therefore being disabled, the next in remainder, who is the lessor, must enter to preserve the estate.

Plow. 486. b. is, That after an attainder of treason, and till office found, the freehold shall be in the person attainted so long as he lives, and he shall be tenant to every præcipe; but when he dies the land cannot descend to the heir, for his blood is corrupted; and it cannot be in the King till office found, and therefore till then it shall escheat to the lord, as upon the death of his tenant without heir; though part of that case be denied for law in 3 Co. 10. b. for there it is said, that by the common law for lands in fee-simple, and by 23 H. 8. c. 13. for lands in tail, the actual possession was not in the King till office, but when tenant in fee-simple is attainted and dies, the fee and freehold without any office are thrown upon the King (though not held immediately of him) to prevent an abeyance, and the land shall not escheat to the lord till office, for in all cases the escheat for high treason is to the King. But if tenant in tail is attainted and dies, it shall not vest in the King before office, for neither the attainder nor the statute work any corruption of blood as to the descent of lands intailed; but now the statute 32 H. 8. transfers and vests the actual possession in the King by the attainder, as well in the life as after the death of the person attainted, and as well of lands in tail, as of lands in fee. So it is if an alien dies, the freehold is presently in the King, without office. 5 Co. 52. 8 Co. 76. Plow. 229.

The issue may very well take after the death of Philip, for though the lord has entered by escheat, yet a person claiming paramount to him may enter and oust the lord. 3 Inst. 231. 49 E. 3. 16. 8 Co. 76. b. Fitz. Mortd. 46. 2 Inst. 183. H. P. C. 322. The issue in tail shall never be hurt by the disability of the tenant in tail; Philip by his own act shall not hurt the issue, by the estate gone over to the reversioner, or lord by escheat: and that was the design of the saving.

A reversion must take effect at the instant the particular estate is determined. If the eldest son dies seised leaving his wife privement enfeint with a son, and the second son enters (as he must) and afterwards a posthumous son is born, he shall enter upon his uncle, uncle, and so shall a posthumous issue upon the lord by escheat.

F. N. B. 195.

It has been objected, that the Dutcheffs cannot make out her title in a farmadon in reverter. But why not? she need only set out her pedigree, and allege the death of the donee in tail without issue; and that would bring it to the question, whether dying without issue capable of taking is not in law dying without issue.
8 Co. 88.

The recoveries suffered by Charles are of no effect, for if he was disabled to take the estate, he could not make a tenant to the precipe, and then the recoveries are void.

The statute therefore of 1 Jac. being in force; no estate vesting in a person disabled, and no recovery by him suffered being good; since Philip by reason of the disability cannot take, but upon his conformity may be let in, or leaving issue capable, that issue may take notwithstanding the estate is gone over: to prevent an abeyance the lessor of the plaintiff shall take, and so had a good title to make the lease.

Chefbyre Serjeant contra. The question is whether the remainder limited to the heirs male of the body of Thomas be extinct, so as the subsequent remainder to the right heirs of Lord Charles shall take place. If the first remainder be not extinct, the title is with the defendants by reason of their possession.

Under 1 Jac. we say, the disability does not prevent the vesting of the estate, but relates only to a pernanity of the profits, which will better answer the end of the statute in encouraging conformity than losing the whole estate without a possibility of being restored: his conformity is in the nature of a condition precedent, which if he performs he ought to reap the benefit of it. On the one hand it will be an encouragement to the offender to be restored to a pernanity of the profits, whereas on the other hand if he should not be restored, he will have no encouragement to conform.

The effect of the recoveries is out of the case, for Philip claims paramount to them, and it would be hard his issue should see the estate go over, and be put to a difficulty to convey a descent to himself, and get back the land from him in remainder. There is no law which restrains papists from selling their estates; on the contrary it ought to be encouraged, for by that the protestant land interest is strengthened.

Trinity Term 6 Geo.

The crown shall have the profits during the disability of the offender, for the profits of the land are forfeited to all purposes of benefit, as much as if the land itself were forfeited. By a grant of the profits the land passes. 3 Lev. 289. 1 Inst. 4. b.

The government sought not the estates of the offenders, but their conformity. If a minor under the guardianship of his uncle, who is his next heir, be sent abroad by him; if it should be construed that the estate is gone, then the uncle who was the greatest offender would reap the benefit (a). Whereas if the land vests and the profits only are forfeited, it will be as great hindrance to childrens going beyond sea, and no encouragement to the guardians to send them, and then too there will be no abeyance.

The reason why the punishment under 3 Car. is less than 1 Jac. (for he put 3 Jac. out of the case) is, because 1 Jac. was made upon a pinch, and when the bent of the nation was against the papists, and when that occasion was served, it was thought proper to mitigate the penalties.

This disability cannot amount to a refusal, so as to make the estate go over, for the offender could not bar his issue by matter en pais. The divesting and revesting estates is not favoured in law. 1 Co. 87. 22 E. 3. 19. Hob. 336, 346. Fitzh. Dower 143. Maynard 161. If the estate should be sent over, it can never be brought back again, and then the provision in benefit of the heir would be to no purpose.

At common law profession in religion was equivalent to death, it was a civil death, and a formedon would lie, eo quod suscepit super se habitum religionis, in quo habitu professus fuit. 1 Inst. 133. F. N. B. 196. And a writ of Mortdauncestor would lie upon such a suggestion.

I admit the posthumous issue in tail may enter upon the reversioner, for he only takes pro hac vice to prevent an abeyance, of which there is no danger in the case at bar, if our construction prevails.

He insisted likewise on the matter of the pardon, and the life of Philip.

The court said nothing, taking this to be the last argument: and so it stood two terms upon a curia advisare vult. But then, understanding, other counsel had been retained to argue, if occasion; they desired to hear them. And Trin. 4 Geo. (Parker & J.

C. J. being made Lord Chancellor, and Fortescue come down into the King's Bench) it was argued a fourth time by Sir Thomas Powys for the plaintiff, and Sir Edward Northey for the defendant.

Sir Thomas Powys. In order to make a title in the plaintiff Fourth argument. upon this record, I shall endeavour to prove, that Lord Charles being educated in a foreign popish seminary, and continuing a papist to the time of his death, was by the statute of 1 Jac. 1. c. 4. disabled and made incapable to inherit any legal estate, and consequently the recoveries suffered by him are void, and ineffectual to bar the remainder under which we claim; and that Philip continuing under the same disability, the estate-tail is spent, and the Dutchess must enter as in her reversion.

For this purpose I shall consider these three things. 1. What will be the consequence upon the statute of 1 Jac. taking it singly and by itself, 2. What alterations have been made by any subsequent statutes. And 3. What influence the common recoveries and the life of Philip will have in prejudice of the Dutchess's title.

1. Then to take 1 Jac. by itself, and consider it in relation to this case. Upon this statute it is that we must make our stand, for I must admit that the common recoveries, and the life of Philip, will be objections against us, unless we can have the assistance of this statute to remove them. And as this is to be our foundation, it will be proper to observe the time and occasion of making it.

It is very well known that during Queen Elizabeth's reign the papists were very active in finding out means to ruin the protestant religion, or in the language of those times, to fight the Pope's battles. Amongst other expedients that were thought of, and put in execution, this of erecting popish seminaries in foreign parts for the education of the English youth was one of the principal contrivances of the papists, to bring about their design, and therefore the government at that time was very vigilant to prevent the ill consequences of it. And to that purpose a law was made 27 Eliz. c. 2. which being very doubtful and obscure in many respects, and thought by some to be but a temporary act, which expired by that Queen's death, it had not the intended effect.

Immediately upon King James's accession to the throne the statute we are now upon was made, as an effectual provision against so great a mischief. And as the mischief was great, so the parliament thought there was no time to be lost in putting a stop to it, it, and therefore one of the first things they set themselves about as soon as they came together, was to apply a proper remedy to this mischief. This early care of theirs will be sufficient to silence any insinuations, as if this was but a trifling and an insignificant attempt, and not designed by the parliament to bring the papists under those difficulties, which it is objected will be the consequence if our construction prevails: in answer to which they of the other side set up a construction, which tends only to make this (as they call it) a still-born statute. I need not mention the rule laid down in Hob. 87, 93, 97. that an act of parliament shall never be construed to be void, if it can possibly be otherwise; but shall be expounded in such a manner, that it may as far as possible attain its end.

The statute has a twofold operation. 1. To create an incapacity to take any estate, under the words, be disabled and made incapable to inherit, purchase, take. 2. To prevent the enjoying any estate vested before the offence, implied in these words have or enjoy.

The whole clause runs, "That every such person so passing or being sent, &c. shall, as in respect of him or herself only, and not to or in respect of any of his heirs or posterity, be disabled and made incapable to inherit, purchase, take, have or enjoy any manors, lands, &c." And then follows the proviso for conformity.

It is the first part of those words creating the disability to take, which is what we rely upon, for the offence was committed by Charles and Philip before the descent of the estate to either of them; so that what might be the construction of the statute as to estates vested, will not need to be now considered, being intirely foreign to the present question.

The words be disabled to inherit, purchase, take, are very strong and significant, and without doubt would have been sufficient to have hindered any estate from vesting in the disabled person, if the statute had not gone on, and made provision for the benefit of the heir. The word inherit would have prevented any descent to the offender, and the word take would have stopped him from claiming as a purchaser. The words in Lord Delaware's case (b) are not so strong, and yet the dignity was held to be suspended, and he no baron, but only an esquire. The statute of 11 & 12 W. 3. c. 4. is penned in the very same expressions, and upon that it has been held, that no estate would pass to a papist by any conveyance whatsoever. The words of 31 Eliz. against simony have been construed to create such a disability, as that and the cases

that the presentee cannot bring an ejectment, or sue for tithes; and yet the words there are not heaped up so elaborately as in our statute.

But it is contended, that the words, in respect of himself only and not in respect of his heir, do restrain and qualify the others, and shew the estate was designed to vest in the ancestor, in order to enable the heir to take.

To this I answer, That they are not to be considered as words restraining the former: if it be any, it must be but a partial restriction, as to lands, tenements and hereditaments only, and not to leases, goods or chattels, which the heir has nothing to do with; and it is absurd to say they shall qualify as to part, and not throughout. This saving the right of the heir, enures only as an exception of the heir, and leaves the statute to run in non exceptis, for the exception helps to prove the rule, and shew that the offender himself was designed to be left under the utmost force of the former words.

The offender himself was the person principally aimed at; the care of the heir was but a secondary intention, and therefore the first is not to be overthrown to make way for the second. But say they, what use then will you make of this saving? were the words added with no view or design at all? I answer, They were put in only in majorem cautelam, to satisfy every body, that only a personal disability was intended: they were not added as necessary, but to prevent any doubts which might arise in prejudice of the heir, and as my Lord Coke says, To satisfy ignorant men, and also to clear any suspicion, as if the Parliament intended to resemble this case to that of an attainder, and so cut off the communication between the ancestor and heir. If the other side will have us find out some use or other for these words, what can it be, but only to enable the heir to make out his title through one who was never seized?

But surely it is no consequence, that because the disability is not to run upon the heir, therefore the estate must vest in the disabled ancestor. This would be intirely to overthrow the statute, for then, contrary to the words, he will inherit and take. And if he be allowed to inherit and take, they must, at the same time give him a power to alien, and by this means he will be enabled to prevent any discovery of his offence, for none but the next heir will take that advantage, and if he does, the other knows how to revenge himself.

In order to overthrow our construction, and yet leave the act to have some effect, it has been insisted for the defendants, that the statute only creates a disability to take the profits.

To this I answer; that there are no words in the statute which look that way; it is perfectly silent as to any such thing; and can it be imagined, that if the Legislature had intended so, they would not have adapted the words to such an intention? Can any one think they would throw in clauses out of abundant caution in one place, and yet be entirely silent in so material a point as this? The statute disables them from taking or enjoying goods and chattels in the same clause which relates to lands; now nobody can have the profit of goods and chattels, but he who has the property, and the offender cannot have the property by reason of the statute; so that construing the profits only to be forfeited can go but to part, and it is absurd to create distinct disabilities as to the real and personal estate, when the statute has coupled both together, and made no distinction between them.

The statute says the offender shall not take. The defendants by their construction say he shall take, and so they give the statute an operation as to a pernancy of the profits, a matter in which it is silent, and this is to overthrow the plain sense of the words, which disable him from taking the estate.

And as it is pretty extraordinary to think the statute designed only that the pernancy of the profits should be forfeited; so it is much more extraordinary, that if they had such a design, they should take no care to dispose of them elsewhere, or name the person they intended should have them during the disability. The same Parliament were so far from thinking that a matter proper to be left undetermined, that when by the statute of 3 Jac. they disabled an offender against that statute from enjoying any estate, they immediately directed the next protestant of kin to take the profits: if they had any such design in our statute, they would have expressed it in the same manner; but they very well knew, they had no occasion to direct the application of the profits, when they had before disposed of the whole estate.

They endeavour to supply the want of a direction to whom the profits are to go, by telling us, that by construction of law the crown shall have the profits, because this is a public offence, and not to the detriment of any particular person, according to the case of Woodward v. Fox, 2 Vent. 187. 267.

If this was to be allowed, I know no use the statute would be of; the profits could only be forfeited as in outlawry in a personal nal action, and it would be in the power of the offender to deprive the King of the perannuity of the profits by his alienation; not to mention the prejudice that would accrue to the heir; whereas if it be construed, that the offender is disabled to take, he will be consequently disabled to alien, and then, and not till then, the act will have its full force.

But whilst we are arguing to preserve the estate for the heir, against the alienation of the ancestor, we are told, that we are endeavouring to defeat one great end and design of the statute which was to strengthen the protestant landed interest; for say they, give us the estate that we may alien it to a protestant, and that will be a means to work us out of the kingdom. To this I must observe, that it is a little unlikely, they who are so solicitous to get the estate, will be so willing to part with it. To what purpose should they argue themselves into the estate, if they can so readily leave it as soon as they have it? They can never be in earnest when they tell us, they only desire the estate to have an opportunity to shew the world how generously they can relinquish it. They who argue in this manner, must distinguish between a purchase and a descent; for when they contend for lands by descent, in order to hand them over to a protestant; they can never mean, to secure to themselves a power to alien to one of their own religion: that would be to make him a purchaser against the express words of the statute, and would also overthrow that plausible pretence of theirs, of strengthening the protestant landed interest; for if they may alien at all, they must have a general power, and then it can hardly be supposed they will turn their backs on their own religion, in order to propagate heresy, and root out themselves.

If the gentlemen who argue in this manner are really in earnest to advance the protestant interest, I can shew them a way how it may be done more effectually than that they are now in; it is only by keeping the estate from ever vesting in a papist, and giving it away to the next person capable of taking it. This is a plainer and easier way to bring about what they pretend to have so much at heart; for if the protestant interest be best advanced by working papists out of their estates, then I am sure that end will be easier effected by keeping them out intirely, than by letting them in upon a bare promise, how specious soever, of surrendering their estates when required.

When any great mischief is intended to be remedied, such a construction must be made as will tend the most effectually to prevent the mischief. The mischief is, that children go beyond the seas for a popish education. Now, if our construction prevails, the offender will be in a manner cut off from his own family mily and his native country : he will be in many respects as an alien, exile, or one professed; and the bringing all these disabilities upon him will be a means to deter him from going, and then the end of the statute is answered. In making this construction we go along with the words and reason of the statute, but they on the other side in their exposition leave both behind them, and under pretence of finding out a plain, easy operation for the statute, they set up an imaginary construction of their own, which I have before shewn tends only to overthrow it.

Jenk. 300.
1 Rol. Rep. 451.

But this milder construction of the disability and sinking it below the words ought not to prevail for these reasons. 1. Because it is contrary to the rules laid down in expounding statutes made for the advancement of religion, for summa est ratio qua pro religione facit. Such statutes, says my Lord Hobart in Colt v. Glover's case (c), are to be extended even beyond the words. And so is 11 Co. 70. Magdalen College case, where there are many instances of this nature. There words, short and imperfect in themselves, were carried beyond the letter to attain their end, but we are told in this case, though the words are full and express, yet the sense is to be softened and mitigated. 2. Because it is contrary to the rule of exposition of statutes made to prevent any great mischief in the commonwealth, or which enact any thing to its benefit. In 11 Co. 34. a. it is said, that such statutes, though penal, shall be taken by intendment, and he instances even in criminal cases.

This case comes under both these rules : the mischief designed to be prevented by the statute strikes both at our Religion and Civil Government, to have our youth educated in seminaries of jesuits, where they acquire the greatest inveteracy against both.

The rule of the civil law is, in dubio legis intentio non verba valent, but no rule can be shewn, that where words are plain, and express, an intention shall be presumed contrary to the words. I believe, if a common person was to read this statute, he would not be able to raise any doubts upon it, though lawyers we see have.

When we have drove them out of all their holds, then they resort to the saving in the statute as their last refuge; and argue that because the estate is saved to the heir, therefore it shall vest in the disabled ancestor. But surely this would be a very strange exposition, to draw such an inference from the saving words of a statute, as will overturn and destroy the very purview itself. And thus they who are so solicitous to set up the saving for the benefit of the heir, are all the while doing him the greatest mischief;

chief; for if the ancestor has the estate, he must have it with a power to alien, and this will enable him to keep all under him in subjection; for if the protestant heir goes to take the advantage, he will sell; if he be a remainder-man, he will suffer a common recovery, and revenge himself that way. There is no need in constructions upon such statutes to give the estate to the ancestor, for in Lord Delaware's case, the peerage never vested in William, 11 Co. 1. and as the book takes notice, he was but an esquire, and yet the dignity descended to Thomas.

They ask us, If the estate is not in the offender, where is it? To this I answer, that certainly it is not in the disabled person, if it can go any where else; for that would be maledicta constructio qua corrumpit textum. In Hob. 87. it is said, that an act of Parliament may indeed be void, but not if by any possibility it can be otherwise; and that whatever is a necessary consequence of a statute, is as much a part of it, as if it had been contained in the body of it. Hob. 293. It may make a felony, and Bro. Corone, it may operate as a pardon by intendment.

Again: where an act of Parliament has made any new point, the Judges are to construe it so as to make it practicable, though it thwarts some of the maxims of the common law; for that is the main business of all acts of Parliament, to correct the common law; and if a statute be inconsistent with the common law, and both cannot stand together, then the rules of law must give place to the statute, and not the statute to them.

I must admit it to be a good rule in expounding statutes, to go as near the common law as we can, provided we do not set up the latter to destroy the former, but blend them one with another as long as they will hold together, and when they grow inconsistent, then the common law is to be rejected.

To see then where the estate is, let us first consider where it is not. It is not in the offender, by reason of the statute, as I have before shewn; and if not in him, then there can be no per-nancy of the profits of the crown; for 1 Inst. 13. a. where the son was attainted, living the father, it was held, the King could not claim by escheat, because the son never had any thing. It cannot go to the heir of the offender during his ancestor's life, for nemo est heres viventis, and therefore since it cannot go any where else, it must return to us, who are the reversioner, as to the first mover. Thus estates are supposed to have first moved from the lord, and therefore when the tenant dies without heir, it goes back to the lord by way of escheat. So of estates-tail; if nobody nobody be capable to take them up, the donor must enter as in his reversion.

To this they object the proviso in the statute, for conformity; and ask us how they shall have back their estate again, in case they should conform.

This admits of two answers: 1. It does not appear that this proviso has any retrospect, or words of restoration in it; it only makes him from thenceforth capable of taking an estate, but does not provide that he shall be as if he was never under any disability. He loses what should have vested during his recusancy as a punishment for it, and his conformity is as a condition precedent to his taking any future estate. When he has lived as a recusant all his life, it is not reasonable, that a feint conformity at the last should put him in the same condition with those who have been always innocent. 2. But admitting that the offender is designed to be restored to all upon his conformity, then I insist that he may call for that estate which passed by him during his disability, for the same act which incapacitates him to take, may put him in statu quo on its own terms. One act may attain a man, and another restore him upon condition; and why may not the same statute do as much? There is no more difficulty in shifting the estate from the reversioner to the conformist, than in the Prince's case (d) from him to the crown, and so back again when there is a new Prince of Wales, which desultory kind of inheritance has been held good. In the Earl of Derby's case in Raymond, it is laid down, that where estates are limited by a statute for particular purposes, they are not to be measured by the rules of law, else says the book, how could the Prince's case be law, but that the Judges were obliged to go according to the act.

Jenk. 280.

Thus according to Beaumont's case, 9 Co. and Hob. 257. estates-tail may cease and rise again. It is one of the maxims of the common law, that a freehold cannot be in abeyance, but yet we know in cases of necessity, the contrary is every day's experience: as where a parson dies, the freehold is in abeyance. Litt. § 646, 647. So where houses are annexed to offices: and the like of estates-tail. Litt. § 649, 650. 613. 1 Inst. 331. a. 345. a. So there may be a moveable fee-simple both as to persons and as to place. A man may be passed over as a person not in esse, as a monk who is civiliter mortuus, who may, notwithstanding, upon his deraignment enter upon the reversioner. 2 Roll. Abr. 150. B.

Suppose tenant in tail dies, leaving his wife priveement enfeint with a son; this shall not hinder the reversioner, but that he may enter enter till the birth, and at the birth the tail shall revive; for the expectation and presumption that there may be a child shall not keep the freehold in abeyance. 7 Co. 8. b. And from hence we may argue a fortiori, that any expectation of conformity shall not keep us out, since that is more unlikely than the birth of a child en ventre sa mere. I shall leave this first point with inculcating that the incapacity in our case is to take, and not barely to enjoy.

2. It being thus established that the act of 1 Jac. has created an incapacity to take; the next thing to be considered is, whether any subsequent statutes have altered the law in this point, and taken off the disability.

It is not contended on the other side, that there ever was any express repeal of this statute; but the most they pretend to is, that it being inconsistent with the subsequent statutes, it is implicitly repealed according to the rule leges posteriores leges priores contrarias abrogant.

Before I enter upon the consideration of the consistency or inconsistency of the three statutes, I would observe, that repeals by implication are to be used very tenderly, because they infer a very high reflection upon the law-makers, as if heedlessly and unknowingly they made contrary and inconsistent laws. 11 Co. 63. 1 Roll. Rep. 91.

It was given up in C. B. and agreed to in this court, that 3 Jac. relates to different persons and different offences from 1 Jac. and therefore I shall pass it by and take no notice of it.

The statute of 3 Car. is that which is set up by the other side to be the governing act, and an implicit repeal of 1 Jac. notwithstanding it enacts it to be put in due execution, which is sufficient to shew it was not intended as a repeal.

It was said upon a former argument, that 1 Jac. was made upon a pinch, and when the bent of the nation was against the papists, and it being very severe upon them, 3 Car. was made to mitigate those penalties. In order to answer this pretence I must resume the historical part of the case, and consider the circumstances of the nation at the time of making this latter statute. During Queen Elizabeth's and King James's reigns the people were very jealous of the designs of the papists, and therefore we see endeavoured by several acts of Parliament to fence against them: upon King Charles's accession to the throne their suspicions were rather increased than diminished; that Prince was then newly married to a daughter of France, a Roman catholic, and several favours were at that time shewn to the papists: this occasioned great disquietude and uneasiness to those of the protestant reformed religion, which afterwards broke out into an open rebellion, and ended in the murder of that Prince, and the banishment of his son. It is well known, that the Parliament which enacted this law was far from being acceptable to the court, and therefore it was suffered to continue but a short time, and then followed the long intermission of Parliaments: as this Parliament was not in the interest of the court, so they were highly incensed against the papists, who, they began to fear were likely to gain ground, and therefore they set themselves at work to attack them in that which was their weakest place, namely, in taking away the estates vested before the offence, as to which the former statute was doubtful; so that now they were able to meet with them both ways: by 1 Jac. they prevented the vesting, and by 3 Car. the keeping any estate after the offence. Now if it should be construed, that the measure of all these disabilities must be by 3 Car. then that Parliament, instead of distressing the papists, as was intended, has rendered their condition more easy; for on 3 Car. a conviction is requisite, to avoid which they may keep abroad, and have the profits of their estates transmitted to them, for they will be out of the reach of any process necessarily previous to a conviction.

But the main end and design of this latter statute (which has not yet been mentioned) was to lay a heavier punishment upon the person sending, who before forfeited 100*l.* only, and the child sent, who was the most innocent, bore all the resentment of the statute; whereas both are now put upon the level, and some new disabilities are created, as from being executor, &c. and it also extends to private schools, which the others did not.

3. I come now to consider what influence the common recoveries and the life of Philip will have in prejudice of the Dutchess's title.

Now as to this point, what I set out with will principally govern it, for if the second Charles never had the estate in him (as upon my former reasoning I apprehend he never had) then the recoveries will be void, and suffered by a person out of possession; as if the issue in tail should suffer a recovery in the life-time of his father: a fine indeed he may, but that is by the express provision of the statute 32 H. 8. c. 36.

As to the life of Philip, my objections against the estate's being in abeyance, and the way I have shewn how he, or his issue, may may be restored upon conformity, will be sufficient to remove that obstacle.

But to come closer. Say they, whilst there is issue the reversioner cannot enter. I deny that in this case. Issue must be heir of the body, Hob. 346. Dy. 332. a. Plow. 560. and he must be issue inheritable, which Philip is not: he, as I have before shewn, is disabled, and cannot call for the estate; according to 1 Vent. 417. he is to be considered in consanguinity, but not as heir. And if he cannot take, then his issue cannot, (admitting him to have issue, which is not found, neither is it so in fact, so that the argument is only from a possibility of his having issue) for it is not enough that he is issue, unless he be heir of the body to claim the intail, and heir of the body he cannot be in the life of Philip, for nemo est heres viventis. My Lord Coke, 1 Inst. 377. a. puts the case of tenant in tail to him and the heirs male of his body, he has issue a daughter, who has issue a son; the grandson, says he, shall not keep out the reversioner, though he be heir of the body, because he does not derive his descent through males. It is said of an exile, quod perdidit patriam, and it will sound as well as to say of Philip quod perdidit patrimonium.

We are not obliged to wait for the possibility of his conforming. Shall an estate stand suspended, because it is possible an alien may be naturalized, or a monk be deraigned? Even in the case of an infant en ventre sa mere, which is stronger, the estate goes over till the birth. Cro. El. 422. 1 Inst. 391. 29 Aff. pl. 61. Plowden 557. indeed says, there might be an occupant in that case cited out of the book of Affise, but that was only said arguendo, and is contrary to Yel. 9. 2 Roll. Abr. 151, 152. for he must claim by a que estate. If an advowson be granted to A. for the life of B. and A. dies before a vacancy, the grantor shall present, and there shall be no occupant.

The next thing relied upon by the defendants is the act of general pardon, 2 W. & M. st. 1. c. 10. which, say they, has cured all. This has been sufficiently answered by those who have argued before me, as there are exceptions in it, and it is not found, the court will not take notice of it. H. P. C. 252. Cro. El. 125. 1 Keb. 20. 1 Lev. 26, 76. Bro. Charter de Pardon 2 Hawk. P. C. 46. Pleading 124. 8 E. 4. 7. 4 H. 7. 8. b. The general words might pardon the offence, but would not restore the forfeitures without special words. 1 Lev. 120. 1 Saund. 362. If simony be pardoned, yet that does not operate so as to restore the offender to the living. 5 Mod. 15. 2 Bro. P. C. 209. 3 Burn's Eccl. Law 347.

The last thing they object to us is, that Charles was in possession all his life, and therefore the recoveries are good : but was this any other possession than that of a wrong-doer ? A monk might be a disseisor, but yet it will not be pretended he had any legal estate in him ; no, he was at best but an occupant, and in this case Charles was no more ; he had it is true a permanency of the profits, but that is all ; he had not such a possession and freehold as enabled him to bar the remainder by coming in as vouchee in a recovery. I desire to know, whether it will be pretended, that if a papist since the 11 & 12 W. 3. c. 4. should get into possession, and receive the profits of any estate, whether I say he can be deemed to be in legal actual possession ? Certainly he cannot : he cannot take advantage of his own wrong, and no more shall the tortious entry of Charles (for such it was) enure to his benefit, and turn to the prejudice of us, who are in reversion.

There is one thing more which they press upon us, and that is, that we can shew no instance where this act has been put in execution in the manner we are contending for, or indeed in any other manner. I may retort the argument upon them, and demand to know, if they can produce any case which seems to look their way, or so much as countenance the construction they have set up : the truth is, the matter is still at large, and no argument can be drawn by either side from the disuse of the statute. Many statutes there are in full force, upon which there are no footsteps for many years. And as to this particular statute, I can give them a very good reason why it was never yet drawn in question ; they of the same religion will never take advantage of it, and these are the people who mostly have it in their power, though in our case indeed the reversioner is a protestant : besides, it is very difficult to prove a foreign education, and a being sent with intent, for the jesuits though they were caught in this case, will never be caught again ; none but a man of Duke Hamilton's application and interest could have brought them over ; but now they know the consequence, they will never be prevailed with to give the same testimony, and as this is the first case upon the statute, so in all probability it will be the last.

Sir Edward Northey contra. I shall not need to go about to prove a title in the defendants upon this record, for their possession is sufficient against the plaintiff, who must recover upon his own strength.

The plaintiff relies on 1 Jac. only, but in my argument I shall pin them all together, and admit them to be consistent ; for my Lord Coke says, where there are several statutes relating to the same matter, one must not be singled out from the rest, but the con-

construction must be uniform upon them all. The three statutes now in question were all made with the same view, and to prevent the same mischief, and that was to be brought about by laying heavy punishments upon the offenders, and thereby obliging them to conform.

There are two sorts of offenders; those who send, and they who are sent, which latter we say forfeit only the profits of their estates, and that was taken to be the consequence of the statute at the time of making it, and therefore 3 Jac. does not introduce any new law when it speaks of the profits, but only directs the application of them to the next protestant of kin, which under 1 Jac. the King as pater patrie was intitled to. [364]

The plaintiff does not make his case on 1 Jac. which respects only the intent, but has brought it within the words of 3 Car. for it is found they were actually educated, which is carrying the intent into execution.

I shall put every thing out of the case, but the operation of the statute as to descents. I would fain know, if this was an estate in fee descended, who should have it? The heir according to their maxim cannot, and shall it escheat to the Lord, as if the whole estate was spent? Can it be thought the legislature intended to favour the Lord or reversioner before the innocent issue? He must be prejudiced, unless it be construed, that the profits only are forfeited. The construction must be, that the ancestor shall take the legal estate, but he shall take no benefit by it: he shall not take for the advantage of himself, but for the benefit of his posterity he shall.

The statute 11 & 12 W. 3. has the words be disabled to inherit or take, but yet in the case of Pye v. George 1 July 1709. in Canc' 128. it was held, that the subsequent words had controlled the former, so that they carried away no more than a pernancy of the profits, and the legal estate descended notwithstanding.

A man may take only for the benefit of another, as a person attainted, for the benefit of the crown. 1 Inst. 2. b. 2 Roll. Abr. 88.

I put all the rules of law out of the case, and come to the proviso for conformity: and I take it, that upon conformity the offender is to be in statu quo; and if so, how can the estate be revested? There is no provision for it in the statute, and that is an argument it was never intended the estate should go over. My Lord Delaware's case, cited of the other side, is a case which has room enough to hold us both. It says that Thomas shall claim from William, and not through him. Now the word from implies he was seised, for otherwise Thomas could not claim from him. Here the estate-tail is not spent, and therefore the reversioner cannot be let in.

[365] It is objected, that the freehold shall not be in abeyance. I answer, it is not; it is in the offender.

It is said, Philip has no issue, and the reversioner must not be obliged to wait upon that contingency. Answer: We must provide for what may be, as well as what is; the law never sees any impossibility of having issue, and therefore upon a general in-tail there can be no tenant in tail apres possibility. Here is a possibility that Philip may have issue, and therefore the estate must continue to serve that possibility whenever it arises.

Another objection is, that if we have the estate, we may alien it. I answer: The statute never intended to put the heir out of the power of the ancestor, but only that he should not be hurt by the disability of the ancestor.

We do not now rely on the recoveries, but set up the life of Philip against the plaintiff. I agree, if tenant in tail leaves issue an alien, the remainder-man may enter, for such issue is as none.

If therefore the estate vests, and the profits only are forfeited during the disability, then the lessor of the plaintiff can have no title.

Sir Thomas Powys replied. In Lord Delaware's case it is said the peerage never was in William, he was only an esquire, and this destroys the inference from the word from. As to the case of Woodward v. Fox (e), it is a case prima impressionis, and a long while after this statute, so that the law-makers could not know, the profits would go to the crown of course, it not being a point settled till that case. I know nobody to whom the estate would have gone, had this been a descent in fee, but to the lord by escheat; and it is no new doctrine to divest estates escheated, as on birth of a posthumous heir, or reversal of an attainder. 3 Inst. 231. And the same may be done on Philip's conformity.

Curia advisare vult. And Trinity 6 Geo. the court delivered their opinions seriatim, beginning with the puisne Judge.

Mr.

Mr. Justice Fortescue. In delivering my opinion in this case, I shall make three points, which I design to speak to distinctly. Resolutio curia.

1. What estate vested in the second Charles, who suffered the recovery, upon the statute of 1 Jac. 1. c. 4. independent of the subsequent statute. 2. What alteration was made in that law by the 3 Car. 1. c. 2. and how the construction will be on both those statutes taking them together. 3. What will be the effect of Philip's life, who upon this record must be taken to be alive. [366]

1. The reformation, which was begun in Henry the Eighth's time, and compleated in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, had rendered it difficult for the papists to educate their youth at home as they designed, and therefore it was the advice of the Pope at that time, to erect colleges abroad, that the English youth might be sent thither. And pursuant to this advice, in the year 1598 there were two set up, one at Rome and the other at Doway, by which means many of our youth were drawn out of the kingdom, to the no small prejudice thereof; and in order to put a stop to this mischief, the statute of 1 Jac. 1. c. 4. was made, which though it be a penal law, yet it ought to have a liberal construction, because it so much concerns the publick welfare of the kingdom: all laws are in some measure penal, but that is no reason to restrain them in such cases as this. 11 Co. 34, 70. Hatt. of Stat. 66. Hob. Colt v. Glover (f). (f) 140.

And upon this act I am of opinion, that a person who receives a foreign education in a popish seminary, has neither jus in re nor ad rem: he can take no estate at all, either real or personal; he is disabled to inherit, purchase, take, have or enjoy: and can any words be stronger than these?

But it is said the word enjoy implies a vesting of the estate, and that only a forfeiture of the profits was designed. Now if the word enjoy should be so taken, I do not see how it could affect this case; for that could only relate to lands vested before the offence (which is a case that seldom happens to infants, and therefore cannot be supposed to have been uppermost in the mind of the legislature) but as to lands that are to descend after the disability, there are other words to take in that case, which are inherit, purchase, take. Besides, 1. It is a very rare phrase to express a forfeiture by words of disability only: in the statute of 3 Car. there are words of forfeiture. 2. In a penal law it is too severe to construe words of a present temporary disability, into an absolute forfeiture; but if they should, they will only relate to goods and chattels. 3. And it is plainly a disability in 1 Jac. If we do but compare the proviso of that with the proviso in 3 Car. which induces a forfeiture. In 1 Jac. he is disabled to take, take, and therefore the proviso for conformity restores him to a capacity of taking. In 3 Car. he forfeits; and there the proviso restores him to the land, which shews the parliament were aware of the difference between a disability to take, and a forfeiture of the estate. 4. If only the profits should be said to be gone, what is that but the land itself. Co. Litt. 23. by a grant of the profits the land passes.

[367] But it is objected, that he must take for the benefit of the heir, being only disabled in respect of himself, and not in respect of his heir. To this I answer: That these affirmative words always imply a negative and separate the case of the ancestor and heir: he himself in his own person shall not take, but his heir shall, i. e. this disability shall not be like an attainder, which corrupts the blood, but it shall still flow pure from the ancestor to the heir.

In these cases there is no need to leave any thing in the ancestor, according to Lord Delaware's case, which is express, that the dignity never vested in the grandfather, he was no baron, but only an esquire. And there the Lords and Judges were of opinion, that the heir might claim by him, this being only a personal temporary disability, which differed from an attainder.

Then the objection recurs, Are these words of no use at all? it often happens so, that to satisfy the scruples of the ignorant, words are added, which the more knowing part of mankind will plainly see were implied before: they are only explicatory of what went before, and serve to shew, that the heir in this case shall be enabled to make out his title through one who was never seised.

But say they, How can the heir take by descent according to the rules of law, if the ancestor was never seised? To this I answer, 1. That at common law it is not necessary the ancestor should be seised, to enable the heir to take by descent. Shelley's case is, that where the ancestor might have taken the estate and been seised, there the heir shall inherit. Nay in some cases the heir shall take by descent, although the ancestor never was or could be seised of that estate, as in Co. Litt. 378. where lands were given to A. and B. for their joint lives, remainder to the right heirs of him that died first, A. dies, his heir shall take by descent: and yet the remainder never vested during the life of A. it being uncertain all that time, whether the heir of A. or the heir of B. should have it. 2. Whatever it might be at common law will not avail in this case, which is an incapacity by act of parliament; and therefore the common law is a wrong medium to judge by. There could be no such desultory inheritance ance at common law as The Prince's case, and yet it was there allowed, being by act of parliament. And though these points are singularities, and contrary to the known rules of law, yet they being introduced by statute, must not be carried to the rules of law as to their standard.

And now let us consider a little the inconveniences of a contrary construction. It will be an encouragement to the papists to continue in that religion, when the punishment is not so great as what I contend for. It will be a discouragement to the heir or remainder-man from putting the act in execution, because he will then be cut off for his pains. It destroys the saving for the benefit of the heir, by putting it in the power of the ancestor to disinherit him. It is a repealing of the former part of the statute by implication only, which is never to be allowed; because it is a reflection on the wisdom of the legislature. 11 Co. 63. Hob. 15, 87. It is against all the rules of construction, to take them in the mildest sense, where religion and the publick are concerned. Hob. 344, 388. 11 Co. Magdalen College case.

The offender may deprive the King of the pernancy of the profits by his alienation. 21 Hen. 7. 12. Raym. 17. Hardr. 101. 5 Mod. and Salk. Britton v. Cole (g). In the other act of 3 Jac. 1. c. 5. the very profits are mentioned to be forfeited, of which there was no occasion here, when the land itself is gone.

It is objected that he may be convicted, and then 3 Car. carries all to the crown. But can he be convicted if he stays abroad? It is said it goes to the crown by implication, because this is a publick crime. For this there is no necessity in the case of a disability, as there is upon a forfeiture, which implies a having, and then it is to be carried away, whereas in the other he never has it at all. The person is the subject of one, and the land of the other. How can he forfeit what he has not? Nil dat quod in se non habet. Besides, a disability reaches what cannot be forfeited, and this difference between a disability and a forfeiture is kept up in many statutes.

2. The next thing to be considered is, whether any alteration is made in 1 Jac. by the statute of 3 Car. which, I take it, may very well stand with all the provisions of 1 Jac. and has not impaired the force of it in the least. 1. It enacts it to be put in due execution. 2. It reaches the offender more fully as to estates vested before the offence, about which the former statute was doubtful. 3. It lays the same penalty on the parent or guardian sending the youth abroad, who before forfeited 100*l.* only.

4. It

4. It extends to private schools, whereas the other was confined to public colleges. 5. It creates a disability to sue, be executor or administrator or committee of any ward; and after all these additions, are we to be told, it was only explanatory of the former law? Can a forfeiture be the measure of a disability? It is said to have so far enlarged and enforced the former law, as to shew how that must be put in execution, viz. by conviction. Now does it not say 1 Jac. shall be put in due execution? And does not that imply, that of itself it is sufficient, and may be put in execution?

The case of a fee-simple is put as a difficult case to know where the estate is to go. But are cases plain and express to be broke in upon, because difficult cases may be put? In the case of a purchase say they, if the bargainee cannot take, who can? But was it not expressly resolved in Roper's case (b) that a bargain and sale would be absolutely void. There is no reason why a statute must be expounded away to nothing, because one or two difficult cases may be put upon it. The construction I lay down, and which in my opinion it ought to receive, puts the act in some use. The construction I have been arguing against leaves it no force at all.

3. The life of Philip is objected to be an impediment, which prevents the execution of the reversion in the lessor of the plaintiff, for say they, whilst he lives, the estate-tail continues. But I give the objection this answer: that Philip can take nothing, no more than Charles did. It is to this purpose the same thing, whether he be incapacitated or not in esse: the rule of law is, that where any limitation is to a person not in esse at the time the estate ought to vest, the estate must go over to the next in remainder. Here the limitation is to Philip and the heirs male of his body, but when that limitation ought to take effect, he is incapacitated to take, and then the remainder over to the lessor must take effect immediately. Cro. El. 422. Devise to R. in tail, and after his decease without issue to Edward in tail; R. dies leaving issue, living the testator; and there it was held, that Edward should have the estate presently, and not wait till the death of R.'s issue. If a man has issue two sons, and the eldest be an alien, the law takes no notice of him, and therefore as he shall not take by descent himself, so he shall not impede the descent to his younger brother, on supposition that he may have issue a natural born subject. Indeed in the case of a person attainted, he shall obstruct the descent. 2 Vent. Collingwood v. Pace (i), but his heir cannot take,

take, for that would be to let him in by act of law, and the law will not trust him with an estate. And in such cases, where the law will not suffer the estate to fall, it goes over to the next person capable of taking. 1 Vent. 417.

It is said the limitation is to the issue of the body of Thomas, and Philip is such. It is true he is so in common parlance, but that is not enough; he must be issue inheritable, and for want of that here is a cesser of the estate-tail, on which the reversioner must enter. Hob. 346. Dy. 332. He is in the same case with the son of a daughter on a limitation to the heirs male of the body, for there the son is heir, and he is a male, but not a male inheritable within the form of the gift, because he does not derive his descent through males. 1 Inst. 337. a.

It is objected that here is still a possibility, that Philip may have issue inheritable. But this is but a possibility, and for a possibility it was never yet known that the freehold was allowed to continue in abeyance, for the law abhors abeyances, and will never suffer them, but in cases of absolute necessity. In all cases where the heir is incapacitated to take, the ancestor may justly be said to die without heir. Co. Lit. 13. a. The lessor might in this case lay it in a formedon, that Thomas is dead without any heir male of his body. § Co. 88. This is no more than the common case of a posthumous heir, where the reversioner enters till the birth, and then the tail revives.

It is said Philip may conform, and to serve this possibility the estate must continue. Why may not an alien be naturalized, or a monk be deraigned? and yet was there ever any estate suspended on that occasion? If the King's tenant dies without heir, to prevent an abeyance the law casts the freehold on the King without office; and to prevent the like mischief it will carry the estate to the reversioner in this case.

This case of a foreign education very much resembles the case of a monk, for 1. The purchase of both is void. 2. Neither can inherit. 3. The heir of neither is disabled. And 4. The disability is but temporary in both cases. And it is no answer to say that a monk is looked on in law to be civilly dead, for that is only a similitudinary expression, and as he loses no civil rights, but is considered in many respects as a member of the community, so he is answerable for any offences by him committed after his civil death. Bro. Moyn. 23, 25. Our offender is more civilly dead than a monk, for the latter may be executor, but the former cannot. An outlaw, one under a præmunire, or abjuration, are as much civilly dead as he; and why is not this temporary disability disability like the case of a parson who married and was formerly on that account incapable to hold his living: or like the case in 2 Roll. Abr. 415. c. 6. of a devise to a monk for life, remainder over to B. who was allowed to take immediately: and suppose that had been a devise in tail, should the issue of the monk have taken? Certainly he should not.

Another difficulty laid in the way is the proviso for conformity, because say they we cannot easily get back the estate again. But is not the objection as strong upon their construction in bringing back the estate from the crown? Is it easier to recover against the crown than a subject? Besides it is far from being clear to me, that this proviso does restore him to his estate; there are no such words in it, but only that he shall be restored to his capacity, that is, he shall for the future be capable of taking any estate that may come to him. If the meaning of that proviso was to restore him to all; I can see no difficulty, but that he may as easily bring back the estate again, as in the case of a posthumous heir, or a monk deraigned. 3 Inst. 231. Fitzh. Mord. 46. F. N. B. 195. Dy. 13. The lord by escheat takes but in loco heredis, as the reversioner here does in the room of Philip. 9 H. 6. 23. b. 2 Roll. Abr. 418. His incapacity shall no more keep back the estate from the reversioner, than in the case of a devise for life or in tail, to one who refuses, remainder over, it shall vest immediately.

Upon the whole therefore I am of opinion, that in this case the statute of 1 Jac. is the measure by which we are to construe this disability, and that under this statute no estate ever vested in Charles; by which he having no possession, the recovery is void; and that the life of Philip will not stand in the way of the Dutchess: as a consequence of all which the judgment given below for the defendants is erroneous, and ought to be reversed, and that this court ought to give a new judgment for the plaintiff.

Mr. J. Eyre. I must own I have the misfortune to differ from my brother, for I think the judgment given below for the defendants was well given, and ought to be affirmed; though I must say thus much, that I do not approve of the reasons given by the court of C. B. for that judgment.

The general question in this case is, Whether a foreign education in a popish seminary infers an absolute disability to take any estate, for unless it does the lessor can have no title.

There

There have been three statutes mentioned in the debate of this case; the 1 Jac. 1. c. 4. 3 Jac. 1. c. 5. and 3 Car. 1. c. 2. Of these I think 3 Jac. is nothing to the purpose, but that of 3 Car. is of weight; not that I esteem it a repeal of 1 Jac. but I look on it as explanatory of it, and without which the former statute cannot be put in execution.

Now upon the statute of 1 Jac. (taking the first and last part together, as we must do to make a reasonable construction) I am of opinion that the party so educated has, notwithstanding, a capacity to inherit and take, for particular purposes, and that the statute does not induce an absolute disability, and that the construction will be the same in the case of a fee-simple as of a fee-tail. I do not say he is to be master of the estate, but thus much he must have, a power to transmit the inheritance to the heir. This is as to the case of a descent. In the case of a purchase too I think he has a qualified capacity, for he may purchase for the benefit of the heir, as one attainted does for the benefit of the crown; and in both cases, that of a descent, and that of purchase, the estate will vest, and the profits only be forfeited during the disability.

And it is no objection to say, that the statute is silent as to the profits where they are to go, for I take it such a provision was not necessary, since this being a publick offence, they will of course enure to the benefit of the crown. Ante pag.

Roper's case is of no consequence, for that was upon the 11 & 12 W. 3. c. 4. which is penned in a different manner from our statute: neither is Lord Delaware's case at all to the purpose, for there the disability was absolute for life.

But here it is objected that the offender for and in respect of himself is absolutely disabled, so that he was to be punished as much as possible, only the heir was not to be involved in the guilt. To which I answer, That the true end of the statute was, not to punish the persons of those who received this foreign education, but it was to prevent the influence they would otherwise have, if the estate should be continued for their benefit. And it is no objection to say, that the offender may defeat the crown of the profits by his alienation, for is not this the same with many other cases of forfeitures? and what reason is there to take more care of the crown in this case than any other? or what greater danger is there in having a capacity to take a future estate, than in being allowed to hold a present one, which I do not perceive it is contended will be absolutely taken from him by this statute. The heir it is true cannot enter, living the ancestor.

cestor. But this rather proves the necessity of leaving something in the ancestor, till the heir is capable of taking. And surely if it had been designed, that the estate should go over, it would have been so mentioned, as is done in 6 R. 2. about ravishers of women, where there are express words to carry over the estate. But no case can be shewn, where, without express words any estate was carried over from a person who has a possibility of being inheritable. The case of a monk is widely different, for that was always looked on as an absolute death to these purposes, and a disinheritment was never so much as looked for or expected.

Upon the whole my opinion is, that Charles had a sufficient possession and power to suffer a recovery, and this makes an end of the plaintiff's title, be that matter about the life of Philip which way it will; though if it were necessary to give my opinion upon that, I should think the estate could not go over; but must continue for the benefit of him and his issue.

Mr. J. Powys. In a case of so uncommon a nature as this, and of such great difficulty, I think there is no occasion to make any apology for a difference in opinion from any of my brothers.

I shall make four points in this case: 1. Whether under 1 Jac. any, and what estate vested in Charles or Philip. 2. What alteration has been made by the subsequent statute. 3. What is the effect of the recoveries. And 4. Of Philip's life.

1. Then, to discharge this case of that which was the ground of the judgment in C. B. I can see no colour in the least to think, that 1 Jac. is any way repealed by the subsequent statutes. The intent of it, it is true, was to prevent the growth of popery, and in this respect it is a law made for the benefit of the publick; and though a foreign popish education is not to be favoured amongst protestants, yet I can never give into any forced construction, which is to carry the words to the utmost severity of the law.

The disabling clause in this statute is different from the 11 & 12 W. 3. which is absolute, but this sub modo only, in respect of himself, and not in respect of his heir, and therefore he must certainly have something: how else can he purchase in respect of his heir? I agree my brother Fortescue's difference between a disability and a forfeiture thus far, where the disability is absolute, but not where it is only partial, as in this case, which likewise distinguishes it from Lord Delaware's case, for that was a total disability for his life.

I think that upon conformity he will not only be discharged of the disability, but likewise be restored to his estate, for the end of the statute is answered, when it has been a means to draw him from the popish religion.

I do not say he is to have any benefit of the estate during the disability: no, the profits shall be forfeited, but only to support the estate for the heir, he shall be taken to have the legal title in him, and I can see no difference where the disability is at common law, and where it is created by act of Parliament. What a confusion would it otherwise create in the case of a fee-simple, or a purchase? In the case of a fee-simple is there any colour to say the Lord by escheat shall have it? he can claim only, when the tenant dies without heir; but here both the tenant and his heir are alive, and to prevent the entry of the Lord the statute takes care of the heir. It cannot be pretended, that a disabled person who may remove that incapacity whenever he pleases, is a person dead without heir. I need not urge the inconvenience in vesting and re-vesting estates, which was never favoured as yet.

It is objected that the laying this inconvenience in the way, is begging the question; for say they, here will be no re-vesting, since the conformity will not restore him to the land. But does not the statute 3 Car. say expressly, he shall be restored to the land? And is not this to be taken as a declaration of what was not sufficiently expressed in the former law? Is not their conformity for the benefit of the publick? and is it not fitting, they should have some encouragement to conform? It is said they will have a future capacity to take any new estate that may come, but that is a rare case for children to meet with any besides their paternal estate.

The case of a monk, so much relied on as a similar case, is nothing to the purpose; for he is dead in law, and has an heir, but our offender can have none whilst he lives. And there too the heir claims under the seisin of the monk, which the heir in our case upon the plaintiff's construction cannot, for they say the ancestor had no seisin at all. Neither is the case of an infant en ventre sa mere at all applicable to this case, for there the person who enters till the birth is undoubtedly heir, and claims as such from him that last died seised, but here there is no such intermediate time as between the death of the father and the birth of the child, for the party who is to take is alive all the while, and in esse at the instant of the descent.

There

There is no danger of the freehold's being in abeyance, because as I take it the legal estate vests in the offender. I would put the case that a man has two sons by two venters, the eldest of which receives a foreign education, and survives the father and dies, must the brother of the half blood inherit to him? The law says no: but yet upon the plaintiff's construction he must, if the eldest son never had any thing, for then the other will claim immediately from the father.

There are many instances where absolute words in a statute have received a qualified construction. The statute of Westm. 2. says the fine ipso jure sit nullus, and yet 2 Inst. 336. it is held to be a discontinuance, for which before the 11 H. 7. the party was put to his formedon.

But when the argument that the profits only are forfeited prevails, there arises a sub-point, who shall have the profits? I say the King shall have them. 1. Because he is concerned to see the law executed. 2. There are goods in the case as well as lands, and who can have them but the King? 3. This is an offence of a publick nature, contra coronam et dignitatem suam, and that makes the difference between the case Woodward v. Fox, and the case of tithes, where a private interest is concerned. 4. Those will be like derelict lands which go to the crown when there can be no owner found.

2. I come in the second place to consider what alterations are made in 1 Jac. by the statute of 3 Car.

One great end and view of this statute is said to be, to reach estates vested before the offence, but there can be nothing in that, the former statute taking in both cases, for the words have and enjoy go to estates vested, and it is absurd to think the parliament would trust them with a present estate, who were unfit to take a future one, which is suffering them to fight in armour. The true and main design of this latter statute was to lay a heavier punishment on the parent or guardian sending the youth abroad.

The statute 3 Geo. protects protestant purchasers of popish estates, and without doubt if Charles had sold this estate the purchaser would have been secure against that statute.

3. The effect of the common recoveries need not now be considered, because having the estate in him, as I hold he had, that is sufficient to exclude the reversioner.

H. Philip

4. Philip, who claims before the Dutchess, is still alive and keeps up the estate tail ; so the reversioner is too soon : he is issue in tail, and a formedon must lay that there is none. In the case of Pye v. Gorge, 1 July 1709. before Lord Cowper, on the 11 & 12 W. 1 P. Wms. 128, 3. c. 4. which has the same disabling words, it was held that notwithstanding a default in not taking the oaths, yet the estate would vest in the party.

I think upon the whole, the lessor of the plaintiff has no title, and consequently the judgment of C. B. ought to be affirmed.

Lord Chief Justice Pratt. This case depends upon the construction of the statute of 1 Jac. 1. c. 4. And as the offence strikes both at our Civil and Religious establishment, this is in every respect causa religionis et reipublicae ; and being so, if it be capable of two constructions, we ought to put that upon it, which will tend the most effectually to prevent the mischief.

It is notorious that the reformation, which was begun in Henry the Eighth's time, was, by the unwearied diligence of the priests and jesuits, very much broke in upon and interrupted, so that it cannot be said to have been compleat till the reign of Queen Elizabeth, who had many and great struggles with the papists. The first attempt to restrain them within due bounds was by very gentle and easy methods, but it was soon found that these signified nothing ; private meetings were had all over the kingdom, to instruct and confirm people in the principles of their religion ; and therefore it was found necessary, by a severer law, to make it high treason for any one to reconcile another to the see of Rome : but even a little experience of this law shewed it to be an unequal remedy, and therefore the next step was to banish the priests, and now every body hoped the work was done.

But the priests, though by this law they were many of them obliged to leave the kingdom, were nevertheless still as active in finding out means to ruin the the protestant religion ; and for that purpose erected seminaries abroad for the education of the English youth ; and to put a stop to this mischief, the statute we are now upon was made, which if we do not construe it in a large sense, will dwindle into no remedy, and then all is at sea again.

The clause on which the question arises is this, speaking of a foreign education, it enacts, "That every such person so passing or being sent beyond the seas to any such intent, shall, as in respect of him or herself only, and not to or in respect of any of his heirs or posterity, be disabled and made incapable to inherit, purchase, take, have or enjoy any manors, &c."

VOL. I.

Now

Now on the plaintiff's side, they say, the statute induces an absolute disability to take the estate. The defendants say the estate vests, and nothing is forfeited but the perception of profits. The different consequences of these constructions are obvious. The first overthrows the recovery, and the life of Philip, and bears down all before it. The other opposes both to the plaintiff's title, and vindicates the method of cutting off the reversion.

And upon this clause I am of opinion, that the latter construction is not proper, nor will at all answer the end of the statute.

1. It is against the words, by making him capable, who the act says shall be disabled.

2. By this all the significant words of the statute are rejected, for there will be no need of the words inherit, purchase, take, because the word enjoy alone will do the business of the profits: and it is inconsistent with the honour and wisdom of the legislature to make use of such known legal expressions, when at the same time they are to have no influence in the construction of the statute.

3. When the profits only are designed to be forfeited, the parliament speak out, as in the 3 Jac. 1. c. 5. in relation to offenders against that law: and there likewise they take care to dispose of the profits during the disability, which provisions are not in our law; and therefore it is not to be imagined, that the same thing was intended in both. And surely if at the time of making the act of 3 Jac. it had been designed to punish the offender against 1 Jac. in the same manner, there would have been some declaration or other to that purpose.

4. The forfeiture of the profits is idle, and comes to nothing; for if the estate vests, the party may alien, suffer a recovery, give it away, or settle it in other hands secretly for his own benefit, and then the provision of the statute will be ineffectual. And how can it be imagined, the parliament would apply so loose a remedy to a growing mischief they were so much alarmed at?

It is objected, that this is a qualified disability. As to that, I think it was truly said, that the latter words import a negative, it is but expressio eorum qua tacite insunt; the import of which is only, that whatever difficulty could regularly arise to the heir from the ancestor's not being seised, that shall be no objection to the heir, who who shall be able to make out his title through one that was never seised.

Consider the method of debating in parliament. Somebody might object, that possibly it would be taken to the prejudice of the heir, by saying the ancestor should be disabled; to which it might be answered, that though it was not necessary to declare the contrary, yet for the satisfaction of ignorant men there could be no harm in putting in something to that purpose.

Lord Delaware's case is strong in point, for if that absolute disability would not prevent the descent, there is no colour to say this disqualified disability shall.

But say they, if he himself is absolutely disabled to purchase, what will become of the heir? As to that, I think the parliament designed he should not purchase at all, for it follows after, that all estates, terms, &c. for the benefit of such a person shall be void: and are not these to be taken into the construction of the statute? Shall we reject all this, and say it signifies nothing?

Well, but here is a disability to take personal estate as well as real, and what has the heir to do with that? Why nothing at all, and those words were only thrown in ex abundanti, for a disability to take personal estate as to himself, is as strong as to take it likewise against the heir.

The heir will not be hurt in this case, because according to Shelley's case it is sufficient if the ancestor might have been seised.

And as to the objection about the difficulty of being restored on conformity, I think there is none at all; because I hold, that he is not to be restored. The statute does not say so, and therefore I do not see how we are warranted to give him his estate again. No one will conform till he suffers, nor then neither unless he sees he is like to suffer further. But cannot the parliament restore him by sufficient words? Surely they have power to vary the law, according to the Prince's case, which reduces this part of the case to this dilemma. Either he was, or was not designed to be restored. If he was, it may easily be done by force of the statute: if he was not, then the objection of difficulty in doing it is vanished.

It is objected that the remainder-man cannot enter, living Philip, who is issue in tail. But I take it, a disabled person is to be looked on as not in esse; the current of authorities is so, and none to the contrary, but that if the party cannot take, the estate must go over. If the eldest son dies leaving his wife privement enfeint with a son, the second son enters, but on the birth of the other the estate is brought back: and so does the remainder-man or reversioner where the issue in tail is not born at the death of the tenant in tail. In the case of a fee-simple it shall escheat, and be divested out of the lord on the birth of a posthumous heir. If it was the case of a purchase it would go over, and could never be brought back, as on a limitation to the heir of a person living at the determination of the particular estate, for he who takes by purchase must be in esse at the time the estate ought to vest. But it is otherwise in the case of a descent, for there he does not claim any new estate, but the old one, which his ancestor enjoyed before him.

[379] Suppose a man has two sons, the eldest an alien and the other a denizen; in that case the estate shall go to the youngest, because the other is disabled, and so is the case of Collingwood v. Pace. In the case of an attainder it shall escheat for the disability. Co. Litt. 13. And in the case of profession it goes over as on a natural death. 2 Roll. Abr. 150, 415. And the true reason of carrying over the estate in all these cases is, to prevent the freehold's being in abeyance, which is a reason why in the present case the reversioner must enter, else there can be no good tenant to the præcipe, which the law requires of every estate.

It is said that the law suffers abeyances in some cases, as in that of a parson, or where houses or lands are annexed to offices; but are not those cases of absolute necessity?

I can see no reason why in this case the estate cannot be brought back as easily as in the instances I have before put.

My brother Fortescue has so fully pressed that matter about the statute of 1 Jac. being in force, and unimpeached by 3 Car. that I shall not need to go over it again: nor do I find my brothers who are of a contrary opinion rely much upon that.

To conclude therefore, I am of opinion, that under 1 Jac. the offender takes nothing; which construction obviates the recovery, and the life of Philip, and removes every thing that stands in the way of the Dutcheſs: and the judgment below being against her, I conceive it is erroneous, and ought to be reversed.

P. 1526.
Skin. 533.

But the court being divided, you are now to consider what is further to be done in this cause.

Whereupon

Whereupon the counsel for the defendant in error proposed that it might be adjourned into the Exchequer Chamber for the opinion of all the Judges; which was opposed by the counsel for the plaintiff, who said that there were no instances where upon a division in that court, to which the cause was adjourned by writ of error, there have been ever any adjournments into the Exchequer Chamber: and the reason of that, they said, was that it would be absurd to ask the Judges of C. B. whether they would advise this court to reverse a judgment given by themselves.

What is to be done where the court are equally divided upon a writ of error.

Then the counsel for the plaintiff, Mr. Solicitor General, Mr. Reeve and Mr. Strange, being asked what method they desired it to be put into; they said, that as the defendants were in possession of a judgment of another court, they could not contend, that upon a division of this court, the judgment of C. B. ought to be reversed. But what they insisted upon was, that this cause might be adjourned into parliament, that their Lordships might receive the direction of that great court, what judgment should be entered in this cause.

N. B. This was my own argument, the other counsel not being prepared.

That causes of a civil and criminal nature have been originally commenced in parliament, they said was a fact too notorious to be denied; and therefore they forbore troubling the court with any instances of that nature, but would proceed to shew, that as the parliament had taken consue of causes in the first instance, so they had been applied to for their direction: nay they had interposed of their own accord in cases where inferior courts had been divided, or thought the point too difficult for their determination.

Their first citation was a dictum of my Lord Nottingham's in the Duke of Norfolk's case, where he intimates, that there may be an adjournment propter difficultatem out of a court of law into parliament.

Braet. lib. 1. c. 2. speaking of the stability of the English laws, that they are not to be altered but by parliament, has these words: " Si autem aliqua nova et in consuetudinem emerferint, et quae prius usitata non fuerint in regno, si tamen similia evenerint, per simile iudicentur, cum bona sit occasio a similibus procedere ad similia. Si autem talia nunquam prius evenerint, et obscurum et difficile sit eorum iudicium, tunc ponantur iudicia in respectum usque ad magnam curiam, ubi ibi per consensum curiae terminentur."

Regist. 124. b. there is a writ in these words: " Quia volumus quod querela pendens inter te (one of the parties to whom it is directed) et C. et alios de quadam transgressione coram nobis et

1 E. 3. 7. a. after stating the case, and what had been said upon it, the book goes on: Et puis vient breve quod si difficultas aliqua intersit, le record soit maund en parlement, et adjurner les parties la xv Pas. et dit fuit al Vicount que il ust les deniers a meme le jour, Cotton's Records 30.

My Lord Coke in 4 Inst. 68. takes notice, that at common law before the 14 E. 3. delays of judgment were provided against in five manners, and one of the instances he is pleased to give is, by the King's writ, comprehending, quod si difficultas aliqua intersit, the record should be certified into parliament, and to adjourn the parties to be there at a certain day. Si obscurum et difficile sit judicium, ponantur judicia in respectum usque magnam curiam. And of this says he, there was an excellent record in the parliament holden at Westminster the Tuesday after the translation of Thomas a Becket.

The last citation was the case of Nevil v. Stroud, in 2 Sid. 168. which begins with telling us, that the case had been often argued in C. B. and by them delivered into parliament, who took order therein. Which they relied on as a stronger case than the present, for that being in C. B. where the cause originally commenced, it was a case within the same measure with all other Exchequer Chamber cases.

But if the court was not inclined to proceed in that extraordinary manner, then they said, that rather than undergo the delay and expence of an argument in the Exchequer Chamber, they were content to go up to the House of Peers under the disadvantage of the judgment's being affirmed in this court. And if there was any difficulty with the court as to affirming a judgment upon a division, where the party consents, they put it upon the other side to shew the expediency of such a method.

'Then the counsel for the defendants being called upon, they declared, that they did not desire to have the judgment affirmed. Which obliged the plaintiff's counsel to go on and argue for an affirmance.

They

They said, they had inquired into the practice of the Exchequer Chamber erected by the statute of Eliz. for correcting the judgments of this court, where upon a division of four and four the judgment is affirmed, as was done in the great case of Dighton v. Grenvil.

They likewise relied on it as an argument for affirmance, that there were no instances of adjournments into the Exchequer Chamber upon a writ of error, which in a great measure proves the practice of affirming a judgment upon a division; since there is as much likelihood of a division upon a writ of error, as in any other case, where causes have been so adjourned.

So is the practice of the House of Lords: and though that may be said to depend on their practice of putting the question only to reverse; yet that shews the sense of that house, that without a majority for reversing, the judgment ought to be affirmed.

Many judgments they said had been affirmed, even where the whole court must have been of opinion, that the judgment was erroneous: it is a rule that the party shall not assign for error any matter that is for his advantage, as too long an essoin, or the granting aid where it ought not, and yet that is error in the proceedings. 7 H. 6. 21. d. And the court must see and adjudge it to be so, but yet because they are not told of it by a proper person, the judgment shall be affirmed; and what is that but to affirm an erroneous judgment? And many instances of this nature are put in 5 Co. 39. b. and 8 Co. Beecher's case. [382]

If the defendant in error pleads a release; and it is found with him: this is a confession of the errors, but yet in Aston's Ent. 339. the entry is, that the judgment be affirmed.

In the case of Jones v. White on a trial at bar, Mich. 4 Geo. Ante 68. B. R. the question was, whether the coroner's inquest could be read, in a suit between party and party, the present Lord Chancellor, and Mr. J. Powys, were of opinion it might, Eyre and Pratt Justices were of a contrary opinion, but Pratt J. after delivering his opinion, did so far retract, as to consent it should be read in that case. And in the case of the common councilmen of London, the present Chancellor did consent to discharge a rule, that the parties might not be hung up for ever, and there too was an equal division of the court.

But if the party was not intitled to demand an affirmance in this case, yet they said it might be done upon their consent, consensus tollit errorem, and no injury was done them, if they were willing it should be so.

Upon the whole therefore they submitted it to the court, that this was not a proper case for the Exchequer Chamber, that it might go by adjournment into parliament. Or if that method was thought impracticable, then they were willing to make this case an exception out of the general rule, quod judicium redditur in invitum, by their consent that the judgment given below should be affirmed.

Whereupon the court took time to consider of it, and in Michaelmas term following Pratt C. J. delivered the resolution of the court.

It was our misfortune the last term to differ in opinion, and I find we continue still under that difficulty; so that now we are to consider, what is to be done upon this division, for the cause must not be hung up for ever.

Vide Seld. 3 vol.

By the statute 14 E. 3. it is provided, that whereas causes have been delayed for difficulty and division in opinions, therefore to remedy the delays occasioned thereby, there shall in every Parliament be chosen a prelate, two earls and two barons, who by good advice of others, are to give judgment; or if they cannot determine it, that then the record shall be brought into Parliament, who shall make a final accord, and the Judges before whom the cause is depending, shall proceed to give judgment pursuant to their directions.

But we can find no footsteps for hundreds of years of any such appointment of a prelate, two earls, and two barons. So that it is to no purpose to think of putting the parties into that method. But into some method we must put them, that there be not a defect of justice.

Now in the first place we are all of opinion, that it is improper to adjourn this cause into the Exchequer Chamber. We have caused strict search to be made, and can find no instances of adjournments upon writs of error (2), nor can there be any colour for such a practice, it being absurd for us to ask the opinions of Judges who have before given judgment in the cause.

(2) As to adjournments into the Exchequer Chamber by the court in which the action is commenced, vide Co. Litt. 71. b. 72. a. 4 Inst. 110. 118. Warrens v. Smith, 2 Bull. 136.

We are asked in the next place to adjourn this cause into Parliament. As to this we are all of opinion, that we have no power so to do. It would be the highest presumption in us, of our own accord to attempt it, without the King's writ. If such an one had been brought us, we might perhaps have gone into such an expedient, but the parties have not thought fit to purchase such an one.

N. B. We who were counsel for the Dutchess, did not think it advisable to get such a writ: because all that the Lords could have done upon it would be, to direct the King's Bench what judgment to enter, after which a writ of error would lie in Parliament in the common form: so we chose rather to have the judgment affirmed upon us, that we might have it determined at once in the House of Lords. Lill. Ent. 524.

But then the plaintiffs in error move us for an affirmance: as to that you see the court is divided, and there can be no rule: but in this case, because the party against whom it is to be affirmed, is desirous and willing it should be so, we are all of opinion that upon his consent the judgment of the Common Pleas may be affirmed.

In error from C. B. into B. R. where the Judges are divided, judgment may be affirmed by consent of the plaintiff in error.

But lest this be brought in future ages as a precedent of an affirmance upon a division, we direct the officer to make the rule special in this case, on recital of the difference in opinion amongst the Judges, and the consent of the party.

Whereupon I moved on behalf of the Dutchess, that in regard this was not an affirmance upon the merits, the court would give some directions as to the costs. But they refused to do any thing in that, and said, it must take the common course of an affirmance. But the defendants in error were afraid to take any costs, whereupon the judgment of affirmance was entered up in common form, but without costs. And upon a consultation we were all of opinion, that it should not be a special entry according to the rule, because then we should lie open to an objection in the House of Lords, that we were striving to reverse a judgment, which by the record appeared to have been affirmed by our consent.

Afterwards the 23d, 24th and 25th of February 1720, this cause was heard in the House of Lords, where all the Judges were ordered to attend, and give their opinions: the Chief Justice and Fortescue were for reversing, and the other ten, who would not say that the recoveries were good, were nevertheless of opinion, that the Dutchess could not enter during the life of Philip. And the house thinking that to be a material objection, affirmed the judgments given in the courts below. Quare tamen, for that seems to be the weakest point in the cause; and how it is possible to distinguish between the recoveries and the life of Philip I cannot conceive, for if Philip may take, then must Charles have the same capacity of taking; and on the other hand, if Charles could not take, so as to enable him to suffer the recoveries, then the same objection will go to Philip also.

TWO people put in bail in feigned names, and because there were no such persons, they could not be prosecuted for personating bail on the statute 21 Jac. 1. c. 26. So the court ordered them and the attorney to be set in the pillory, which was done accordingly.

Fazakerley. There ought according to Bag's case, 11 Co. 99. to be a summons to appear at such an assembly as has the power of amotion, which is wanting in this case. The summons was not to meet and execute the power as mayor and aldermen, but to join with others in execution of other powers, which they had as a common council: and when they meet in that capacity, they are to be considered as distinct persons from those who upon other occasions meet as the court of mayor and aldermen only. They cannot, when they come together upon a summons to meet only as a common council, divide, and execute other powers. Such clandestine proceedings are never to be allowed, for at this rate any man may be tricked out of his freehold. When an alderman is summoned to the common council, he may think there are only acts of course to be done, and so absent himself; when he would not have failed being there, had he apprehended an act of so great consequence was to be done as the depriving a man of his freehold: nay by this means a few may so contrive it, as to fall upon this business at a time when they find find others who would oppose such arbitrary proceedings may be out of the way. There ought to have been notice of a special meeting, in order to do this act. Dav. 48. a. 3 Bulst. 189. 1 Roll. Rep. 409.

Bootle contra. There could be no special summons for this purpose; because till the assembly was met, it could not be known whether Poulter would appear or not. As to the case in Bulst. that did not appear to be a corporate assembly; and Holt Chief Justice said of it, that it might only be a meeting in their natural capacity, to feast or the like. But this appears to be a corporate assembly: they are assembled in common council. And when they were together, why might they not execute the power they had, without the formal dissolution of that assembly and calling a new one one?

Chief Justice. The powers of the common council, and of the mayor and aldermen, are distinct: the common council can do no acts, unless assembled in that capacity: neither can the mayor and aldermen, unless they met only as such, upon a regular summons for that purpose: as they had distinct authorities, they must be summoned in their distinct capacities: here was no summons to meet as mayor and aldermen only, the consequence of which is, that the acts done by them in that distinct capacity are void. Consider how the case stands; an alderman when he receives a summons to appear at the common council, considers with himself, that they are a great many of them, and probably his single voice will not be wanted, and therefore he stays at home: but when he is summoned to meet with the mayor and other aldermen only, then, says he, there are but twelve of us in all, and therefore my voice and advice (which the others have a right to) may go a great way: besides, the powers lodged in us as a court of mayor and aldermen are of an higher nature than our other powers; and therefore upon both accounts my presence may be necessary, and I will be sure to be there. All this is natural enough, and is it then reasonable the others should proceed to act as mayor and aldermen only, when they come together in common council? What a confusion would this make in the city of London, if when the whole body is got together, they should all of a sudden draw off into different parties, and execute their distinct powers? It weighs nothing with me, that the cause of removal happened sitting that assembly, for they ought to have broke up, and summoned him again to appear before them in their distinct capacity.

Powys Justice accord as to the main, but doubted, because the offence arose sitting that assembly.

Eyre

Eyre Justice. The summons ought to have been of such an assembly only as has power to remove, else it may be liable to the inconvenience of surprize: not that a summons to meet and do any particular act is necessary (1), for that would be endless, but only to meet in their distinct capacity. Incidental powers are in the whole body only, but yet constant experience (and so is Bagg's case) tells us, that if any select power (which if not affirmatively given would be incident of course) is vested in a select number; that is exclusive of the other part of the corporation. A power of making by-laws is incident to every corporation, but yet in many they are made by a select number.

Ante 314.

[387] Fortescue Justice. Being summoned to appear at the common council, which includes the mayor and aldermen, he was consequently summoned to appear before the mayor and aldermen, the whole including every part; and upon this foundation, it seems to me that the removal is well enough.

Afterwards it was spoken to by the Solicitor General and Mr. Willes, who cited Braithwaite's case, 1 Vent. 19. 2 Keb. 488. where the power of removing a common council-man was lodged in the mayor, and such burgessees as had been mayors; and then the return sets out, that a common council assembled such a day, and Braithwaite being summoned did not appear, whereupon he was the same day amoved by the mayor and burgessees, as the charter directs.

To this case it was answered by the Solicitor, That this exception did not appear to have been taken in that case, nor did it appear by the report, that the removal was whilst they were assembled as a common council, but only that it was upon the same day, which might be upon another summons to meet in their distinct capacity. That it was a strange case, wherein the Judges asserted the power of the King and Council to disfranchise members of corporations by their order, and even to pull down the walls of a town; so it might be they went upon such an order,

(1) S. P. per Foster J. in Rex v. Mayor, &c. of Liverpool, 2 Burr. 734. and every body knows matters of prerogative went very high at that time: he said no record of that case was to be found. Et per C. J. I am very glad of it; I can have no regard to any opinion that was given, when Judges were worked up to so extravagant a pitch, as to assert such doctrine.

Adjournatur. And the last day of the term the Chief Justice delivered the opinion of the court, that the removal in this case was not regular, for there should have been a summons for the mayor and aldermen to meet in their distinct capacity.

Peremptory mandamus agard.

Hoyle versus Lord Cornwallis. Pasch. 5 Geo. rot. 309.

ON error e C. B. the writ of inquiry appeared to be executed on the 15th June, which upon looking in the almanack appeared to be Sunday, and it was objected by Reeve, that this is made void by the 29 Car. 2. c. 7.

A writ of inquiry cannot be executed on a Sunday, and the court is bound to look into the almanack, and take notice of it though not specially assigned for error. Fort. 373. S. C. cited post. 1123.

* Strange contra. This objection must take its rise from some clause or other in that statute, for it cannot be pretended that the execution of this writ was void before. At common law things of a much higher nature than this might have been done on a Sunday. Before the statute of 5 Ann. c. 9. a man might have been taken on an escape warrant. Salk. 626. (a) And even now [*388] process of ecclesiastical courts, as citations and the like, may be affixed on a church door, which is a service of those citations. Ibid. 625. A fair might be kept on a Sunday. Cro. Jac. 485. And the hundred was liable for a robbery. The question therefore is, whether there be any words in the statute to reach this case, and I take it, the execution of a writ of inquiry is not such an act, as is, or was designed to be made void by that statute. The words are, "Provided also, that no person or persons on the Lord's day shall serve or execute any writ, process, &c. but that the service of every such writ shall be void to all intents and purposes whatsoever; and the person or persons so serving or executing the same shall be as liable to the suit of the party grieved, as if he had done the same without any writ."

(a) He may be taken now on Sunday where the escape is voluntary, scilicet where it is negligent. Barnes 373. 5 Term Rep. 25.

Smith v. Brouncker
Hans. Rep. 137.

Now it is observable, that there is a very material variance in the penning of the latter part of this clause from the former, for though it at first prohibits the serving or executing any writ upon a Sunday, yet when it comes to limit what effect those proceedings shall have, it only makes the service of such writs void; but does not extend to annul the execution of such writs which are not not to be served upon the party; and by the latter part, which gives remedy to the party grieved, that word service is explained, to extend only to process, which is to be served upon the body or goods of a man: now the nature of executing writs of inquiry is not by any summons to the party, but only a private execution of a power given to the sheriff, which is no injury to the party: he is not grieved by the execution of this writ on a Sunday, any more than if it were any other day. The statute only makes the service of writs void, but this inquiry can by no means be called a service of any writ, and therefore is not made void by the statute. And it will be no answer to say, that by using the word serve or execute both in the former part, it is manifest the Parliament intended to take in one case as well the other, for this being a statute made in restriction of the common law, it is to be construed strictly, and not to be taken by equity.

But if the statute should be thought to extend to this case, yet I apprehend the court is confined to judge only upon the record, and cannot take notice that the 15th of June was a Sunday, unless it had been specially assigned for error; and that the court will not pray in aid of the almanack, in order to reverse a judgment. In 1 Roll. Abr. 524. C. 3. it is held, that if one of the proclamations on a fine be the 7th of June, which is a Sunday, yet unless it appears on the record to be Sunday, the court will not take notice of it, without express averment. And accordingly the constant course has been to assign that matter for error. So 1 Sid. 300. If a writ be returnable at a general return, the court is not obliged to take notice what day of the month it is. Cro. Car. 53. Morris v. Fletcher. There the writ was returnable die Luna prox' post quinden' Hil. and executed 27th of January; and the court would not go out of the record, to inform themselves that the 27th of January was after the return of the writ: so is 9 Co. 66. Mackally's case. 1 Roll. Abr. 525. pl. 14. By the statute of 31 E. 3. the sheriff's turn is required to be held infra mensem post festum Pasche; the defendant justified for an amercia-ment at a court held 18th of April. And though in fact that was within a month after Easter, yet the court refused to look into the almanacks and set it right; and then a fortiori you will not do it in this case, where instead of supporting the judgment the consequence will be to overthrow it. And if the proclamation on a fine (which is the act of the court) shall not be set aside without a special assignment, surely this execution of a writ of enquiry, which is but a ministerial act, an act done out of court, shall not; according to the distinction taken in Mackally's case, where it was held, that though judicial acts done upon a Sunday are void, yet ministerial acts are not.

Rave

Reeve replied. The intent of the statute was to prevent all acts, which are proceedings in a cause, from being done on a Sunday. The words serve and execute are synonymous, so that service in the latter part includes execution also.

I agree the cases are as cited, but they have been denied of late years, for now the calendar is looked upon as part of the law of the land. Salk. 626.

C. J. By dropping the word execute it should seem as if no process was made void but such as is to be served upon the party: to affirm a judgment we will look into the almanack, but I think we are not bound to do it to reverse one.

Adjournatur. And at another day all the court were of opinion, that the execution of the writ on a Sunday was void, and that they were bound to take notice of it, without being specially assigned for error; and accordingly would have reversed the judgment, but the counsel desiring to have time to apply to C. B. it went over, and afterwards the Common Pleas was applied to, and refused to amend, and I never heard any more of it,

Where the plaintiff in error pleads to the scire facias, there shall be execution if it goes against him, but the writ of error shall proceed.

STRANGE moved to set aside an execution taken out upon a judgment in a scire facias quare executio non, because they had assigned their errors before: and cited Heath v. Street in this court, Trin. 2 Geo. where Parker C. J. laid it down as a rule, that if the plaintiff in error comes in at any time before execution, and assigns errors, proceedings ought to be stayed on the scire facias, because they have had the effect of it in bringing the party into court.

Upon this it was referred to the master, and upon motion for his report Reeve contra agreed the case of Heath v. Street as cited, but that it was only an extrajudicial opinion, and argued the delay that would follow, if the plaintiff in error be at liberty to spin out the scire facias to the last.

The master reported an old rule of court, that if the party pleads to the scire facias, and it goes against him execution may be sued out, but that the writ of error shall go on notwithstanding. Whereupon the court in consideration of the delay established it as a standing rule for the future, that if upon the return of the scire scire facias the plaintiff assigns his errors, then all farther proceedings shall be stayed upon it; but where he chuses to stand out upon pleadings to the scire facias, execution shall go if it be adjudged against him (1).

The Case of Mayo and Parsons.

BY the statute 12 Ann. st. 1. c. 2. it is provided, That if any malt happens to be burnt after the duty paid, the proprietor may apply to the next quarter-sessions, who are to adjust the quantum, and give him a certificate which intitles him to receive back the duty, Mayo and Parsons were two brewers, and had a great quantity of malt that had paid duty burnt in the late fire at Wapping; but the sessions being then very near, they could not remove the rubbish so as to make an estimate of their loss before the sessions was over. The following sessions they made their application, where the quantum of the loss was adjusted; but then the entry of the act of sessions goes on, that the justices being of opinion, that the jurisdiction was given only to the next quarter-sessions after the fire, and there having one quarter-sessions intervened, therefore they for that reason deny the certificate.

What acts of the sessions are removeable by certiorari, and what not.
12 An. st. 2. c. 2.

Serjeant Darnall moved for a certiorari to remove these proceedings, and cited the case of Limelhouse, where an entry of a refusal to proceed on an appeal upon pretence of its being too late was brought up and quashed. But Mr. Attorney General shewing cause against the certiorari objected, that this was no order of sessions, and a certiorari goes only to fetch up their orders: and of this opinion was the court, and denied the certiorari; and Eyre J. remembered the case of the Bishop of St. David's, where an entry that he had prayed a prohibition for such and such reasons, et ei non conceditur, was held to be no judgment, so as to be looked into and corrected upon a writ of error.

produced an affidavit that he was a person unacquainted with the methods of legal proceedings, and that soon after the arrest he applied himself to Mr. Bennett, a gentleman of the bar, who (taking it to be an arrest out of a superior court) told him the process could not be returnable till the next term, against which he must employ an attorney to put in bail, and receive a declaration: under which advice he acquiesced, and heard nothing further of the cause, till a little before the term, that notice was given of the execution of a writ of inquiry: and therefore this being a plain surprize, he hoped the court would not order the Judge below to give judgment, but let him in to try the merits of the cause, upon his proposal to bring the money recovered (which was considerable) into court. To this it was answered by the plaintiff's counsel, that there appeared no irregularity on their part; and upon this the question arose as to what power the Judge of an inferior court had in cases of this nature.

And as to that the whole court agreed, that the Judge of an inferior court could not grant a new trial, for this is a power that even in superior courts is not of any great standing, the first instance of any new trial being in Stiles; and besides, the case of an inferior court had the same objection to it as there is to granting a new trial after a trial at bar, viz. because it will be tried the second time before the same Judge.

But they all held clearly, that for matters of irregularity, where the proceedings were contrary to the practice and rules of the court, the Judge of an inferior court might set aside a judgment; but whether he should be allowed to exercise his discretion, in setting aside judgments, where the plaintiff was regular, was a question they said deserved consideration.

But they waived the discussion of that point, by saying there was a middle way in the case, which was to inquire into the surprize; and intimated to the Judge, that the refusal of the plaintiff to try the merits, upon having the money brought into court, was some evidence of fraud: and therefore they gave leave to the Judge to examine, whether there was any fraud or surprize, and to set aside the judgment if he found any.

Upon inquiry below, the officers swore, that when they arrested the defendant he asked them by what process, and they told him it was an action in the sheriff's court.

This having destroyed the pretence of surprize, the Judge below refused to set aside the judgment (1).

Hil. 6 Geo. N^o 30.

Where the defendant sets out a bad title to the office, the court will give judgment on the plea, as importing a confession of the usurpation. Where a charter appoints a particular method of electing a mayor, and directs that he shall take an oath to execute the office for a year, and until another shall be chosen; and a subsequent charter after reciting the former manner and time of election, and of CONTINUANCE in office UNDER IT, and that the corporation had petitioned to alter quatenus modum et tempus eligendi of the mayor, and then confirming all their former rights and privileges, abolishes the former manner eligendi nominandi et appointuandi the mayor, and appoints his election to be in a different manner and upon a different day, pro uno anno integro tunc proxime sequen'; the right of holding over is thereby taken away.

INformation in natura de quo warranto for usurping the office of mayor of Bodmyn.

The defendant by his plea makes title under two charters, one 11th of March 5 Eliz. whereby the inhabitants were incorporated by the name of mayor and burgesses, and after appointing who shall be the first members of the corporation, it goes on and provides for the election of others on their deaths; and as to the mayor it is provided, that on Michaelmas day in every year the mayor, burgesses and common council, or the major part of them, shall assemble and nominate two capital burgesses, out of whom the inhabitants are to chuse one to be mayor, who being so chosen should take an oath to execute the office of mayor for the next year and till another should be chosen.

The other charter was 30th April 36 Eliz. wherein the Queen reciting the former manner and time of election and the continuance in the office under such election, and reciting further that the corporation had petitioned her, quatenus she would alter modum et tempus eligendi of the mayor; therefore she confirming all their former rights and privileges, appoints the election to be for the future by the mayor, common council, and town clerk, on the 24th of September pro uno anno integro tunc proxime sequen'. And then he avers, that as well before as since the second charter, the usage has been, for the mayor to hold over till another was chosen, and that he being elected mayor served for a year, and the town clerk being then dead, and no new one chosen, there could be no new election of a mayor; et eo warranto he claims to hold the office of mayor till another shall be elected and sworn, and traverses the usurpation.

The Attorney for the crown prays oyer of the last charter, which being set out, there appears a further clause, whereby the Queen abolishes all the former manner eligendi, nominandi et appointuandi of the mayor; and then takes issue, that since the charter of 36 Eliz. there has been no such usage of holding over: which goes down to trial, and is found for the King.

It was now moved in arrest of judgment, that this was an immaterial issue, because it not being a corporation by prescription, the title to the office must depend upon the charter, and not upon any usage within time of memory; and that this is worse than most cases of immaterial issues, for they are often good if found one way, and bad the other, as solvit ante diem is good if found for the defendant. But here the finding for the King can neither destroy, nor could a verdict for the defendant have established his right, because his right does not depend on any usage inconsistent with the charter, but must stand or fall by the charter itself.

An issue upon the usage under a charter of 36 Eliz. is immaterial.

And without much argument the court was clear in opinion, that this was an issue totally immaterial. But then the question arose, what the court should do in this case, whether they were to award a repleader, or laying the replication out of the case proceed to give judgment on the defendant's plea.

And for a repleader it was argued by Mr. Solicitor General, that the court could not give judgment on the plea, for every judgment must be either, 1. On an issue in fact, found by verdict. 2. Issue in law, on demurrer. 3. Nil dicit. Or, 4. Confession. 1. As to the first, it is admitted there is no good issue in fact, and consequently no good verdict to found the judgment upon. 2. Here is no issue in law, for want of a demurrer. 3. It cannot be by Nil dicit, for the defendant has pleaded. 4. The only question is, whether this plea can be taken to be a confession of the usurpation; and I take it, it cannot, for though an usurpation is charged, yet it is so far from being confessed, that he expressly denies it in his traverse; and relies upon it that he has a good right: he admits the user, but not the usurpation, the charge upon him is that he has exercised this office without lawful authority; it is true, says he, I have exercised this office, but

I insist that I had a good authority so to do; and now will any body say, this is a confession of the usurpation?

But then it is objected, that if the title set out is ill in point of law, then the admission of the user is a tacit admission of the usurpation. To this I answer, 1. That the title is good in law under the two charters, taking them together. By the first charter the mayor being elected by the inhabitants on Michaelmas-day is to hold for a year and till another is chosen. The second charter which was made to alter the tempus et modum eligendi only, says he shall be chosen by a select number and upon 24th September. But it does not meddle with the right of holding over; on the contrary it expressly confirms all their former rights and privileges, of which this of holding over was one. And it will be hard to say, that an alteration in the manner of electing only, shall take away the former right which the officer when elected had in the office, especially in a point which tends so much to the preservation of the body corporate.

2. But if the plea should be ill in point of law, yet the court cannot give judgment that it is so, till it comes properly before them. If they may, then whenever a vicious plea is put in, the court may without the party's answer or demurrer give judgment upon it immediately; and that will be the case here, for now the replication is out of the case, and we stand before the court only upon the information and the plea. In 1 Lev. 32. Serjeant v. Fairfax the issue was held immaterial, and the defendant's plea a naughty plea, but yet the court did not give judgment upon it, but awarded a repleader.

Pengelly Serjeant contra. The defendant in his plea has made no good title to this office, for the second charter is what he must stand or fall by, and in that there is no provision for holding over.

But say they, in the first charter there is, and that continues in force as to every thing in which it is not altered by the subsequent charter.

The force of this depends upon that question, whether the second charter is not the entire rule to go by as to the office of mayor. And that it is, is plain from the clause which abolishes all the former method of election, and if the former method of election be abolished, surely an incidental right under such election will be gone also. The right of election is transferred to other persons, and can there be a duration under an election, when the foundation of that holding over is gone? Pro uno anno integra integrò is the same as if tantum had been added, and the acceptance of the charter is general, without any reservation of the former right of holding over. 1 Vent. 297. 2 Mod. 95.

And as the plea is ill, we take it judgment may be given upon it, for he has confessed the user; and as to the traverse of the usurpation, that is so immaterial, that in Sir Peter Delme's case, and the case of Honiton, it was held, the crown could not take issue upon such a traverse. Whoever admits a user, confesses at the same time that he is guilty of an usurpation, unless he makes a title to the franchise; as in the common case of a justification in trespass or for words, where it amounts to no justification in law, judgment may be given upon the confession. 2 Roll. Abr. 98. pl. 2. 99. pl. 1. 3. Cr. Eliz. 228. 214. 22 Ed. 4. 46. b. Salk. 173.

Mr. Solicitor General replied. The corporation could not do any otherwise than accept the charter in general, for it cannot be accepted in part, or with qualifications. I agree tantum is implied in charters of original creation, but not in charters of confirmation.

Chief Justice. We are moved on behalf of the defendant, that we will grant a repleader: that is, in other words, that we should give this cause a further delay, whilst he is holding over all the while. Now consider, that if we should grant it, the defendant cannot mend his case (1): for the plea will stand, and after the formality of a demurrer we must give judgment upon the goodness or badness of the plea. The Attorney for the crown does not pray a repleader, neither would the granting one do him any good, for we cannot better his case, but must rest it upon the demurrer. And therefore as it will answer no good purpose either way, we certainly will not grant a repleader, if there be a more expeditious way of coming to the end of the cause; and I think there is, for if the plea be ill, I am of opinion it amounts to a confession of the usurpation, and that is warrant enough to ground our judgment upon.

Now the validity of the defendant's title, as he makes it in his plea, depends upon the question, whether the right of holding over subsists under the second charter. And I hold it does not; for it is very observable, that the second charter where it recites the former, takes express notice of the clause for holding over; and then when it comes and abolishes all the former method of election, and appoints it to be in another manner, and that the mayor shall continue in for a year, it cannot be imagined but that this right of holding over was intended to be abolished also. Suppose the second charter had said, that the mayor shall continue in for three quarters of a year; will any body say, that the reservation of their former privileges should intitle him to hold on for the other quarter under the old charter; I believe no body will think so; I think this is not to be distinguished from the case of an ill justification in trespass, and therefore as the plea is ill, and contains no title to the franchise, I am of opinion, we may give judgment upon it, as confessing an usurpation.

(1) Vide Rex v. Roger Philips, affirmed and explained by Lord Burr. 302. this doctrine con- Mansfield, See also Cowp. 510.

Vide Jones v. Bodinham, Salk. 173. and the cases there cited, and Stapleton v. Haydon, ib.

Powys Justice. I am of the same opinion, for if we should grant a repleader, I do not see how we can have any new light in the cause.

Eyre Justice. If the defendant's plea had confessed the usurpation, I should think it proper enough to give judgment upon the plea: but I do not think any more is confessed by it than the user. The second charter it is plain was made only for particular purposes in relation to the election, but meddles not with the duration in the office; and therefore I can never agree, that any affirmative words in the charter can take away so great a privilege as that of holding over is, and a privilege too that may often serve to prevent the extinction of the corporation; especially when it provides that all the former rights of the corporation, not altered by the subsequent charter, shall still continue. And as to the clause of abolition, that is expressly confined to the authority, form and manner eligendi, but not a word of any right tenendi.

I think he is not a new mayor absolutely, but as to the right of holding over it subsists in him under the former charter; the consequence of which is, that he has confessed no usurpation, and then no judgment can be given against him upon the plea.

Fortescue Justice. The defendant cannot mend his case, because the plea is good in form, though not in fact; which is a distinction always taken into the doctrine of repleaders: and of this opinion was Holt Chief Justice, in the case of Jones v. Bodinham, Salk. 1. (a) where he said, that if the fact be admitted, there shall be no repleader, but a judgment upon the confession.

(a) This citation seems to be a mistake, as Jones v. Bodinham contains no such point. The case alluded to appears to be that of Jones v. Bodinham cited supra.

The case alluded to appears to be that of Jones v. Bodinham cited supra.

Here

Here the defendant admits the user, and then the usurpation is a consequence of law, and that is the reason why it is not traversable. Every justification, to make it a perfect one, must both confess and avoid; and where it does not do the latter, the confession stands.

As to the merits of the plea, I think the power of holding over is gone upon the second charter; for the modus eligendi takes in all the circumstances of the election, and the duration in the office is one of those.

Besides, as the day of election is altered, there can be now no holding over under the old charter, for that only empowers him to do it from Michaelmas-day; but then what right has he to hold over from the 24th of September till that time? I am of opinion that judgment may be given immediately.

I opposed this, because he had been guilty of an escape, and therefore intitled to no favour, but he ought to lie till he has tried it by proviso. Et per curiam, He is not indeed proper to pray a favour, but it would be hard he should lie by till you think fit to try the cause; for it is not to be supposed one who cannot find bail should be able to bring it on by proviso. H. an obligee of such a bond, knowing of this, agrees with A. that the bond shall bear an increase of 1 per cent. interest. Many years after A. having failed, H. brings his bill against the executor of B. to compel him to redeem the bond, and held that he shall recover. 1 Will. Rep. 68a. 2 Eq. Ca. Abr. 167. pl. 14. 630. pl. 2. S. C.

THE defendant's testator was partner with Sir Stephen Evance; and upon breaking up the partnership it was agreed between them, that all joint bonds by them entered into should be discharged by Sir Stephen only; who had an allowance made him for that purpose.

The plaintiff was a bond creditor of the partners, and some time after the dissolution of the partnership applied himself to Sir Stephen Evance for the money; upon which they two came to an agreement, that the bond, which before carried 5 l. per cent. should for the future stand out at 6 l. per cent. and some interest at the rate of 6 l. per cent. was paid accordingly.

Thus it stood when Sir Stephen Evance broke, against whom there was a commission of bankruptcy, and the plaintiff came in and had his dividend; and now brings his bill against the defendant, who is the surviving executor of the other partner, to discover assets, and compel him to redeem the bond.

The defendant by his answer confesses assets, but relies on the notoriety of the dissolution of the partnership, and the agreement as to bond creditors, of which the proofs had affected the plaintiff with notice, and that his coming afterwards to an agreement with Sir Stephen Evance to let the bond stand out on the advance of 1 l. per cent. and taking his dividend on the commission, were a strong evidence of the plaintiff's discharging his testator; and that it was his own laches not to take his money, Sir Stephen having continued to pay for many years after the partnership expired.

Lord Chancellor. Both parties being now before the court, and no dispute as to the bond or assets; I think proper to retain the bill, without sending them to law. As to the agreement between Sir Stephen Evans and the defendant's testator, that was res inter alios acta, which ought not to prejudice the plaintiff, as it will do if it be of any avail, because it tends to lessen his security. I do not think the subsequent agreement for 1 l. per cent. advance has altered the case, for the other partner might notwithstanding have come in and been discharged on paying the principal and interest at 5 l. per cent. Neither does the plaintiff's taking a dividend prejudice his right at all, for that was an advantage to the defendant, by lessening the debt, so that now he will have an allowance for what the plaintiff received upon the dividend (1).

Let the Master take an account of what is due for principal and interest at the rate of 5 l. per cent. and on payment of that, let the bond be delivered up, deducting the money already received upon the dividend.

The plaintiff took possession, and now brings trespass against the defendant for re-entry.

 It was objected, that this amounted to an assignment of the lease, and was therefore void by the statute of Frauds and Perjuries (a), not being in writing; to which we who were for the plaintiff answered, that it must be taken as a lease, and not as an assignment, because the reservation was to the lessee, and not to the original lessor (1), and the lessee might maintain debt for rent upon it, though he could not distrain for want of a reversion; and of this opinion was the Chief Justice, and my client obtained a verdict.

On a contract for stock, the party who has the difference in his hands is receiver of so much to the other's use. Sci. Caf. Evid. 66.

CASE for money had and received to the plaintiff's use. The case was, the plaintiff paid money on a promise to transfer stock at a future day, which not being done the plaintiff brought this action. At the trial the doubt was, whether the plaintiff had brought a proper action, because at the time this money was paid, the plaintiff never intended to have it again; and the promise to transfer the stock was a sufficient consideration for his parting with the money. The Chief Justice directed, the court should be moved; and they were all of opinion, that the action was well brought; not for the whole money paid, but the damages in not transferring the stock at that time, which was a loss to the plaintiff, and an advantage to the defendant, who was receiver of the difference money to the use of the plaintiff (1).

(1) See this case more accurately reported by Lord Mansfield C. J. 2 Burr. 1011. The action for money had and received is governed entirely by principles of equity, both in its FORM and substance. By its FORM the plaintiff enjoys the advantage of being relieved from the necessity of stating the special circumstances upon which his claim is founded. But the court takes care that this generality of the count shall never be turned to the prejudice of the defendant. It will not lie therefore where it would throw the burthen of special pleading from the plaintiff upon the defendant, or where it would subject him to uncertainty as to the point to which he should direct his defence; or where it would trench upon established forms, or otherwise produce inconvenience upon principles of legal policy. Thus it will not lie where a right of common must be tried by it. Lindon v. Hooper, Cowp. 414. or the warranty of an horse, Power v. Wells, ib. 818. Or the rights

But the courts have gone further, for even where the plaintiff would, in general, be entitled to recover his demand upon that count, yet he shall not be permitted to do so if the defendant is warranted in conceiving that he came to trial upon another ground, and the former has not given notice that he meant to rely upon it. In Mortimer v. Stevens, Cowp. 807. Longchamp v. Kenny, Doug. 138. Towers v. Barret, 1 Term Rep. 134. The substance and principle of the action is, that the defendant having received a sum of money belonging to the plaintiff, which he ought, by the ties of justice and equity, to refund, if he has not made an express promise to the purpose, the law implies one from him to do so. The consideration upon which this promise is implied must either be money actually received, ceived, or something which has been converted by the defendant into money. Nightingale v. Devisme, 5 Burr. 2582. 2 Black. Rep. 684. S. C. Israel v. Douglass, 2 H. Black. 239. Leery v. Goodeson, 4 Term Rep. 687. and see the distinction taken ib. between that case and Longchamp v. Kenny, Dougl. 23, per Lord Kenyon Ch. J. To this consideration the plaintiff must make out an equitable title. He cannot therefore recover more than the sum he has paid, and he shall obtain only the difference between the whole, and such part of it as the defendant is entitled in conscience to retain. Per Lord Mansfield, 2 Burr. 1011. Dale v. Sollet, 4 Burr. 2133. Neither can he recover an exorbitant or unjust demand under it. Plumb v. Carter, Cowp. 116. *Jeston v. Or else the defendant by a refusal to execute, or by a complete and self-evident inability to perform, or by a fraudulent execution he has given the plaintiff an option to disaffirm the contract, and recover the consideration he has paid for it in the same manner as if it had never existed. This was permitted perhaps upon the principle that the defendant having, by his fraud, shewn that he had originally no intention of entering into a fair agreement, it would be extremely hard not to give the plaintiff a right to annul or confirm it, as should appear to him most for his own convenience. *Vide Dutch v. ERROR of a judgment in C. B. in an action upon the case against the defendant as administrator of J. S. for work and labour done in the intestate's time: the defendant Pleas by an administrator that his intestate was indebted to A. for goods sold and delivered, who impleaded him in a plea of debt for money lent, and obtained judgment, and that he hath not assets ultra, is well enough; for he need not have set forth the consideration of the judgment; and if it were an erroneous judgment, still it would be a bar, for all that the court has to look to is, that it is not fraudulent.

pleads,

pleads, that the intestate in his life was indebted to A. B. in 21 l. for goods sold and delivered, and neglecting to pay in his life, the said A. B. Michaelmas 5 Geo. impleaded the defendant as administrator in placito debiti super mutual, taliterque processum fuit, that judgment was given for the plaintiff. Then he pleads another judgment for a debt of the same nature, and recovered in the same manner; and a third which was for money lent; and a fourth like the two first. Then he avers that all these were for good and just debts, and that he has administered all the goods to 100 l. which are liable to these judgments. And hath not assets ultra.

Demurrer inde et jud' pro defendente, after two solemn arguments in C. B. ubi intratur, Hil. 5 Geo. rot, 1587. and error brought in this court.

Reeve pro quer. Though the debts are averred to be true, yet being recovered in improper actions, they can be no bar to us. The debts are still subsisting as debts upon simple contract, and so are not pleadable to us. The administrator if he should be sued in an action for goods sold and delivered, could never plead these judgments (which are in actions of debt) in bar. In 1 Vent. 198. assumpsit against an executor, he pleads four judgments, one whereof was in an action of debt for a principal sum and interest borrowed by the testator; and on demurrer it was adjudged for the plaintiff, because no action of debt lay for interest: and though the defendant had not taken advantage of it by plea, it was said no admission of his could prejudice the other creditors. In the present case, if the defendant had made a proper defence, the plaintiffs could never have recovered in those actions.

Wearg contra. That phrase placitum debiti sur mutual, is not confined to money lent only, as placitum debiti generally is; for that is the known description of an action of debt, but this is not. When I deliver goods and am not paid, I may properly be said to be a lender of the money which I trust. Suppose the seller lends the buyer the money with one hand, and receives it with the other; surely that will not deprive him of his action for money lent. It may be there were in the declarations proper counts added to reach these demands.

Vide ante 232.

But if mutual be inconsistent, you will reject it, as you do an inconsistent posse under a scilicet. In this case we have done more than we needed, for there was no occasion to aver the recovery pro vero et justo debito, or even to have shewn how it accrued. 1 Lev. 200. Lutw. 662. The plaintiff might have replied, there there was nothing due, and was not driven to his demurrer. Jones Sir William 91, 92. The case in Vent. is not at all applicable, for there was no debt which would be a lien upon the executor, but here there is a real debt.

One of these judgments is out of the exception, the debt being for money lent, and properly recovered, and that covers all the assets, and destroys the plaintiff's action; for he must avoid so many of the judgments, as that it will appear there are assets, according to the case of Dee v. Edgecomb in Vaugh. But here according to his own reckoning he has avoided but three, and the fourth, which is for more than the assets, remains unimpeached.

It was argued a second time by Serjeant Comyns for the plaintiff, and Serjeant Miller for the defendant.

Serjeant Comyns. On a special plene administravit (as this is) the executor must bar us by good judgments, and not by such as are erroneous. 8 Co. 133. 3 Lev. 141. 9 Co. 108, 110. b. Salk. 312. Indeed it is otherwise in cases where the administrator might have pleaded it in abatement, but this is not a matter avoidable by plea, it appearing upon the face of the record. An action of debt it is true will lie upon an executory promise, but then the party must declare according to the truth.

Suppose in an action for money lent the parties had gone to issue, and on the trial it had appeared, that the same demand was the price of goods sold and delivered, no doubt but in that case the plaintiff would have been nonsuit: and here it will be the same thing, since that which would have turned him round upon the evidence, appears now upon the record.

There may be a great deal of fraud in allowing this practice, for these judgments are entered up immediately, pendente lite of another person, when if they were to go on in the ordinary way by writ of inquiry, that other person perhaps might have got judgment first. And if these judgments are erroneous, then the executor has the benefit of them in covering so much assets, and may get rid of them afterwards, when he has served his turn.

Serjeant Miller contra. This is at most but an improper action, and the whole record not being set forth, you will intend there was another count proper to take in the demand. In these cases the true point is, whether there be a just debt or not. Lutw. 662. 1 Sid. 230. 1 Keb. 808. Vaugh. 94. 1 Sid. 333. An erroneous judgment is pleadable, till reversed. Cro. El. 471. Sir W. Jones 91.

C. J. Both sides have gone upon begging a question, for which I think there is no foundation; which is, that these judgments are erroneous. For consider, though the recital of them is, that the defendant was indebted for goods, and impleaded in a mutuatus, yet that is more than will appear upon the record of those judgments, which are only common mutuatus's. The most that the special setting them out amounts to is, to shew there was a precedent debt, and that the judgments were not fraudulent; and this is more than the pleader needed have done, for he might have relied upon it, that there were such judgments, without shewing the consideration of them, the want of which should come of the other side, and be taken advantage of in an issue upon the fraud. Here the executor has done more than he was obliged to do; he has shewn that there were such judgments, and lest you should think these were demands set up on purpose to cover the assets, he tells you further that there was a fair and honest debt recovered by them. I think the judgment ought to be affirmed. To which Powys and Fortescue Justices agreed. Et per Eyre J. There is no inconvenience in letting executors confess judgments, for if there be a precedent debt, all is fair; if none, the party will have them upon the fraud. I think this a good judgment; though if it were erroneous, it might be a bar, for all we have to look to is to see it is not fraudulent. Where interest is damages, debt will not lie, but it is otherwise where a stated interest is fixed at a stated rate. The judgment of C. B. was affirmed.

Et

It need not be a parish office but an annual office in the parish.

Et per curiam, The reason why the executing offices gives a settlement without notice is, because of the notoriety of the thing, of which the Parliament thought it impossible but the parish should have notice: can any thing be more notorious than this, which is to collect a duty from house to house? We cannot suppose a fraud in the commissioners, that they would appoint a person of no substance to be collector, only to bring a charge upon the parish. It needs not be a parish office, but a publick annual office in the parish (1). And as to its not being said that this man executed it for a year, we must take it he did so, because it appears on looking into the statute that the power given the commissioners is to appoint a person who shall be collector of the duties for a year, and then give in his accounts. It has been held a settlement in the case of the land-tax (2), and why not in this? The order was confirmed.

(1) This exception in 3 & 4 Will. & Mar. c. 11. sect. 6. has always been construed liberally, as being an enabling clause. It has been held to extend therefore to any publick office or charge in which the interest of the holder is for a longer term than a year. Gatton v. Milwich, Fort. 239. So also to one which may be executed in part of a parish, though it extends not through the whole of it. Rex v. Fittleworth, Burr. S. C. 240. So likewise if it extends beyond it. Rex v. St. Maurice in Winchester, Burr. S. C. 27. Bott by Conf., 285. pl. 296. S. C. Rex v. Liverpool, 3 Term Rep. 118.

CASE by the executors of the assignee of commissioners of bankrupt for goods sold and delivered by the bankrupt: the defendant prays oyer of the letters testamentary, which are set out, and then demurs. And Strange for the defendant objected, that the declaration was of Trinity term, when the executor says that he brings into court the letters testamentary, by which, says he, satis liquet to the court that I am executor of the will, et inde habere execution, &c. Whereas upon oyer it appears that the instrument produced under seal of the ordinary does not bear date till November following, so the objection is, that the executor declares before probate, contrary to all the cases, where it is held that though he may commence an action, yet he cannot declare in it before probate.

To state the objection fairly, I do admit, that the letters of the ordinary, which are set out, do recite that 13 January 1718. the will was exhibited, probatum et approbatum, which is before the action; but this is not sufficient, for though the will was exhibited, and though evidence was given to satisfy the judge of the execution of it, yet that is what this court can take no notice of, but only the act of the spiritual court that commits the execution of the will. 9 Co. Hensloe's case is express, that the testament must be shewn duly proved under the seal of the ordinary; and in the case of Clark v. Clark in B. R. Hil. 1 Geo. it was laid down by the present Lord Chancellor, who delivered the resolution of the court, that the producing litteras testamentarias was sufficient, because they imported the will, with that further circumstance of its being under seal of the ordinary; for unless they were so under seal, it could not satis liquere to the court, that he was executor.

Sed per Curiam: The instrument here produced is not the probate, but an exemplification of it; and that shewing there was a probate before the action, is sufficient; this is their constant way, when the probate is lost, for they never grant a second probate, only exemplify the first, and those exemplifications have been allowed to be given in evidence (1). Coram Pratt C. J. at Guildhall.

THE defendant came to the plaintiff, who was a sword-cutler, to sell him a second-hand sword: and upon his warranting it to be a silver hilt, the plaintiff offered him a guinea and half for it; the defendant refused to take the money, and thereupon went to several other sword-cutlers, but not meeting with any that would give so much as the plaintiff, he came back to him, and told him he should have it for the price he offered: the plaintiff upon that, thinking to have it cheaper, refused to give the guinea and half, and at last beat down the price to 28 s. which was paid the defendant for the sword. Afterwards the plaintiff found that the gripe of it only was silver, and the rest of the hilt was brass; upon which he brings his action against the defendant, and declares upon the warranty of the hilt's being silver, when in fact it was brass: but not being able to prove a warranty upon the second bargain, he was nonsuit: the Chief Justice being of opinion, that the warranty upon the bidding a guinea and half would not extend to this sale, which was a new and different contract at a different time. Also he seemed to be of opinion, that the gripe being silver, the plaintiff should have declared specially on a warranty of the rest of the hilt only, and have said that that part was brass.

If the first contract with warranty be broken off, the warranty will not extend to a subsequent sale.

THE defendant in each of these actions at two of the clock in the afternoon gave the plaintiffs goldsmiths notes in payment, which were tendered the next morning at nine, when the goldsmiths had a quarter of an hour before stopt payment. The Chief Justices directed the juries, that the loss should fall on the defendants, there being no laches in the plaintiffs, who had demanded their money as soon as was usual in the course of dealing, and that the keeping the notes till the next morning could not be construed a giving new credit to the goldsmiths. And both juries found accordingly (1).

And the common usage in transacting affairs of this nature is to be chiefly regarded.

THE defendant paid the plaintiffs, who were the sword-blade company, two goldsmiths notes at three in the afternoon; the plaintiffs' servant the next morning leaves the notes with the goldsmiths in order to have the money ready for him as he came back a clearing; it being as they proved customary for the bank and the sword-blade company to lend out their notes in the morning, and then call for the money as their servant returned in the evening; and the goldsmiths upon receiving the notes always cancelled them, and got the money told out against the time it was usually called for. The notes in this case were brought early in the morning, and received, and cancelled: and between four and five in the afternoon the servant that left them called again for the money, when the goldsmiths had just stopt payment: upon upon which the servant takes new notes of the same tenor and date with the cancelled ones he left in the morning. And because the plaintiffs had done nothing but what was usual, in leaving the notes instead of taking the money when he first called in the morning, the Chief Justice directed the jury to find for the plaintiffs, which they did (1).

IN an information for a libel against the doctrine of the Trinity, the witness for the crown, who produced the libel, swore that it was shewn to the defendant, who owned himself the author of that book, errors of the press and some small variations excepted. The counsel for the defendant objected, that this evidence would not intitle Mr. Attorney to read the book, because the confession was not absolute, and therefore amounted to a denial that he was the author of that identical book. But the Chief Justice allowed it to be read, saying he would put it upon the defendant to shew that there were material variances (1).

How to compel an assignment of errors on writs from Ireland (1).

E*RROR tam in redditions judicii in an ejectment in C. B. in Ireland, quam in affirmatione ejusdem in B. R. there.*

Hil. 8 Geo.

Husley v. Burton, in an Irish writ of error I had the same rules.

Hil. 11 Geo.

Waters v. Balauntine, I had the same rules on my motion.

The beginning of the term I moved for the common rule, that the plaintiff should assign his errors, it not being usual to take out a scire facias as we do on writs of error from C. B. When that rule was out, I moved again, upon an affidavit that we could find no body concerned for the plaintiff in error, and had fixed it up in the office; that therefore we might be at liberty to sign a non pros, else if we should be put to send the rule over to Ireland to be served, the delay would be as great as in the case of a scire facias, and it being a writ of the plaintiff's own suing out, he must be apprized when was the due time to come in and prosecute it. Whereupon the court made a new rule, that unless errors were assigned within four days after fixing a new note up in the office, the defendant in error should be at liberty to sign a non pros.

Within the time errors were assigned; and on the arguing Reeve objected, that it is an ejectment for lands in the county of Dublin, and yet the trial is at the King's courts in the county of the city of Dublin.

Strange contra. This court will not take notice that they are distinct counties, but rather intend the city to be part of the county. That the county of the city of Dublin is the county in which the city of Dublin lies. Or if they should, yet the trial may be right, for it runs postea die et loco infra contentus, which locus infra contentus may be as well the place within the county of Dublin, where the demise is laid to be made, as any other.

Or admitting it a trial out of the proper county, yet it is helped by the 16 & 17 Car. 2. c. 8. which is enacted in Ireland by 17 & 18 Car. 2. c. 12. being a trial by a jury of the proper county, for the award of the venire is previous to any mention of the county of the city, and commands the sheriff of the county, to summon twelve men of his county, and then the trial is had by the juratores unde infra fit mentio.

(1) But writs of error and appeals from the courts of Ireland by 22 Geo. 3. c. 53. & 23 Geo. 3. c. 28. into B. R. are now taken away

If

If this be not right, there never was a proper trial of any cause arising in the county of Dublin; for the King's courts sitting in the city of Dublin, it is there all the trials of those causes are had; just as here, where causes of Middlesex are tried in the same place where the King's Bench sits. We have instances in England of county causes being tried in cities which are counties also, as at Worcester where both are tried in the same place.

The court said, they must intend them distinct counties, but as to the other points they went over to be inquired into. And afterwards,

In answer to the objection made the last term, that the lands lay in the county of Dublin, and the trial was in the county of the city of Dublin; Strange now cited an act of Parliament made in Ireland 17 & 18 Car. 2. c. 20. which appoints the trial of causes arising in the county of Dublin to be at nisi prius in the same place where the King's courts sit, in the county of the city of Dublin. So the judgment was affirmed. Dougl. 791.

N. B. There being such an express act of Parliament, I thought it not necessary, to put it on the former foot of being a trial by a jury of the proper county, which would have been a sufficient answer: for Pasch. 10 W. 3. B. R. Lady Calverly v. Sir Richard Leving in covenant, the case was sent into the county palatine of Chester, on a local plea of a matter arising in the county of the city of Chester: the mittimus to the C. J. was, to award a venire to the sheriff of the county of Chester, which was done accordingly; and after verdict pro quer' moved by Sir Barth. Shower in arrest of judgment, that this is a mis-trial, not aided by the statute of jeofails; being a trial in a wrong county: but the court held it was aided: and that is a stronger case than this, where it appears the trial was by a jury of the proper county, as it was not in that case; and in delivering the resolution of the court Holt C. And the court thought it reasonable, that the proceedings should be stayed, on the bail's consenting, that if the judgment be affirmed, they would surrender the principal, or give judgment on the scire facias (1).

And Weare moved after verdict pro rege, in arrest of judgment, that though the justice might have committed him for the contempt, yet the words are not indictable, since it is not to be presumed they would provoke a justice of peace to a breach of the peace, which is the reason why indictments have been held to lie for words. Sed per curiam, The allowing he might be committed, shews they were indictable. It is true the justice may make himself judge, and punish him immediately; but still if he thinks proper to proceed less summarily by way of indictment, he may: the true distinction is, that where the words are spoke in the presence of the justice, there he may commit; but where it is behind his back, the party can be only indicted for a breach of the peace. Procurations are due of common right to the ordinary or his vicar, the archdeacon, although the church be a rectory impropriate, without a vicarage endowed, and they are properly suable for in the ecclesiastical court. 1 Will. Rep. 657. S. C. more full. See 2 Gibb. Cal. 1016, 1017.

LIBEL in the spiritual court by the archdeacon, for procurations; the defendant who was curate, suggests that they have never been paid, and that the church for which they are demanded is a rectory impropriate without a vicarage endowed. And having obtained a rule to shew cause, why there should not go a prohibition; Mr. Williams for the archdeacon produced an affidavit, that 6*s.* 8*d.* had been constantly paid every year, and cited Davis 6. where it is said, that the visitor has the same right to procurations, as the parson has to tithes; for as one instructs the laity, so the other instructs the parson as to the points of his duty; and that a clergyman can no more prescribe not to pay procurations, than a layman can prescribe in a non decimando for tithes. Et per curiam, That is certainly so; of common right procurations are due to the ordinary or archdeacon, and here the ordinary suffering the archdeacon to sue for them before him,

Churchwardens of Bishopscarmouth

him, we must take it they belong in this case to the archdeacon; which is made more reasonable by coupling it with the evidence of payment. Formerly the visitor demanded a proportion of meat and drink for his refreshment, when he came abroad to do his duty, and examine the state of the church; afterwards these were turned into annual payments of a certain sum, which is called a procuration, being so much given to the visitor ad procurandum cibum et potum. Though there be no vicar endowed, yet the reason for these payments continues, for the impropiator is obliged to find a curate, and that curate will have as much instruction from the archdeacon, as if he was rector of the parish, or a vicar endowed.

And as this is a mere ecclesiastical right, the suit is properly instituted before the ordinary. It was never known that an action was brought for these procurations, nor in the case of tithes are there any instances before the statute of Edw. 6.

It was objected, that the libel runs, That time out of mind the archdeacon had this right, and yet it appears the archdeaconry was made within time of memory, and this is to let the spiritual court try a prescription. Sed per curiam, We all know what they mean by the phrase time out of mind, which with them goes no farther back than fifty or sixty years (a). But if it were a new archdeaconry, why is it not like a new rectory, where tithes are due as before for all the lands within the district. Here the demand is spiritual, and so are the persons, who are bound by the canon law; which being the rule of these payments, we are of opinion, that the suit below was well instituted, and therefore there ought to be no prohibition.

doing any service; that afterwards he went without leave of his master to see his mother, and staid away four days; and that three days before his year was up he asked leave of his master to go to a statute fair, to be hired, which the master refused, but the servant persisting he must go, the master replied, I am resolved you shall gain no settlement in this parish, and therefore if you will go, it shall be for good and all. No, says the other, I will serve out the year, and thereupon he went, and never returned during the last three days; and when he came to be paid, the master deducted for the time he was sick, and when he went to see his mother, which deductions the servant agreed to, and the master at the same time abated 6d. for the last three days, which the servant refused to allow, but the master refusing to pay it, the servant took the rest of his wages. And whether these interruptions of the service should defeat the settlement in Issip, was the question; and the Sessions adjudged it a settlement.

It was argued largely by Mr. Hawkins, who moved to quash the order; and he cited the case between the parishes of Pawlet and Bernham (a), Mich. 1 Geo. where the master and servant parted by consent three weeks before the end of the year, and it was held no settlement.

And now Pratt C. J. delivered the opinion of the court.

In this case here is no doubt but that there was a compleat and perfect hiring for a year. The only question is, whether there has been such a service in pursuance of it, as will give a settlement to the party. Three objections have been made at the bar, which it will be proper to take notice of.

1. That the servant being sick for six days, and incapable of serving, can never gain a settlement, which is to be acquired only by a service for a year; but here say they, he did not serve for six days, and so there wants so much of a service for a year. This was lightly touched upon at the bar, and surely there is little in it; a servant that lies thus under the visitation of the hand of God, which befalls him not through his own default, is and must be taken to be all the while in the service of his master (1); and if this exception was to be allowed, it might prevent prevent all the settlements in the kingdom: it is not to be presumed, that the servant is less able to provide for himself at the year's end, because he has had a slight indisposition during the year; and that presumption of an ability is the foundation of making it a settlement.

(1) Vide Rex v. Christ Church, what causes the Master may put an end to the contract without the servant's consent. Vide Rex v. Sbarington, 2 Bott 525. pl. 458. For v. Marlborough, 12 Mod. 402.

2. It was objected that his going to see his mother without leave was a desertion of the service, and the time he staid away takes so much off from a compleat service for a year. As to that we are all of opinion, that it will not prevent the settlement; it was never the intent of the statute, that if a servant happened to stay out a night or two, it should avoid the settlement; but here the master taking him again, has dispensed with his non-attendance, so there is nothing in that objection (2).

3. The third and indeed the most considerable objection was, that the going away three days before the year was up, and never returning again during the year, is a forfeiture of the settlement.

Now though that would prima facie be a good objection, yet as this case is circumstanced, we are of opinion it cannot prevail. Consider how the case stands with regard to the servant. He knew his master designed to part with him at the year's end, and therefore it was high time for him to look out for another place. To this end he applies in a very proper manner for leave to go to the statute fair, which is a place where in all likelihood he might provide himself, and not be obliged to lie idle all the year, it being usual for people in the country to go thither to hire their servants; the master like an unreasonable man refuses so reasonable a request, coupling it with a declaration, that the servant should gain no settlement with him, which is a badge of fraud on the side of the master that ought not to prevail; as therefore the request was reasonable, and upon a just ground on the side of the servant, and the refusal unreasonable on the side of the master, we think the servant's going afterwards without leave is no forfeiture of his former service, especially if we take in the declaration the servant made at that time, that he would serve out the year, and his refusal afterwards to allow the master 6*d.* for the last three days, which plainly shew that the contract was not dissolved before the end of the year, as was strongly insisted on at the bar (3).

These are all the exceptions that were taken to this order; we are all of opinion, that they are not sufficient to overthrow the settlement, and consequently the sessions have done right in sending him to Isleip, and the order must be confirmed.

PER curiam, After judgment on demurrer, the defendant shall not come to arrest the judgment on return of the inquiry, for an exception that might have been taken on arguing the demurrer. The parties cannot be said to come as amici cur', nor shall any body tell us, that the judgment we gave on mature deliberation is wrong; it is otherwise indeed in the case of judgment by default, for that is not given in so solemn a manner; or if the fault arises on the writ of inquiry or verdict, for there the party could not allege it before. *How v. Giving a note for 5l. cannot be pleaded as a satisfaction for 15l.

ERROR: C. B. in an indebitatus assumpsit for 15 l. The defendant pleads, that he gave the plaintiff a promissory note for 5 l. in satisfaction, and that the plaintiff received it in satisfaction. E contra. It was argued, that the plaintiff's demand consisting only in damages, it was for his benefit to have it reduced to a certainty, and to have the security for it made negotiable. A stated account may be pleaded in bar of an action of covenant. 4 Mod. 43. 1 Mod. 261. 1 Roll. Abr. 122. And now it is held that an award before performance is a bar of the former action.

Et per Pratt C. J. (on consideration) We are all of opinion, that the plea is not good, and therefore the judgment must be affirmed: as the plaintiff had a good cause of action, it can only be extinguished by a satisfaction he agrees to accept; and it is not his agreement alone that is sufficient, but it must appear to the court to be a reasonable satisfaction; or at least the contrary must not appear, as it does in this case. If 5 l. be (as is admitted) no satisfaction for 15 l. why is a simple contract to pay 5 l. a satisfaction for another simple contract of three times the value? In the case of a bond, another has never been allowed to be pleaded in satisfaction, without a bettering of the plaintiff's case, as by shortning the time of payment. Nay in all instances the bettering his case is not sufficient, for a bond with sureties is better than a single bond, and yet that will not be a satisfaction. 1. Brownl. 47, 71. 2 Roll. Abr. 470. The judgment therefore must be affirmed (1).

Nave - Camp
5th - 1793 342.

IN ejectment, a case was made at Kent assizes; that Thomas Came, being tenant for life of the lands in question, remainder to his wife for life, remainder to his own right heirs, 20 October 1673. made his will in these words: "Item, my lands by Woolwich my wife is to enjoy for her life, after her decease of right it goeth to my daughter Elizabeth for ever, provided she hath heirs; if my said daughter Elizabeth should die before her mother, or without heirs, and my said wife Mary should marry again and have an heir male, I bequeath him all my right to that estate, not thinking I can sufficiently reward her love; if my said wife marrieth again, and fails of heir male, after her decease and my daughter, she failing of heirs, I bequeath 50 l. per ann. of that estate to my brother Joseph Came, and to his heirs for ever." And then distributed the rest to other persons.

The devisor died, and the wife married again, and had issue Thomas Hamond the defendant, and died. Then Elizabeth the daughter died without issue. And upon her death the lessors of the plaintiff claim the estate as right heirs of the devisor, and the defendant claims under the devise to the heir male of the devisor's wife by a second husband.

Reeve pro quer' argued, that the devise to the defendant was void, being of a fee upon a fee. 19 H. 8. 8. Cro. Car. 57. For when it was to go to his daughter and her heirs, there could be no limitation over. Indeed 3 Lev. 70. says it is but a tail; but the difference is, where the limitation is to one who can be heir to the daughter, there it is a fee-tail, because the devisor must know the remainder would be void if the first was a fee-simple, because the remainder-man would claim as heir to the daughter; but here the defendant is a stranger, and cannot be heir to the daughter.

Then it was objected, that the words she failing of heirs, shew what heirs were meant, and there is a limitation to the uncle, who may be heir to the daughter. But why may not that be construed to be a rent-charge of 50 l. per ann. to the brother, and then it can have no influence to turn the daughter's estate into a tail; besides, this is an independent clause, and therefore not to controul the construction of the former, according to the case in Dy. 124.

The defendant cannot take by way of executory devise, because it is a contingency on a dying without heir, which is too remote.

But if the devise was good, yet the contingencies have never happened. The words are, if my daughter dies before her mother, or without heirs: now the words are not to be taken strictly, for then perhaps the issue of the daughter may be barred by her death before the mother; but the natural way is, to read it in the copulative, as we have many instances. 1 Vent. 62. 1 Leon. 70. Pollex. 645. Plow. 286, 289. So that taking it that way, then the mother died first, and consequently the defendant who is to claim on the daughter's dying before the mother, can have no title.

Cheshire Serjeant contra. I admit, if the first words stood alone, they would carry a fee to the daughter. But it would be endless to cite cases, where the fullest words have been controuled by what has come after, so as to make that a devise in tail, which otherwise would pass a fee. 1 Roll. Abr. 836.

I do not contend, that this is an executory devise; it must be a contingent remainder. 2 Saund. 88. 2 Cro. 416. 1 Saund. 142. 3 Co. 31.

I see no reason to alter the word or; if you do, why may not we read it, if she dies before her mother, or after without heirs.

Adjournatur. And afterwards Pratt C. J. delivered the resolution of the court.

We are of opinion, that the first part of the will is no devise, the testator only taking notice how the estate was settled before, that if he made no will his wife would have it for her life, and after her decease of right it would go to his daughter Elizabeth for ever (1). The devise therefore to the defendant can be only considered as a contingent remainder, or an executory devise: as an executory devise it cannot be good, for the contingency is too remote (2) and it is not like the case of Lloyd v. Cary, where the contingency was so very near the compass of a life, whereas here it is limited on the wife's having no issue male by a second husband, and the daughter failing of heirs.

As a contingent remainder it will not do for want of a particular estate, taking the first part of the will to be only a declaration how his estate was settled, and not as a devise to the daughter.

Besides, it appears the contingency never happened, for the daughter did not die before the mother (3), consequently the lessors of the plaintiff, who are both heirs to the daughter and heirs to the devisor, must enter, and therefore the plaintiff must have judgment.

(3) From this it appears that the C. J. considered the word "or" as put for and, and that the condition was to be construed copulatively. Vide Barker v. Sure-

Intr. de Hill. 4 Geo. rot. 379.

In case for an escape, qu. whether the sheriff may plead a rescue from his bailiff? and whether he must not aver that the prisoner was not afterwards found in his bailiwick? A rescue of one brought out of gaol by habeas corpus between judgment and execution by any but common enemies will not excuse the sheriff.

IN case for the escape of Mary Oglethorpe, the declaration set forth, that Mich. 2 Geo. in C. B. the plaintiff recovered judgment against her for 232*l.* which coming into B. R. by writ of error, the writ was non pros and execution awarded, which judgment is still in force: That 12 June 2 Geo. the said Oglethorpe surrendered to the Fleet in discharge of her bail, from whence she was removed by habeas corpus to Newgate una cum die et causa, &c. where the plaintiff intended to charge her in execution, but the defendants, sheriff of Middlesex, voluntarily permitted her to escape. The defendants confess the said Oglethorpe in their custody, prout, &c. but say that 20 Junii a habeas corpus was delivered to them, requiring them to bring her to the Chief Justice's chamber, upon which they made a warrant to their bailiff commanding him to carry her and bring her safe back again, by virtue of which he took her out of Newgate, and in carrying her along she was rescued. The plaintiff demurs. And Mich. 5 Geo. Yorke pro quer' took three exceptions to the manner of pleading, Rowden v. Sandesh 6. Ann B. 508.

1. It is improperly pleaded: they should not have set forth the fact, but the operation of law resulting from that fact; therefore pleading the rescue from the bailiff is wrong; it ought to have been as from the sheriff, for the law takes no notice of a bailiff or his acts. In Cooke's case, Hil. 2 Geo. a rescue was returned on a bill of

of Middlesex in this form: that a capias ad satisfaciendum issued to the sheriff, who thereupon took the debtor, and the rescue was made of the prisoner under that arrest: exception was taken, that this return was only argumentative, because an escape of one in custody of the sheriff is an escape for all suits wherein he had process. The return indeed was held good, it being veritas facti, but the court held it would have been otherwise in pleading. 2 Saund. 97. If one jointenant pleads that the other concessit to him, it is ill; for it should have been pleaded as a release, that being the only proper conveyance between jointenants. 2 Vent. 149, 260, 266. 3 Lev. 290. That was pleaded as a grant, which could only enure as a covenant to stand seised, and the plea was held ill; for it ought to have been pleaded according to the effect of it in law. Salk. 8, 274.

2. The defendants ought to have averred, that she was not afterwards found in balliva sua. Dalt. 215, 216. Officina Bre- vium 203, 204, 217, 226.

3. The habeas corpus requires her to be brought sub salvo et securo conductu, but the defendants have not shown that they complied with this direction; as they ought to do, when they plead a rescue.

As to the principal point, whether the rescue here pleaded be a sufficient excuse; I must observe, that such returns have never been favoured, because there may be fraud and combination impossible to be discovered, and they infer a reflection upon the King, by supposing an unlawful force, as appears by Westm. 2. c. 39. which recites, that the sheriff's multotiens falsum dant responsum, mandando quod non potuerunt exequi preceptum regis propter resistantiam: and concludes, Caveant vicecomites de catero, quod huiusmodi responsio redundat in dedecus domini regis et corona sue. A return of a rescue may discharge the sheriff against the King, but not against the party. Formerly such a return of a rescue upon mesne process was held not pleadable, because the sheriff might take sufficient power of the county. Cro. Eliz. 868. But since in the case of May v. Proby, Cro. Jac. 419. 3 Bullst. 198. Moor 852. 1 Roll. Abr. 807. it has been resolved, that the arrest being on mesne process, and not upon execution, the sheriff is not bound to take the posse comitatus, and therefore rescous is a good return: but if the prisoner had been once in the gaol, the sheriff ought to keep him at his peril, and rescous is no excuse, for he is to take care that his prison be strong enough to keep the prisoners. And upon process of execution such a return is no excuse against the King or the party, for the process being once executed, the party can have no other: from this case I draw two inferences, 1. That when the prisoner is once in gaol, a rescue thence will be no excuse to the sheriff. 1 Roll. Abr. 807. pl. 3. 33 H. 6. 1. 4 Co. 84. a. is a much stronger case than the present; for there it is held that if rebel subjects break the prison, whereby the prisoners escape; this is no excuse, though it is otherwise where it is done by foreign enemies. In 33 Hen. 6. 1. the case was adjourned, but in 16 Ed. 4. 3. it is resolved by all the Judges; and the marshal of B. R. was forced to get an act of Parliament. 2. The other inference is, that wherever the sheriff may raise the posse, he is not excusable for a rescue, because no power is by intendment able to resist the sheriff and his posse. 8 Hen. 4. 19. The prisoner here is to be taken to be in actual custody. It cannot be intended the habeas corpus was sued out at the instance of the plaintiff, and the sheriff might have raised the posse; the very words of the writ suppose it, sub salvo et securo conductu. Since it appears therefore, that the sheriff is liable for the rescue of one in execution, and for a rescue out of the prison where the custody is on mesne process only, because in those cases he may raise the posse, I can see no reason to distinguish this case from those, and why he may not have the posse in one as well as in the other.

Boote contra. As to the first objection, we may plead either according to the truth of the fact, or the operation of the law upon that fact, and either way is good. Palm. 532. 2. We have confessed and avoided the escape, and the cases cited are of returns, where it may be necessary to say the party was not afterwards to be found in his bailiwick; because according to the latter resolutions, 1 Vent. 269. which denies the sheriff of Essex's case in Hob. 202. the prisoner may be re-taken, and therefore the return must answer every possibility, which need not be done in pleading. The third objection depends upon the principal point, as to which I must observe, that it appears Oglethorpe was not in execution, for which reason case is brought, because the 1 Rich. 2. c. 12. gives debt only for the escape of one in execution. 11 Hen. 4. 11. A. wounds B. and being in the custody of the constable escapes, and then B. dies; the constable is not answerable as for the escape of a felon. Salk. 614. 2 Mod. Caf. 158. At this day a rescue upon mesne process is a good excuse, though the former opinions were otherwise. 3 Lev. 46. 2 Lev. 144. and 2 Cro. 419. May v. Proby. There is a great difference between prisoners at large, and those in actual custody; the latter by Westm. 2. c. 11. may be kept in irons, but that extends only to such as are within the walls of the prison: one in custody out of the prison is not required to have so strict a guard, and therefore, though a rescue out of the gaol of one in upon mesne process makes the sheriff liable, yet he is not so for the rescue of a person person not carried to gaol. On a habeas corpus the sheriff may go out of the way with the prisoner, provided he has him ready at the return of the writ. 3 Co. 44. a. The sheriff is obliged to bring out the party in obedience to the King's writ, and he is not compellable to have a stricter guard than for a person arrested on mesne process: a common capias has the words salvo custodias as well as the habeas corpus, so no inference can be drawn from the wording of the writ. The reason why the sheriff shall raise the posse in case of execution doth not hold in this case; for the party doth not lose his debt, nor even his process, for there may be a re-captation: the statute of Marleberge, c. 21. and Westm. 1. c. 17. Westm. 2. c. 39. are but in affirmance of the common law. 2 Inst. 454. For the sheriff might have had the posse before. But though he may, yet he is not obliged to raise the posse upon every occasion, for it is to be presumed men will act according to law, and the contrary is never supposed. 10 H. 7. 26. The sheriff in this case might plead a re-captation. Godb. 177. And as on a habeas corpus he may let the prisoner go out of the way, it shews he is only considered as a person in custody upon mesne process: escapes being so penal, the judges have always made a favourable construction for the officers. 3 Co. 44. a.

Yorke replied. This is more than a custody on mesne process. The demand transit in rem judicatam; and if the sheriff is not liable, it will be very easy to bring a habeas corpus for no other end, but to let the prisoner escape.

Chief Justice. Here the fact pleaded is true, that she was in the custody of bailiff, and rescued from him; and though this amounts in law to the custody of the sheriff (1), yet it differs from the cases of grants, for there the fact was not true: it was not a grant but a release, and a covenant to stand seised, but here the fact is true, and properly pleaded. 2. The defendants have confessed and avoided, and therefore it lay upon the plaintiff to shew a re-captation in his replication. The third objection likewise has nothing in it, for the words of a common capias are as strong.

As to the principal point, I cannot see how this case is distinguished from a custody on mesne process, where a rescue is plead-

(1) " A return made by a sheriff that the person arrested was rescued out of the custody of the bailiff has been held bad, the return must be that the defendant " was rescued out of his custody " dy." Per Butler, J. In Woodgate v. Knatchbull, 2 Term Rep. 156.

able. The sheriff was obliged to bring her out, and as she was not in execution, she can only be said to be in upon mesne process. Powers Justice accord.

Eyre Justice inclined the rescue was a sufficient excuse, and well pleaded.

Portescue Justice accord' as to the first objection. As to the second I think the plea should have gone on, and said she was not found afterwards; as this stands, there may be an intendment that she was. As to the third, it appears she was carried by one single officer, which is certainly a neglect. This is a sort of middle process after the plaintiff has run a long race; and though the crown may command the sheriff to bring out his prisoner, yet that is without prejudice to the party: she ought to be conveyed as securely as she is kept, and the sheriff here may have his remedy against the rescuers. He might before he brought her out have insisted on money to pay a guard (2).

Hil. 7 Geo. it was argued a second time, by Wearg pro quer'. The question is, whether after judgment and before any charge in execution, a rescue on the party's being brought out on a babeas corpus be a good excuse for the sheriff in an action of escape.

To prove it no excuse I shall consider, 1. What are the grounds of this action, taking it as entirely new. 2. Compare it with the resolutions already in the books. 3. The objections that have been, or may be made.

1. To consider the foundation of such an action; and that is the damage which the plaintiff has sustained by the neglect of the defendant, which he might have prevented by the use of those means that he had in his power; for the law supposes the posse to be a sufficient defence against a rescue, and that no force is able to resist the sheriff and his posse. Here is not the act of God, as fire; or any foreign force, as the case of enemies, which I admit are excuses for the sheriff. 33 Hen. 6. 1. 16 Ed. 4. 3. 4 Co. 84. 1 Roll. Abr. 808. The sheriff may, if he pleases, raise the posse in execution of any process whatsoever. 2 Inst. 193. 3 Hen. 7. 1. Dalt. Sher. cap. 20. p. 104. cap. 95. p. 354. 5. The plea admits the neglect, and the officer has a fee. 3 Bulst. 212. Cro. Eliz. 873. 1 Vent. 268. Winch. 90. 21 Ed. 3. 45. b.

(2) Quare. Vide Hopman v. Barber, post. 814.

2. The cases in the books. I would compare this with the case of a rescue of one taken upon mesne process before he is carried to gaol. In Queen Elizabeth's time this question was determined against the sheriff. 3 Cro. 868. Noy 40. But I admit it has since been resolved otherwise. 3 Bulst. 198. And now it is held, that the sheriff shall not be answerable. 2 Cro. 419. 1 Roll. Abr. 807. D. 1. 1 Lev. 144. 3 Lev. 46.

But taking the law according to the latter resolutions, I shall shew, that the reasons they go upon do not affect this case.

1. In the case of mesne process, though the sheriff may, yet he is not bound to raise the posse. Dalt. 154. But in this case, where the prisoner is conveyed by process after judgment, he ought to take the same caution, as if he was upon a capias ad satisfaciendum, nay a greater, if he observes the words of the habeas corpus, which require him to convey the prisoner sub salvo et securo conductu. Besides, this is a process not so easy to be renewed as a capias ad satisfaciendum or mesne process. Cro. Car. 240, 255.

2. Another reason why rescue on mesne process is an excuse is, because of the multiplicity of such writs, which are executed at the same time in different parts of the county, which makes it impossible for the sheriff to raise the posse; but this is a writ which rarely issues, and there is no danger of having many of them to execute at the same time.

In the case of mesne process the plaintiff has the conduct of that, but the defendant may purchase the habeas corpus.

3. The objections are, 1. That we may have our remedy against the rescuers; but will not they send us back again to the sheriff? Besides, it is a doubt whether the plaintiff has any remedy against the rescuers; the sheriff indeed has, and therefore he is not hurt by being subjected to our action. Hutt. 95. 2 Cro. 419. Cro. El. 53. The wrong is done by both the sheriff and the rescuers. 1 Roll. Abr. 698. B. 3.

2. Say they, why should the habeas corpus put the sheriff in a worse condition, when he is obliged to bring her out in obedience to that command? But we say, no command of the crown can excuse him as to the subject. Dyer 296. b. 297. a. 1 Roll. Abr. 808.

3. It is objected, that this will be a hard case upon the sheriff, who may be ruined by combinations between the plaintiff and defendant. But has not the law furnished him with the means to prevent any thing of that nature, by investing him with a power to raise the posse?

Upon the whole it appears here has been a neglect, an interruption of the course of justice, a damage to the plaintiff, for which he ought to have redress.

Reeve contra. This is a rescue of one in custody on mesne process only, and not out of the walls of the prison: for she was brought thence by the King's command, which the sheriff was bound to obey. And 4 Co. 44. it is said, that every thing is to be taken most favourably for the officer. In the case of a capias ad satisfaciendum, the reason why the sheriff was liable was, because the party could have no new writ. Hob. sheriff of Essex's case. Though it is otherwise resolved since, that the party himself may retake him. 1 Sid. 330. 1 Lev. 211. 2 Keb. 340. 2 Lev. 109, 132. 1 Vent. 267. Show. 177. But what if he is rescued on mesne process, and cannot be re-taken; does not the plaintiff lose his debt as much in the case of an execution? The reasons now given for that case, are not given in the books.

This is no more than a custody on mesne process out of the walls of the prison; every common capias has the words salvo custodias, so no argument can be drawn from those words in the habeas corpus. The sheriff is liable in no case for a rescue, but where he was obliged to take the posse, which here he was not. If the sheriff, after the party is charged in execution, brings him out on a habeas corpus, it is no escape if he goes out of the direct way. 3 Co. 44. Moor 257.

And as to the objection, that the plaintiff is no party to the suing out the habeas corpus; is not that the case where there are several processes charged against the same person, and he is rescued when taken on one only? And though the warrant is to one bailiff only, yet that is no argument of a neglect, because that bailiff had it in his power to raise the posse without resorting back to the sheriff.

Adjournatur. And this term Pratt Chief Justice delivered the resolution of the court.

It was admitted at the bar, and is not now to be disputed, but that on the one hand, if the sheriff arrests the party by virtue of mesne process, and he is rescued as he carries him to gaol, it will be a good excuse for the sheriff. Cro. Jac. 419. And on the other hand, if the party be once within the walls of the prison, though the custody be on mesne process only, yet a rescue from thence thence by any but common enemies will be no excuse: if a company of rebels break the prison, and let out the prisoners, yet the sheriff is answerable; because the law supposes the sheriff and his posse are sufficient to resist such a force. 1 Roll. Abr. 311. 4 Co. 84. These, I say, are grounds that are not to be disputed.

The case at bar is new, and differs from both these; but, however, we must take it upon the different reasons of those cases. In the case of mesne process the sheriff, if he meets the party against whom he has such process by accident, and is told it is the defendant, he is bound to arrest him; and then because it is not supposed that he has always the posse along with him, he is excused against a rescue. But in the present case there is no such danger of surprize, he has notice before, that such a day he is to bring the party out of prison, and it is his duty, and so he is directed by the writ, to provide for the sure and safe conduct of the party. Here he has not taken that caution, whereby the plaintiff, who had an interest, a sort of property in the body of the prisoner, has sustained a damage. This damage has happened by the neglect of the sheriff, and therefore he must answer it to the plaintiff in this action. Judgment pro quer.

bastardy it must appear the child was born in the parish to which relief is ordered.
Salk. 474.

EXCEPTION was taken to an order of bastardy, that it did not appear the child was born in the parish to which the relief is ordered: for it ran, We A. and B. two justices of the borough of Lime Regis, residing within the limits where the parish church is, within which parish the child was born, do, &c. which is only an averment, that the justices resided in that parish where the child was born, but that might not be the same parish to which relief is given; and for this fault the order was quashed.

(a) 1 Barn. B.
R. 326.

Paf. 3 Geo. 2. Rex v. Childrens (a). An order was quashed, for not shewing the child was born in the parish, to which relief was ordered.

Between the Parishes of Eastwoodhey in com' Hants and Westwoodhey in com' Berks.

UPON appeal from an order of two justices for the removal of Robert Baker, Elizabeth his wife, and Thomas their son under seven years, from the parish of Westwoodhey to the parish of Eastwoodhey, the Sessions state the fact specially for the opinion of the court.

If a son grown up removes with his father as part of the family, he gains a new settlement with the father; but if the father afterwards removes and leaves him behind, he gains no settlement in this last place.

That forty years since, Thomas Baker, the father of this Robert, was seised in fee of a freehold estate in the parish of Hampstead Marshall in the county of Berks, where he lived till the year 1697, and had this son Robert, who was at that time eight years old. That in 1697. the father and all his family removed to Cheveley, where he rented a tenement of 20 l. per ann. for two years. That in 1699. he purchased a copyhold estate of 11 l. per ann. in the parish of Westwoodhey, whither he removed with his son and servants, and served churchwarden and other parish offices, and paid taxes, till 1716. when he purchased a cottage of 11 l. 12 s. 6 d. per ann. in Eastwoodhey, and went and lived upon it till his death; but they state it specially, that Robert the son staid behind in Westwoodhey, where he married a wife, and has work'd ever since on his own account, and that he is thirty years old. Upon the whole, the sessions confirm the order of the two justices for his settlement at Eastwoodhey.

Strange moved to quash the order of sessions, for that the settlement of Robert the son is either at Hampstead Marshall, where he was born, and where he lived till eight years old: Salk. 470. Or if it should be carried so far, as that he gained a new settlement with the father, by removing with him as part of his family, according to the case of Cunner v. Milton, Salk. 528. yet that can carry him no farther than Westwoodhey, which is the last place to which he accompanied his father; but let the settlement be in either it is not material now, the only question being whether here is any settlement in Eastwoodhey, for which there is no colour.

Mr. Strode e contra insisted, that let the son be of what age he will, he shall follow the settlement of the father, till he gains one by his own acquisition? And it appearing he had never done any thing to gain a settlement by act of his own, either in Hampstead Marshall, Cheveley, or Westwoodhey, then he must follow the settlement of the father as well in Eastwoodhey as in any of the rest.

C. J. The question is not where this man and his family are settled, but whether there appears a settlement of him in Eastwoodhey. If he had gone thither with his father as part of the family, possibly it might have been a settlement of him there, but by staying behind he was divided from his father, and therefore there is no colour to make it a settlement in Eastwoodhey. I think his settlement is in Westwoodhey, which was the last place where he lived as part of the father's family. To which Powys J. agreed. Et per Eyre J. He is settled at Westwoodhey, and it is not material how that settlement was acquired, whether by his own act, or the act of his father. Suppose a master has two farms in two parishes, and he removes during the year, and leaves the servant behind to take care of the farm: shall the master's gaining a new settlement transfer the settlement which the servant gains by his service? Certainly it shall not.

Fortescue J. accord, and the order was quashed (1).

On demurrer to assignment of errors the judgment is quod affirmetur.

After non pros the defendant shall find bail to the second action.

THE plaintiff had been non pros'd in a former action for want of a declaration, and now in a second action Serjeant Whitaker moved, that the defendant might be discharged upon common bail, alleging it to be the practice of C. ERROR, tam in the award of execution in a ſcire faciat againſt executors upon a judgment againſt their teſtator in C. B. in Ireland, quam in affirmatione ejusdem in B. R. there.

In the caſe of proceedings againſt a man and his wife as executrix, if a devaſtavit be returned, there needs no allegation of a conversion, and if it be alledged to be to their own uſe it may be rejected.

Strange pro querente in errore took ſeveral exceptions, and inter alia,

First, The proceedings are againſt a man and his wife as executrix, and the devaſtavit is returned in this manner, that goods of their teſtator did come to their hands ſufficient to pay the debt, which they (i. e. the huſband and wife) have waſted and converted to their own uſe, which he ſaid a feme covert could not do; and cited 1 Vent. 12, 24, 33. where in trover it was held ill, to ſay a feme covert converted goods to her own uſe; and though this be the caſe of an executrix, who has a particular intereſt in the goods, and may diſpoſe of them as ſhe pleaſes; yet that cannot alter the caſe, becauſe the conversion has quite extinguished that particular intereſt of hers, and can enure only to the benefit of the huſband. 1 Roll. Abr. 932. F. 1. ſpeaks of the ſheriff's returning, that the huſband had converted, and he ſays that in that caſe the execution ſhall be de bonis propriis of the huſband, whereas here it is awarded againſt the goods of them both. Sed per curiam, The precedents are ſo as this in the caſe of a feme executrix. It is ſufficient to ſay that the wife waſted the goods, without going on to ſpeak of a conversion; and therefore if the expreſſion be not proper, we may reject the converterunt in uſum ſuum proprium. In trover it is eſſential, but here it is not. 1 Roll. Abr. 930. pl. 9. Cro. Car. 519. are, that the judgment on ſuch a return ſhall be de bonis propriis of both (1).

Second exception. Upon the writ of error in B. R. before errors aſſigned, or diminution alleged, there goes a certiorari, by which all the ſeveral proceſſes of execution are brought up and made parcel of the record; whereas the only ground for awarding it can be to verify or falſify an aſſignment of errors, and therefore it ſhould not have iſſued before (2). Sed per curiam,

The court may award a certiorari before errors aſſigned.

(1) Vide Morfoot v. Chivers et al. (2) Bowers v. Mann, 2 Ld. Ux. poſt. 631. Smalley v. Kerfoot, Raym. 1554. poſt. 819. et Ux. poſt. 1094.

The court may take notice, that the record is imperfect, and award the writ for their own satisfaction (1).

Videtur cur' is no essential part of the judgment.

Third exception. In all judgments it must appear, the court has fully considered of the case, and are convinced that the judgment they give is right at the time of pronouncing it; and in Salk. 402. Atwood v. Burr, a judgment on demurrer was held erroneous, for want of quia videtur cur' quod placitum minus sufficiens in lege existit. In the case at bar it appears the judgment was affirmed before the merits of the case had been considered, for the record is, quia videbitur, in the future tense, instead of videtur: so that because it will appear at a time to come, that the record is right, therefore do they before that time affirm the judgment.

Sed per curiam, That case of Atwood v. Burr was of an inferior court; neither (as Mr. J. Eyre said) is the report of it right; indeed that point was mentioned in Mich. 1 Ann. but the cause hung till Hil. 4 Ann. when the judgment was reversed on another point. Videtur cur' is no judgment, Cro. El. 145 and is implied in the ideo consideratum est. There was a case in the Exchequer Chamber, where the quia videtur was, that the defendant's plea is good, ideo consideratum est, that the plaintiff have judgment. But the court said, that if it did not appear to be erroneous, they would not reverse it merely because a wrong reason was given for the judgment. The judgment was affirmed.

CASE upon a foreign bill of exchange by the indorsee against the indorfor, and on general demurrer it was objected, that they had not shewn a demand upon the drawer, in whose default only it is that the indorfor warrants: and because this was a point unsettled, and on which there are contradictory opinions in Salk. 131. and 133. the court took time to consider of it.

Indorsee of bill of exchange may be charged, without first resorting to the drawer.

Max Guyer v. Rhoads, 6 Ellis Ch. 267.

And on the second argument they delivered their opinions, that the declaration was well enough. The design of the law of merchants in distinguishing these from all other contracts, by making them assignable, was for the convenience of commerce, that they might pass from hand to hand in the way of trade, in the same manner as if they were specie; now to require a demand upon the drawer, will be laying such a clog upon these bills, as will deter every body from taking them: the drawer lives abroad, perhaps in the Indies, where the indorsee has no correspondent to whom he can send the bill for a demand, or if he could, yet the delay would be so great that no body would meddle with them. Suppose it was the case of several indorsements, must the last indorsee travel round the world before he can fix his action upon the man from whom he received the bill. In common experience every body knows, that the more indorsements a bill has, the greater credit it bears; whereas if those demands were all necessary to be made, it must naturally diminish the value, by how much the more difficult it renders the calling in the money. And as to the notion that has prevailed, that the indorfor warrants only in default of the drawer; there is no colour for it, for every indorfor is in nature of a new drawer, and at nisi prius the indorsee is never put to prove the hand of the first drawer, where the action is against an indorfor. The requiring a protest for non-acceptance is not because a protest amounts to demand, for it is no more than a giving notice to the drawer to get his effects out of the hands of the drawee, who by the other's drawing is supposed to have sufficient wherewith to satisfy the bill.

Upon the whole, we are of opinion, that in the case of a foreign bill of exchange, a demand upon the drawer is not necessary to make a charge upon the indorfor, but the indorsee has his liberty to resort to either for the money (1). Consequently the plaintiff must have judgment.

(1) In Lawrence v. Jacob, post. 515. and Lake v. Hayes, 1 Atk. 281. the same point is laid down generally, and no distinction taken between foreign and inland bills, and in Heylin v. Adamson, Burr. 669. D. acc. in the case of an inland bill.

At first the justices were only conservators of the peace, and the subsequent power to hear and determine given by the statutes 18 and 34 E. 3. is only, that by commission they may have such a power. The commission of the peace appears to have been altered into the present form immediately after making those statutes, which shews the opinion of the King's counsel at that time. Lambart says, that they shall have power, which must be understood by commission. As therefore this is not a proceeding upon their common law jurisdiction, but a jurisdiction given by statute; whenever they hold such pleas, they must shew an appointment to hear and determine, and we cannot intend that they have such a power.

DIBLEY pretending to have married Mrs. Turberville, a lady of fortune, took out a habeas corpus directed to her guardians, commanding them to bring her into court. To this writ I drew a return, that by her mother's will she was committed to the care of Mrs. Clarkson, who had put her out to school to the other defendant, where she had continued ever since with her own liking, and with the approbation of her guardian; and that she now remains there of her own accord, under no restraint: et nulla alia est causa, &c.

compence. And on the pleadings the case was this: Sir Harry being seised of a copyhold estate of inheritance of 90*l. per annum*, held of the manor of Petworth, of which the Duke of Somerset is lord, made a lease of part of it for seven years without licence at 13*l. per annum*. The Duke upon this brings an ejectment against all the plaintiff's copyhold, which occasioned the plaintiff to bring a bill in his own and his son an infant's name for relief. The Duke in his answer insisting on other causes of forfeiture, besides the making the lease without licence, Sir Harry brought a supplemental bill for discovery and relief against those other forfeitures: upon the plaintiff's giving judgment in ejectment subject to the order of the court, an injunction was granted, and now upon the hearing the case came out to be this.

Upon Sir Harry's marriage in 1693, all the copyhold lands were surrendered to the use of Sir Harry for life, with remainder to the first and every other son in tail male, in pursuance of an agreement before marriage for that purpose, but no admittance was ever taken upon that surrender. Before Sir Harry came into possession, there had been a quarry of stone in the freehold adjoining to the copyhold, and during Sir Harry's time it was worked in the copyhold; but whether it was first opened in the copyhold in the plaintiff's time did not appear. The avenue to the plaintiff's house, which consisted both of freehold and copyhold, was planted with timber trees by the plaintiff's father; the plaintiff had topped those trees that were on the copyhold part of the avenue, by which from timber they were become pollards. There were several hedges and boundaries of lands upon the copyhold, which the plaintiff had grubbed up and destroyed; but whether they are boundaries between copyhold and freehold, or only between one part and another of the copyhold, did not appear. And in the year 1714, the plaintiff, as before mentioned, let part of the copyhold for seven years, without licence, or any custom of the manor to warrant it.

Upon this it came in question, whether any, and which of these several acts are forfeitures at law? And if so, whether any, and which of them are relieveable in equity? And if not, whether the son's case is to be distinguished from the father's.

1. Whether these are forfeitures at law? Which were of four sorts: the digging the quarry, the topping the timber trees, the destroying the boundaries, and making the lease without licence.

As to the quarry the plaintiff's counsel insisted, it was opened even upon the copyhold in his father's time, and so purged by the admittance;

admittance; and his digging in it since was but like the case of lessee who may dig in quarries and mines that were open at the time of his lease, though he cannot upon any new ones.

As to the topping of timber trees, which the plaintiff insisted was done only for the uniformity of his walk, and without design to injure the lord, It was answered that it was voluntary waste, and the motives for doing it are not material to the lord.

As to the destroying the fences, a case was cited out of Litt. Rep. 264, &c. where grubbing up the fences and removing the boundaries upon copyholds were held to be forfeitures, without distinguishing between the outward boundaries and those within the copyhold, as it tends to the destroying the evidences relating to the lord's interest in the estate. And said it is on this foundation laid down 1 Inst. 53. that though a tenant might cut down wood to repair fences as he found them, yet not to make new fences.

As to the making the lease without licence, it was acknowledged on all sides to be a forfeiture at law.

2. The next question was, whether supposing all these to be forfeitures, relief was proper in this court, either upon the general case of these sort of forfeitures, or any particular equitable circumstances that may be in the present case.

For the particular equitable circumstances of this case, one was, that the steward's deputy ingrossed and was a witness to the lease. This was compared to the lord's being privy to or witness to such lease, which would be held in equity as a permission or kind of licence; and it has been held, that licence granted by a deputy steward was good. But answered, that this rather aggravated the injury, by making the lord's servant a party in the confederacy to injure him.

Another circumstance was the plaintiff's not having notice of this custom. But this is not material, for the tenant comes in under the customs of the manor, and is bound to take notice of them; and besides, this is common law.

[449] But if those circumstances were not sufficient to ground a relief upon, whether the general nature of those forfeitures will not admit of relief.

In favour of the plaintiff it was argued, that it is a sort of maxim that all forfeitures are odious. That copyholds are now become become a more fixed and established estate than they were formerly, and the law itself has been altering these hundred years very much in their favour; and therefore a court of equity ought to go as much in their favour, to keep them out of that vassalage and subjection which the original nature of their estates laid them under, which their present fixed condition seems inconsistent with. That the forfeitures are intended only to secure the lord's rents and services, and therefore very proper for a court of equity to interpose and prevent his having more than that security. And this is agreeable to the common cases of relief against the penalty of a bond, and upon mortgages, and conditions of re-entry on non-payment of a rent, and nomine pœne: in which cases this court will not allow the parties to take any other advantage of the forfeitures, than what is necessary to satisfy the original intent of the agreement. The law has annexed these conditions in the case of copyholds instead of the parties; but as it had something else in view by them, than the gaining the land to the lord; this court may make amends to the lord, and fulfil the design of the law, and save the estate to the party. In the case of making a lease without licence, the intent of the law in making that a forfeiture is, to prevent the lord's being disinherited of his interest in the copyhold, and to secure the fine due on a licence; both which may be easily secured, by obliging the tenant either to accept a licence, or make surrender and admittance and pay the fine; which will be a compleat recompence for any injury the lord may have suffered; and then it comes within the common rule, that this court will relieve against forfeitures, wherever a compleat satisfaction can be made for the injury which is the cause of the forfeiture.

Several cases were cited. Shelley v. Mason (a). in Lord Coventry's time, 5 Car. 1. where a copyholder came into this court to be relieved against a forfeiture by making lease without licence, and decreed the lord to account for the profits he had received since his entry, and pay the costs. 1 Chan. Rep. 51. where a copyholder was relieved by Lord Coventry for non-payment of fine on admittance. Cox v. Hickford by Lord Harcourt. The bill was to be relieved against a forfeiture by suffering a copyhold tenement to fall to ruin, and refusing to repair it for thirty years together, though frequently ordered to do it by the lord; the Chancellor refused to grant relief on two accounts, his obstinacy, and the lord's having been in possession nine years after his entry, in which case great stress was laid on the obstinacy of the copyholder. Case of Rowland v. Dean of Exon, where relief was granted against a forfeiture by cutting timber. Gnash v. Lord Derby, the decree of which was now read in court. The plaintiff having a copyhold tenement that wanted repair, applied to the defendant the lord of the manor to have some timber assigned for that purpose, but the lord refused to assign any; upon which the plaintiff hearing that there was a custom in the manor for two tenants to assign timber for the purpose of repair, did get two tenants to make such assignment, and then cut the trees down; upon which ejectment was brought, and a verdict for the lord, there being no such custom: the plaintiff brought his bill for relief, which was granted on his paying the value of the timber and costs at law and in equity. Cudmore v. Raven (b), where a quaker being tenant of a copyhold refused to take the oath of fealty, and the lord entered for the forfeiture, and the tenant was relieved. Cox v. Brown, 1 Chan. Rep. 170. a lease being made on condition not to assign it without licence, the tenant did assign; but relief was granted on search of precedents; it being the case of an assignee of an executor makes no favourable circumstance, because there were assets without it. Thomas v. Porter. Tenant of a copyhold durante viduitate cut down timber upon one copyhold in order to repair another, which was a forfeiture; but yet relief granted in this court.

If it is a difficult matter to ascertain damages in any of these cases of forfeiture, it is because there really is no damage; and surely it is no reason against relief, that the person who seeks it has done no injury.

For the defendant, these distinctions as to relief against forfeitures were insisted on. Whether the forfeiture was for non-feazance or mal-feazance, whether the condition was annexed by law or the party, whether there were any particular circumstances of equity or not.

Ante 449.

As to the difference between non-feazance and mal-feazance, as where tenant refuses to pay a fine upon admittance; this court will relieve, on doing that which he ought to have done. The difference is only as to the circumstance of time, which this court easily supplies. So where there is only permissive waste, the court has relieved; but if by obstinate refusal this forfeiture is aggravated, the court will look upon it as voluntary waste, and not grant relief, as in the case before cited of Cox v. Hickford.

[451]

All the instances of forfeiture in the present case are of voluntary acts. One is making a lease without licence, which is a disseisin of the lord, 4 Co. 21. b. and an attempt to disinherit him. The others are all voluntary wastes.

The next distinction is between conditions in law, and by the party. The intention of the parties is easy to be discovered, and you you answer the end of the contract, if you give them every thing they expected, which may in many cases be easily done. This is the case of all mortgages, conditions of re-entry on non-payment of rent, &c. But even in conditions of the parties, where the ascertaining the damage is not plain and clear, the court will not relieve against such conditions or penalties. It was never known that this court relieved against a nomine pœne for ploughing up ancient meadow. It was denied in the duchy of Lancaster, Eyre v. Hatton.

But in cases of forfeitures on conditions in law this court seldom relieves. If tenant for life makes a feoffment, or levies a fine sur consueance de droit come ceo, &c. it was never pretended, this forfeiture could be relieved in equity. Or if the reversioner brings waste on the statute for recovery of the place wasted, equity would not interpose. Those conditions in law are a sort of limitations of the estate of the party, and though the intent of the party is never so plain, equity will not alter the legal construction of the words: as where by will one gives an estate to A. for life, remainder to the heirs male of A. equity will not give the son of A. a remainder, and confine A.'s to a life estate, though the intent was plainly so.

But though this is generally the state of forfeitures, yet there may be some circumstances of equity to ground relief upon; and wherever the court has granted relief, it is upon some such circumstances, as where the party who is to take advantage of the condition is himself the means of its being broke. It was said by Lord Somers in the case of Bertie v. Falkland, that conditions precedent are not relievable, unless some indirect means be used by the party to prevent the performance. So in the case of Hamond v. Ainge before the present Chancellor, where a lord of a manor tells one that had a freehold held of his manor, that it was it copyhold, and he must be admitted by copy of court-roll, and pay a fine: the lord was in this court obliged to erase the admittance, and repay the fine. Salk. 231.

The third question relates to the infant plaintiff, whether he is in any better condition than the father.

It was admitted on all hands, that if an admittance had been taken pursuant to the surrender upon the marriage, the son being remainder-man could not be prejudiced as to his estate by the forfeiture of the tenant for life: only in that case the bill was too early for the son, whose interest was not concerned till the death of the father.

But though the son has no legal right, yet there being a surrender to his use, and this pursuant to a marriage agreement; it shall be considered in a court of equity as if it had been executed, and the infant would be very proper to bring a bill in this court against the father and the lord, in order to admit his father pursuant to the surrender, that he might in law be intitled to the remainder.

On the other side it was said, that Sir Harry not being admitted upon that surrender, continued tenant under his former admittance; and the lord was no party to, or concerned in the marriage settlement, his title was paramount to that, and consequently the forfeiture affected the inheritance, and should not be subject to or limited by the private trusts or transactions of the parties.

Lord Chancellor. This is a point of so great consequence, that if relief could be given in this court, it is strange it should not have been found out long ago. The forfeitures in those cases arise purely from the imbecility of the copyholder's estate. He was originally merely tenant at will, and is so still on all accounts but as to the continuance of his estate. There have been indeed very favourable constructions for the copyholder in that particular, because he is called tenant at will secundum consuetudinem manerii; it has been held, the lord cannot determine his will but according to that custom. The true meaning of those words secundum consuetudinem manerii was not to bound the lord's pleasure in the determination of his will, but that the tenant as long as he continued tenant was to hold his land under those terms and conditions which the custom had established.

These matters which are mentioned as forfeitures are indeed limitations of the estate; such as determine it, when they happen. Tenant for life making a greater estate than his own, gives up or surrenders the right which he had before, and yet he does no damage to the remainder-man. So tenant by copy taking upon him to make a greater estate than by law he may, and contrary to the nature of his estate, does by that determine his estate: the law has made it so; and what is there in this case to ground relief upon, and require me to set aside the law?

It is a hard law, and therefore the party must not be subject to it; but is not this directly repealing the law?

In action of waste for recovery of the place wasted, it is certain and admitted this court cannot relieve; and yet this may be called a very unconscionable thing. But is it so to take advantage of a law which which is known and equal to all? Nor can I see any difference, whether the statute makes this condition, or the common law makes it.

It is not sufficient to say here is no damage in this case, and therefore it is there can be no recompence given by this court, for it is the recompence that gives this court a handle to grant relief.

The true ground of relief against penalties is from the original intent of the case, where the penalty is designed only to secure money, and the court gives him all that he expected or desired: but it is quite otherwise in the present case. These penalties or forfeitures were never intended by way of compensation, for there can be none.

But even in the case of copyholds there are some cases of forfeitures intended for a different purpose, as for non-payment of rent or fines, which are only by way of security of the rent or fine; and therefore when these are paid afterwards with interest, the money itself is paid according to the intent, only as to the circumstance of time; which is the true foundation of the relief which this court gives in those cases.

Cases of agreements and conditions of the party, and of the law, are certainly to be distinguished; you can never say the law has determined hardly, but you may that the party has made a hard bargain.

Thus it stands on the general state of these kind of forfeitures. But what equitable circumstances are there peculiar to this case? It is certain there may be circumstances, which may make it fit and equitable for this court to relieve, either in these cases or in actions on the statute of waste: if the lord should give the tenant encouragement by parol only to pull down a messuage, and he did it accordingly; this might induce the court to prevent the lord's taking advantage of a fraudulent act of his own. In the present case, if the lord had been present at the making the lease, and advised it; relief might be reasonable: but the steward's standing by, or even ingrossing the lease, is rather a circumstance against relief, as it looks like a confederacy to cheat the lord, and break the customs of the manor.

As to the other cases of forfeiture relating to the quarry, the topping the trees, and the destroying the boundaries; there does not enough appear to determine, whether they are legal forfeitures or no: but if they are, I think they are all, as the making the lease, under the same consideration in this court, and not proper for relief.

As to the infant, his case does not seem as yet ripe for this court; but it may be a question how far his equitable interest will intitle him to be secured against these forfeitures (1).

I am apprehensive the lord must always have such a tenant upon his lands, as may be sufficient to answer all demands, and capable of committing forfeitures.

Suppose one lets a trustee be admitted for him, who commits a forfeiture; no doubt the estate would be forfeited, and the cestui que trust would have no equity against the lord,

Suppose the trustee should die without heir, the lord would be intitled by escheat, without being subject to the trust.

The person who is the legal tenant, is subject, with regard to that estate, to all the imbecilities of that estate; if not, by the means of a trust a copyhold would be intirely discharged from all those imperfections it labours under, and the lord's interest be taken away, for the lord can take advantage of no body's acts but those of his tenant. He is not at all concerned with the private agreements or trusts of the parties.

Surrender of copyhold lands to the following uses, declared by marriage settlement to that of the tenant for his life, remainder to his first son in tail, &c. if there has been an admittance upon it, the act of the tenant cannot prejudice the son who is a distinct tenant.

In the present case, suppose Sir Harry admitted according to the surrender, the infant is then tenant in remainder, and the father's act cannot prejudice the son, who is now admitted as a distinct tenant (2). But till admittance the son is no tenant; and suppose when he comes of age he should release to his father, there would be no occasion for any admittance at all, but Sir Harry would continue tenant upon his old admittance. The lord is not bound to take notice of any thing, but what appears on the court rolls.

I am therefore apprehensive, it will be a hard case to relieve the son. But I agree, that if the lord's fine for admittance be paid, though there was no actual admittance; since the lord received all the advantage that could be had from the admittance, it might be a good reason for relieving the son; and then it might be proper, perhaps even now, for the son to bring a bill against his father and the lord, in order to have his father admitted pursuant to the surrender. But it does not appear whether the fine was paid.

(1) In the report in Prec. in Chanc. 573. the Chancellor is said to have been clear, that as there had been no admittance upon the surrender to the uses of the settlement of 1693. the father was to be considered as absolute tenant to the Duke.

(2) Rastal v. Turnor, Cro. Eliz. 598. Baspool v. Long, ib. 879. 1 Yel. 1. Noy. 42. S. C. 1 Rol. Abr. 509. l. 15. Anon. Moore 49. contra.

I should therefore for these reasons dismiss the bill absolutely. But since the points of law are disputed as to all the forfeitures, excepting the making the lease, which concern other parts of the copyhold (3), and since judgment in ejectment is given, which would take in other lands as well as those comprized in the lease; I think the bill should be retained, till the points of law are tried at law upon the ejectment, which the plaintiff shall immediately receive declarations in, and plead to trial.

As to costs, they shall wait the event of the trial, and as to them I think the equity of them will depend upon the issue of that; if the plaintiff recovers there, he should pay costs here, because he had no occasion to come into this court, excepting as to the discovery. If the Duke gets the better, I think as this is a point of equity that has not been fully settled before, and in such case it is natural for a man to struggle the most to retain his estate; it would be too hard to make him lose his estate and pay costs likewise.

As to the infant I will not dismiss the bill absolutely, but without prejudice, because being an infant he may not have made the best of his case.

(3) From this it appears, that the Chancellor considered the making a lease of copyhold lands to amount only to a forfeiture of the part demised, as in the case of a feoffment, by the tenant it has been held, that that part of which it is made is alone forfeited thereby. Fuller v. Jerry, 1 Roll. Abr. 509. 65. There is a dictum however in 4 Co. 27. a. that all the copyhold which is held by the same tenure shall be forfeited by a feoffment of part. But if the Chancellor had been decidedly of opinion that any of the other acts alleged to have been committed by the plaintiff had amounted to a forfeiture at law, they being in the nature of waste, the whole copyhold would have been forfeited. 1 Roll. 4 Bro. Par. Ca. 7.

S. C.

IN the year 1674. a match was proposed between Mr. Frederick, son of Sir John Frederick an alderman of London, and Mrs. Marino, a city orphan, whose fortune was 8000 l. in pursuance of which articles were entered into between Sir John Frederick and his son of the first part, Mrs. Marino and her relations of the second part, and certain trustees therein mentioned of the third part, by which it was agreed that Sir John should pay 11,500 l. 5000 l. part of it, to Mr. Frederick, and the other 6500 l. to the trustees, which with the 8000 l. to be received from the chamber of London, should be vested in land, to be settled as usual upon the husband for life, remainder to the wife for life, remainder to the first and every other son in tail, &c.

Upon 25th of February application was made to the court of aldermen for licence for Mr. Federick to marry Mrs. Marino, upon which several entries appear to be made that day : 1. That a licence be granted, if Mr. Common Serjeant approve of the marriage. 2. That when a person applies for a licence to marry a city orphan he shall be urged to take up his freedom. 3. A freedom is granted to Mr. Frederick, which he is to take up in a year's time.

The marriage soon after took effect, and 15th of March 1680. Sir John Frederick being then deputy Mayor, there is an entry, that upon consideration Mr. Frederick had not taken up his freedom according to his agreement, whereby his wife would not be intitled to her thirds, it is referred to the Recorder and Common Serjeant, to consider, whether the settlement upon the lady was agreeable to the intent of the court ; but there were no further proceedings, neither did Mr. Frederick ever take up his freedom, but proved a very unkind husband, and a severe father, and by his will devised 10 l. only to his wife, 1000 l. to his eldest son, and each of his daughters, and the residue of his personal estate, which amounted to 400,000 l. he gave to the children of his second son.

The widow preferred her bill, that she might have the benefit of the agreement, as if Mr. Frederick had taken up his freedom. And after several arguments Lord Chancellor pronounced his decree.

The demand of the plaintiff was grounded upon the common rule in a court of equity, that where an agreement is made upon a good consideration, which is not performed, the party intereste may apply to a court of equity, to have the same benefit as he would have had in case the agreement had been performed.

It was urged, that the articles made by Sir John and his son with the lady and her relations, and which was a compleat agreement, do not contain any such clause that Mr. Frederick should take up his freedom. Answer: An agreement between some parties does not hinder other persons from entering into another agreement, and the agreement to take up his freedom was with the court of aldermen. Besides, the relations of the lady had no power to dispose of her in marriage, but the court of aldermen alone could make a legal agreement for that purpose; so that what was done by the relations was only proposals to be laid before the court of aldermen; they might have disapproved of the whole, or part, or have required something further. They might have agreed by parol, (for this was before the statute of frauds) that Mr. Frederick, should do something for her; they did require something farther of Mr. Frederick, when they made their agreement with him, and this is proved beyond all doubt by the records of the proper court, which had cognizance of this affair, and had it then under consideration; so that this is in nature of a fine, for it is an agreement of the parties entered upon record.

It was urged, that this was only done by the city to provide freemen of substance for the benefit of the city, and not designed for the benefit of the lady, to be part of the agreement. Answer; This is a very strange construction, that a court of aldermen, when they are transacting a thing which concerns an infant under their care, should consider their own private interest, without any regard to the benefit of the infant; this is not to be intended of any persons who act in a publick character, [457]

It was argued, that if the common serjeant approved the match, the licence was to be granted absolutely; and the agreement to take up the freedom was voluntary, and no part of the contract. Answer; What was referred to the common serjeant was only the validity of the settlement in point of law; not the sufficiency of it, which the court of aldermen could judge of better than the common serjeant. And the taking up his freedom is to be looked upon as part of the provision.

It was argued, that it is probable this part was waived afterwards. Answer; The court of aldermen could not waive it, because they were only trustees; and it is plain it was not waived before the marriage, because the court of aldermen some years after inquire into the reason why it was not complied with, and the wife being a feme covert could not waive it.

It

Equity will execute a contract made upon good consideration, whether it relates to a custom or not.

It has been said, that a court of equity ought not to give relief in this case, because it is to support a custom against the rules of law. Answer; A court of equity will support and execute a contract made upon a good and sufficient consideration, whether it relates to a custom or not, and will prevent a fraudulent avoiding of the custom, as a fraudulent disposition of goods.

It has been urged, that if the city had applied for the guardianship and care of the orphan under this settlement, they could not have had relief; because he was not actually a freeman when he died. Answer; There is no consideration arising from the city, and therefore no grounds for a court of equity to assist them.

It was objected, that the party being dead, it was become impossible that a specific performance should be had, and this court will not give damages. Answer; Though a specific performance cannot be had, yet the end and design of it may be obtained, which is all that a court of equity requires; for if he had been alive, and desired not to take up his freedom, to avoid the trouble and expence of bearing offices; and could he have given the court satisfaction, that his wife and children should have the same benefit: I do not know that a court of equity would have compelled him to have taken up his freedom.

Objection: It will be very improper to admit such an application after his death; because had he been alive, he might have vested his estate in land, and disposed of it by will, as he has done of the personal estate. Answer; This is an argument not to be insisted upon in a court of equity, that the effect of the contract ought not to be decreed after his death, because had he known that you would have insisted on it, he would have contrived some way to have avoided it: where money is vested in trustees to be laid out in land and settled upon J. S. in tail; if he dies before the settlement, he cannot dispose of the money; and yet if the settlement had been made, he might have levied a fine, and suffered a recovery, and disposed of the land. A case was mentioned, that where tenant in tail makes a mortgage by bargain and sale, and covenants for farther assurance, and dies without levying a fine; a court will not compel the issue in tail to complete the title (1) Answer; The issue in tail claims prior to the person who made the mortgage, and not as his representative. But where tenant in fee-simple makes a sale by bargain and sale, which is not inrolled, with covenants for further assurance, a court of equity will compel his heir to make good the title, because he is representative, and claims under the covenantor. So it is in the present case. Therefore he decreed that one third should go to the widow, and one third amongst the children, they waiving their legacies under the will (2). As to the other third, the will stands good as to that. Afterwards in May 1731 the decree was affirmed in the House of Lords.

Trin. 6 Geo. rot. 338.

THE plaintiff declares upon a special agreement, that in consideration of 252 l. paid to the defendant, he agreed to transfer 6000 l. South-Sea stock to the plaintiff, his executors, administrators or assigns, at any time before the 9th of January 1720, within three days after the same should be demanded by note in writing delivered to the defendant, or left for him at his house in Angel Court, upon payment of the further sum of 9000 l. Then he sets forth, that he appointed one James Martin to demand the stock, and pay the price it was agreed to be sold at, who on the 25th of March 1720, left a note in writing at the defendant's house, requiring him to transfer the stock on the 28th, where he says he attended all the while the books were open, but the defendant did not appear to transfer. The defendant pleads, that the demand was made by the plaintiff the 20th day of January, and that upon the 21st he transferred the stock according to the agreement. The plaintiff replies, that he did not transfer the stock on the 21st modo et forma as he has pleaded. And the defendant demurs.

On a covenant to transfer stock paying so much, &c. What is to be the first act. Vide post. 535, 615.

Wearg pro defendente took several exceptions,

1. This contract cannot be assigned, for it is a chose en action; and therefore the defendant was not bound to transfer to Martin, because that would not have been a performance of his agreement. And if it be said, that Martin is not an assignee of the contract, but only a person authorized to pay the money and take the stock; the objection to that is, that his authority is only to demand, not to receive the stock, for so the plaintiff has made his case in the declaration.

2. The demand is to be by notice to the defendant, or leaving a note for him at his house; but here the averment is only that a note note was left at his house, and perhaps that might be so managed as never to come to his hands, which was designed to be obviated by the words for him.

3. The agreement is, that upon the transferring the stock the plaintiff shall pay 9000*l*. which if it be not a condition precedent, yet according to Turner v. Goodwin (1) it is at least a concurrent act; and therefore the plaintiff should have shewn, that he had the money there to have paid upon the transfer; but all he says is, that Martin attended to accept the stock, not to pay for it, though his authority was at first both to demand and pay.

4. But if the declaration be good, yet the replication is ill, for the demand pleaded was on the 20th, and the transfer the 21st, which was the next day, so that if the issue was found for the plaintiff it would not do, because the jury could not find a breach of the condition in saying he did not transfer on the 21st, when he had two days after that to do it by the plaintiff's own shewing. It is to all purposes the same with payment before the day.

Assignment of a bond amounts to a covenant that the party shall have the money.

Reeve contra. I agree, Martin cannot be a legal assignee, but only a person appointed to transact this matter on behalf of the plaintiff. The assignment of a bond is good to some purpose, for it amounts to a covenant that the party shall have the money when received. Martin is appointed to require the stock and pay for it, which necessarily gives him a power to take it.

2. Notice left at a man's house is in the nature of the thing a notice left for him.

3. The money was not to be paid but upon transferring, so no necessity of a tender; and we having shewn that the defendant was not there to perform his agreement, that is enough to intitle us to our action.

4. Here the day is material, and might therefore very properly be made parcel of the issue (2).

(1) Fort. Rep. 145. Gillb. 40. "He assigning over to him, &c." 10 Mod. 153. 189. 122. Vin. In Viner they are "upon his assigning." Abr. vol. 20. p. 183. pl. 9. The rep. in Fortescue, Gilbert, and (2) Vide Jennegan v. Harrison, 10 Modern agree in making the words of the covenant to be, ante 317.

Chief Justice. Assign signifies no more than a person appointed to accept; and he being authorized to require and pay, surely that is enough to empower him to receive it. The notice is shewn to be for him, how else could it be a request to him to do the act, which the declaration shews was made?

The payment of the money is not a condition precedent, but a concurrent act; and if the defendant had been there, the plaintiff must have laid down his money, though not so as to part with it till transfer; and so it was held in the case of Turner v. Goodwin (3).

As to the replication, consider if the defendant says he did it on a day sooner than he was obliged, whether it is not enough to say he did not do it on the day he pleads he did; for it must be taken he had waived the benefit of any longer time.

It was spoke to a second time upon the former exceptions. And Fazakerley pro defendente insisted, that the plaintiff ought not to have fixed the day, but have left the defendant to his liberty of appointing which of the three days he pleased, since that time was given in case and for the benefit of the defendant.

Sed per curiam: The demand was made to have the stock at the time most for the defendant's advantage; and if it suited his convenience to do it sooner, he might have given notice to the plaintiff. As to the plaintiff's not shewing a tender, we think that ought to come from the defendant by way of excuse, that he was there ready to have transferred, if the plaintiff or any body for him had been there to have paid the money. The notice as it is laid is well enough within the meaning of the contract, for it must be a notice left for him if what the declaration says be true, that notice was left at his house requiring him to transfer the stock. As to the exception taken on the former argument to the replication, the court did not much debate it, because admitting it ill, yet then the plea was so too, and it must consequently come to be adjudged on the goodness or badness of the declaration.

The plaintiff had judgment, which was affirmed in the Exchequer Chamber and House of Lords.

Q. Whether there can be a re-extent into another county without a total eviction.

2 Will. Rep. 91.
Fort. 375. S. C.

UPON a trial in ejectment a case was made, on which the sole question was, whether after an extent upon a statute into one county, and a liberate returned and filed, the conu-see can have any other extent into another county.

Serjeant Chefbyre argued, that he might. At common law there could be no execution against lands, but in the case of the crown; and when it was given in the case of the subject, he was to extend all the lands, or else the tenant where part only was extended might defeat it by audita querela. 3 Co. 14. 2 Inst. 296. And where the lands lay in several counties, there was a necessity for several extents and liberates. Mo. 524. 2 Cro. 506.

There are many precedents before the 32 H. 8. c. 5. some where the extent went into several counties for the whole debt, Co. Ent. 296, 297. which indeed is the properest way, because the judgment is intire, and others into one county for so much of the debt, into another for another part, and into a third for the rest. Rast. 596. Dy. 162, 208. Mo. 24. 2 Cro. 246. 2 Bendlow. 59. Dalt. 29. 1 Sid. 194. 2 Roll. Abr. 469. pl. 6. 482. pl. 16. Fitzh. Execution 40. So it is plain, that before the statute 32 H. 8. c. 5. we might have had this extent.

And as to that statute, the question will be, whether it has altered the law in this respect: which it has not, because that statute gives a remedy only in the case of a total eviction, which this is not, for this is only a further carrying on and perfecting the first execution. The scire facias is given only to the party who is evicted out of all, but that is not the plaintiff's case, and therefore he must seek his remedy as he could by law before the statute. And in the petty bag there are abundance of precedents to this purpose, the practice having never been disputed till this case.

Reeve contra. I agree this case depends upon the law as it stood before the statute 32 H. 8. and I take the law to be, that it is not the return of the sheriff, but the acceptance of the party, that binds him in this case. Will any body say, that after an extent of all the lands of the debtor in one county, a subsequent purchase of lands in the same county can be taken in? No body can say it, and yet it is certain if the purchase had been after the acknowledgment, and before the extent, it might have been.

been extended: and why should there be any difference as to lands in another county? The rule in the Register 152. a. is, that in the case of extents into several counties, each must recite the award into the other county. The precedents of the debt's being divided, are an argument that if the first execution had been for the whole debt, it would have concluded the party: Dy. 162. 2 R. 2. 7. b. 15. H. 4. 14. b. 2 Cro. 338. 1 Lev. 92. 3 Lev. 269. Lutw. 429. In 2 Keb. 314. this very case is cited, and said to be ill.

Per curiam, We are all of opinion, that if the prayer of an extent into the second county was entered at the time the first extent was taken out, then the second extent will be regular, otherwise not. N. B. Upon application to my Lord Chancellor he gave them leave to enter the prayer nunc pro tunc, so this court made no rule, but it went off upon proposals of going to a new trial. And the cause went down to trial, and a verdict for the plaintiff, subject to the Judge's (a) opinion; who on hearing counsel ordered the posse to the plaintiff. And a writ of error being brought, and no good bail put in, the plaintiff had his execution.

There cannot be a new extent into another county, unless prayed at the time the first issued.

UPON a habeas corpus to the Mayor of London's court, the custom of London is returned, that the portorage from any vessel on the river, and meeterage of corn, roots, &c. imported or exported, belongs to the city, upwards from Staines Bridge to London Bridge, and downwards as far as Tendal in Kent, and also another custom to make by-laws, confirmed by Richard the Second, where any of their customs wanted remedium congruum.

Custom of the city of London that none but free porters shall carry corn, &c. good. 10 Mod. 338. S. C. but only the argument of Peter Williams.

That in the 18th year of King James the First a by-law was made by the corporation, "That the corn porters should be a company with twenty-four assistants, who were called free porters, who should work at a particular settled rate; and that none but the free porters should intermeddle in importing or exporting any corn, roots, &c. within the bounds mentioned in the custom, on pain of 20 s. for every offence, (except in time of danger or urgent necessity, or in the case of bona peritura) the forfeiture to be recovered by action in the name of the chamberlain, and four hundred porters are appointed for future."

That the free porters have ever since used and exercised this by-law, till the defendant intruded by carrying of barley, though a free porter was present, per quod forisfecit 20 s. which the plaintiff, as chamberlain, is intituled ad exigendum et habendum, and for which he sues in the Mayor's court.

Pal. 6 Geo. it was argued by Serjeant Pengelly pro defendente against a procedendo, and that the return be filed. 1. Because it is informal in setting out the claim. 2. Because the custom was ill. And then 3. The by-law must fall of course. Or 4. Though the custom should be good, yet the by-law is ill.

1. This is a franchise supposed to be vested in the body polittick, and therefore ought to be claimed by prescription, being personal. 2 Roll. Abr. 579. pl. 2. Hob. 85. the difference between a prescription and custom is, that one is personal, and the other local, and to be alleged in an insensible thing, as a place. 4 Co. 32. 6 Co. 60. 1 Inst. 113. And the construction of them is very different, because it is sufficient if a custom is reasonable; whereas a prescription must have a lawful commencement. Dav. 32. 6 Co. 50. b. And it is likewise laid in an absurd manner, that they have, time out of mind, been called by several names, and yet claim the portage as belonging, time out of mind, to a body called by the present name. Dy. 279. Nor have they averred any interest in the port, so as to raise a merit in themselves for what they claim.

2. The custom is unreasonable, and ill.

1. Because it deprives a man of that natural right which he has to employ one he knows and can trust, and obliges him to make use of a perfect stranger whom he may not be safe in trusting. And it tends to no good end, as the preventing of fraud, because when people are at their liberty to employ any body, they will, for their own sakes, take care it is a trusty one.

2. Because it is not confined to the carriage of goods as a trade, but extends even to what a man brings from his own garden in the country for his private use in town. 1 Roll. Abr. 561. pl. 4. Hob. 189.

3. The city does not appear to be at any expence in repairing the port, for this is not a toll for the use of the port, which perhaps might account for the reasonableness of its commencement. 1 Vent. 71. 1 Sid. 464. 1 Mod. 47. 104. 2 Lev. 96. Raym. 232. In the case of Cudden v. Gilstrup, Trin. 12 W. 3. upon the custom of weighing at the city beam, it was positively positively averred, that the city kept a key, and had proper officers for the receiving of goods.

4. Because it extends to places out of the limits of the city, and you cannot take notice what they are, as you do on a writ of error. Salk. 269. 1 Vent. 196. Pal. 44. By-laws will not bind out of the limits. 3 Mod. 158. Jones Sir T. 144. And then if it goes too far, and is void in part, it will be void in the whole; for a custom is intire. Hob. 189.

5. This is only a bodily labour, where no skill is required, and therefore it is unreasonable to deprive the other freemen from exercising this business by themselves, or their servants; and no length of time can make good an unreasonable custom. 1 Roll. Abr. 559. pl. 6. Davis 32. 11 Co. 86. 8 Co. Waggoner's case. In the case of the Mayor of Winchester v. Wilks, Pas. 4 Ann. it was held, that a right to trade could not be taken away without a consideration. Salk. 203.

3. If the custom is ill, the by-law will fall of course, because it is not only liable to the same objections, but to others also. For,

4. The by-law itself is ill,

1. Because it exceeds the custom, which is only to and from such places upon the river, whereas the by-law prohibits the landing, carrying up and down from one ship to another, and to warehouses near adjoining to the port. And by the clause which settles the wages, it appears they go as far as Cheapside.

2. It is not restrained to the carrying goods for hire, but even where the owner carries his own, which is highly unreasonable. 1 Roll. Abr. 364. pl. 6. Mo. 576, 591.

3. The merchant or the publick have no benefit by this. Mich. Vide post. 675. 13 W. 3. Lewis's case. An act of common council, that none should use dancing, that was not free of the company of musicians, was held void, because the party could not compel them to admit him. 5 Mod. 104. Here we cannot oblige a free porter to work, so this goes in destruction of trade; and such by-laws have always been held ill. Palm. 395. 2 Roll. Rep. 391.

4. The city ought not to impose a penalty for breach of their own franchise. Would not a custom that cattle depasturing upon my common should be forfeited, be held ill?

5. This is a great incumbrance to trade: the merchant is to let a meeter know his goods are ready to be landed: this is to be signified by him to one of the rulers, who is then and not otherwise to appoint a porter.

Mr. Solicitor General contra. The first objection goes to all the returns from the city of London, which are all by way of custom, as in Waggoner's case. This amounts to a prescription being in the case of a body politick, which has perpetuity, and then the calling it a custom will not alter the case. The manner of claiming does not import that the city have had no more than one name at a time, for a corporation may have several; and so it is enough to say, this franchise has been in them time out of mind by either of their names. In the case of the quo warranto, the present name of mayor, commonalty, and citizens was only mentioned.

As to the merits. The general question is, whether this by-law be good, so as to support this action: and as on the one hand the court will not suffer us to usurp a jurisdiction we have not, so on the other hand it will not deprive us of any legal privilege we have.

I agree this by-law is in restriction of trade, 1. By way of exclusion of strangers, and 2. By regulation for publick convenience, both which I shall shew are proper and good. 1. The custom is good; 2. The by-law has pursued it.

1. As to the custom in restriction of trade, there are three sorts: 1. Restraints where there is no one of the trade. Regist. 105. 2. Only partial, where some are supposed to use the trade. Sir William Jones 162. 3. As to those who are expressly alleged to use the trade, which is our case, and there every member is presumed to receive a benefit. Cro. El. 203. 2 Bul. 195. M. 22 H. 6. 14. 2 Brownl. 177. 8 E. 3. 37. 8 Co. 125. Which are all cases of restriction in particular districts for the benefit of persons using the trade, and yet these are as much against the common right of the publick. This custom and by-law have been tacitly allowed. 1 Mod. Cas. 123. Cudden v. Eastwick was against the employer; and there indeed it was held ill, because he could not know who was or who was not a free porter; but yet it was not disputed as to the power of appointing porters. Salk. 143.

1. It is objected that this restrains bodily labour, and that too in a business for which no skill is required. Answer: Whether it it be an art or not is never the measure, but the consideration is the right of the persons, as in the case of the Gravesend boat.

2. It is said here is no consideration, because the city is not obliged to provide porters. Answer: That is implied in the nature of the custom. It is stated that their officers have done it, and that amounts to saying they have maintained officers. The defendant might have given such a matter in evidence, and it would have been a sufficient excuse. 22 H. 6. 14. the case of a mill, and in the Gravesend boat case there was no consideration expressed. Co. Ent. 641. Raft. 9. b, 591. Hern 83. Brownl. Red. 63. 1 Brown's Ent. 68.

3. It was said here are not porters enough. This is answered by the power lodged in the mayor and aldermen to increase the number; but that is a matter of fact not before the court.

4. That the owner is restrained from carrying his own goods. Vide Andr. 98. Answer: He is not excluded, being tacitly excepted. Pro mercede shews it was intended only to take in the carrying by way of trade. And in Wagoner's case it was said, that making candles to be spent in a man's own family was not prohibited.

5. They say they have no recompense. But surely this objection is very hard after so long an enjoyment, when the circumstances which first established it are forgot. There were many tenures kept on foot, though people were at a loss how to account for them. It must be supposed this was created by compact between the founders of the city and the first traders.

6. This binds strangers. Do not all exclusive customs do so? And they are no otherwise useful than as they do so.

7. They say it extends beyond the limits of the city. Answer: The whole district appears to be within the port of London. 1 Roll. Abr. 557. Calth. 115. But that will not destroy the custom. Indeed without the custom the by-law would be void, according to the cases cited, which are all of bye-laws. The customs of London are all confirmed by Parliament, and though I agree that extends only to good customs, yet it shews of what consideration the customs of London are above those of other places; and a particular regard has been always had to them, as appears in Wagoner's case 126. 2 Roll. Rep. 227. This very custom is averred in the return to have been confirmed by Parliament.

2. The by-law has pursued the custom; it follows the words of it, but then it is said,

K k 3

1. That

1. That the city have made themselves judges in their own cause. But are there not many resolutions in favour of these by-laws? And was there not a penalty too in the case of the city beam; and yet it was allowed, because no inconvenience would follow, since the court may judge of the reasonableness of the penalty. 1 Lev. 16.

2. It is said the freemen of the city are excluded. But is not this done in full common council, where their own consent is implied? And why may not they consent to part with any branch of their privilege?

3. They tell us, it binds foreigners out of the district. Answer: It is done by custom, and that according to Wagoner's case is good, even in the case of a private benefit. The by-law can only be void pro tanto as to what arises out of the city, as in the case of an award. 2 Vent. 33. This carriage appears to have been in London, and so within a part of the by-law that is good: and this answers another objection, that the by-law exceeds the custom, for this is no case within the excess.

The inconveniencies in this case are answered by the exception, which warrants a carrying by the non-members in such cases.

The custom therefore we say is good, and well pursued by the by-law: that the further provisions will not infect what is consistent with the custom; and even those provisions will be good under the notion of by-laws for the regulation of trade: this is a case within the custom, and therefore we pray a procedendo.

Pengelly replied. It has not been shewn, and I rely upon it, that the merchant ought not to be obliged to employ these porters, when he has no means to compel them to attend and do the business.

Curia advisare vult. And it was spoke to this term upon some of the objections that seemed to have most weight with the court.

Wearg for the city. One objection is, that this is to restrain a man from the use of his bodily labour, to which every one has a natural right. But is not the custom to restrain the exercising a trade by one not free allowed, and is not this more reasonable? [468] If a man is not to use an art which he has been seven years in learning, and perhaps not able to turn his hand to any thing else, surely he may be restrained from one sort of bodily labour, and apply himself to another.

But the great objection is, that the custom as here laid extends itself out of the city. It does indeed appear to go beyond the walls, but what we rely upon is, that the liberties of the city and their superintendency on the river of Thames extends from Staines Bridge to Yendal. 14 E. 2. Lib. regum antiquorum 256. cited in Stow. 35. It appears the justices in Eyre sitting in London took cognizance of a matter arising upon the river of Thames; the defendant pleaded to their jurisdiction, et justiciarii dixerunt quod aqua Thameſie pertinet ad civitat' London usque mare, et si velit respondeat. 9 E. 4. p. 2. m. 7. It appears the King had granted to the Earl of Pembroke power to build a wear in the Thames, but upon complaint of the city it was repealed, with this declaration, quod de antiquo jure habent cives London supervisum et gubernationem aque Thameſis ad pontem de Staines. Stow. 37. makes mention of them, and the records themselves are so. 1 Roll. Abr. 557. the very limits now in question are declared. And in Seaccario, 3 Jac. 1. Ro. 89. Co. Ent. 535. The Attorney General confesses the claim of the city to a jurisdiction on the Thames between Yendal and Staines Bridge.

The claim is confined to the port of London, which is an averment, that the port extends so far, and the court will intend the port to be part of the city, as in the case of a bridge it has been done. 1 Lev. Bernard v. Bernard. The custom of the city that their traders may set up in any part of the kingdom extends beyond the city, and yet that has been allowed. 1 Mod. 79. 1 Saund. 311. The case of the Gravesend watermen extends all the way between that town and London.

C. J. I am of opinion that both the custom and by-law are good, notwithstanding the objections that have been taken: I shall not go over them all, because the opinion of the court has been given as to some of them upon the former arguments.

A custom to restrain trade in a particular place is good; and surely much more so, where the restraint is only from bodily labour in one instance, than where it prevents a man from exercising an art he has been a long time in learning. I think the custom is good, as it is a convenience to the publick, and that there is an equivalent by the obligation the city is under to provide porters; if they do not, I am of opinion an action will lie, as in the common case of a ferry; neither is the merchant obliged to rely on an action only, for he may certainly employ who he pleases if the free porters do not attend. The convenience to the merchant is very great, in having persons ready to assist him as soon as he comes into port, and so he is not obliged to go and search for porters who are strangers to him.

James v. Watson
12 Cl. & F. 722.

As to the objection about the extent, I think it is fully answered by the ancient records that have been cited, and above all by the confession of the Attorney General, which is of more weight than any of the rest; since it cannot be imagined that the King's Attorney would confess a jurisdiction against the crown, which the city had not the clearest right to. We must take the port to be within the limits; or if it went beyond the limits of the city, yet I do not see how this case can be distinguished from that of the Gravesend watermen. The custom of meetage extends as far, and yet that has never been questioned upon this account.

A by-law which consists of several particulars may be good in part, and void for the rest.

There is no doubt but a by-law may be good in part, and void for the rest; for where it consists of several particulars, it is to all purposes as several by-laws, though the provisions are thrown together under the form of one. I am of opinion there ought to be a procedendo. Powys J. accord?

Eyre J. The reasons on which the other customs of meetage and weighing at the city beam have been allowed, will support this; because an action will lie, if the city do not provide porters. Corporations or publick bodies are presumed to discharge their duty in cases of this extensive nature better than any private persons can. Et per Fortescue J. If this was an inconvenient custom, it would have been complained of before so long an enjoyment. The case of carts was allowed to prevent nuisances (1); and we may put this upon the same foot. In Cudden v. Eastwick (a) the custom was allowed, and only determined, that it was ill to lay a penalty upon the merchant. I think it is enough to say, that it does not appear that this custom extends itself out of the port, though it is plainly confined to it, and we must take notice of the extents of ports. Does not the custom for trying felonies committed in Middlesex at the Old Bailey extend itself through the whole county of Middlesex? (2) Per curiam, There must be a procedendo.

And as to the other part of the case, it was held well enough without notice, for the intent of that was only to give the parish an opportunity of sending away persons that were removeable; but that is not the case of hired servants or apprentices who are irremoveable; so that requiring them to give notice, is requiring them to do a vain thing, for as to themselves it can be of no benefit in making it a better or a stronger settlement, and as to the parish, they can do nothing upon it either to ease or discharge themselves

Regina v. Inhabitants of Newcastle
19 Geo. 2. 133.

TWO justices make one order for the removal of two different families, and the sessions upon appeal quash the order for insufficiency: and to maintain the order of sessions Reeve objected to the order of two justices, that though the parishes are the same in both cases, yet the removal of two families by one order is ill: for suppose the removal of one is legal, and the other illegal, and there is an appeal to the sessions as to both, and the order is confirmed as to one, and reversed as to the other; what is to be done in that case as to costs, the statute of 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 30. giving costs to the parish in whose favour the appeal is determined, and now the appeal will be determined in favour of neither, and of both; it cannot be said that the order is reversed, because it stands good as to part, and it cannot be said to be confirmed, because it was not held good as to the whole.

Eyre and Fortescue Justices were of opinion, that the order was ill, giving this further reason, that the party removed had a right to appeal, for it may be he was removed from his own estate, and then upon his appeal it will consequentially draw over the other matter in which perhaps the parties on all sides acquiesce. The Chief Justice said he had not fully considered it, but his two brothers being clear that the order of the two justices was ill, and the counsel for maintenance of that order refusing to refer the whole matter to the judge of assize, he pronounced the rule, That the order of sessions should be confirmed.

THE defendant being convicted upon the late act of Parliament of being the projector of an unlawful undertaking to carry on a trade to the North Seas, whereby many of his majesty's subjects had been defrauded of great sums of money, came now to receive the judgment of the court, which was prayed by Mr. Attorney-General upon the statute of præmunire; whereupon the counsel for the defendant argued, that the late statute had not tied up the hands of the court from pronouncing any milder sentence, if any favourable circumstances could be laid before them, but had left a discretionary power in the court to punish, as (the words are) for a common nuisance; and if they thought fit, that then the party should likewise incur any of the pains and penalties ordained by the statute of præmunire. And if it should be taken otherwise, it could be to no purpose, that the first clause of fining for a common nuisance was inserted, when the judgment of præmunire alone would reach every thing that the party could have to answer any fine.

The præmunire clause in the bubble act leaves a power in the court to moderate the judgment.

Ld. Raym. 1361.

To this it was answered by Mr. Attorney and Solicitor, that the whole judgment in a præmunire might stand, and yet there might still be some use for the clause about nuisances, where part of the judgment might be to abate the nuisance, and the party convicted may be likewise set on the pillory or whipped, which is no part of the judgment against one convicted upon the statute of præmunire. And they said the word any in the statute was the same as all; if he is to incur any of the pains and penalties, that is every one.

A fact committed before the act of grace may be a ground for articles of the peace.

So may threats.

Reg. & D. 14 Geo. 8.
UPON exhibiting articles of the peace against the defendant, it was objected by Mr. Wearg, that the fact whereon the prosecutor grounds his apprehensions of danger appeared to be committed before the act of grace, and pardoned thereby; and the crime by that being gone, it must be considered as never done; and the court never demands security of the peace barely on a man's swearing he goes in danger of his life, without laying some fact before the court, that it may appear to be such a metus, qui cadere possit in constantem virum.

Sed per curiam: Suppose it was threats only, would not they be a ground for articles, tho' they are not punishable? Though the fact is pardoned, yet it may be instanced for an inducement to us to believe the defendant a dangerous person. The defendant entered into a recognizance to keep the peace.

Edwards vers. Carter et al'.

Where the process is against two on a joint cause of action and one only appears, the other must be outlawed before there can be any further proceedings.

THE defendant and another were partners in the trade of a brewer, and the plaintiff supplied them with malt, for which they neglecting to pay, the plaintiff sued out a bill of Middlesex, and arrested Carter, who at the return of the writ put in bail before a judge; but the other partner could never be arrested: whereupon the plaintiff, without taking any notice of the proceedings upon the bill of Middlesex, takes out an original against both partners, and outlaws them. And now Strange moved, that the outlawry as to Carter might be reversed at the plaintiff's expence, because he had proceeded to outlawry against one that was present in court.

Upon the motion the court made a rule to shew cause; and said it was such a contempt, that they ordered an attachment miss. And Wearg pro quer' coming to shew cause insisted, that the other defendant not appearing upon the bill of Middlesex, it was impossible for the plaintiff to go on upon it with any effect; and as to taking the original against both, that was necessary, because it was a joint contract. Sed per curiam, Though you could not proceed on the bill of Middlesex, and though it was necessary to join the other, who could not be arrested, with the defendant.

defendant, in the same original, yet you could not go on to outlawry against him: you should have outlawed one only, and then you might have come and declared upon the original, that Carter, together with A. B. his late partner assumpsit super se; but the proceeding here is altogether irregular, because the party was in court, and had done every thing in his power to put the plaintiff in a fair way of recovering his debt: he could not appear or file bail for the other partner, because an action would lie against him for doing it without authority. The court ordered the outlawry to be reversed, and the plaintiff to pay costs, on the defendant Carter's appearing to the original, and discharged the attachment part.

Groenhoufe vers. Cleever.

THE defendant being in custody for want of bail, after the second term moved for a superfedeas for want of the plaintiff's declaring, which was opposed by Mr. Reeve; because though no declaration had been delivered to the turnkey according to 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 21. yet there had been one left in the office in time, and this he said would be enough to prevent the defendant's discharge, though he could not be obliged to plead to it, or let the plaintiff take a regular judgment. And of this opinion was the secondary, who informed the court, that a superfedeas is never granted, till the clerk of the declarations has certified there is no declaration against him in the office; which certificate would be useless, if the delivery of a declaration into the office be not sufficient to prevent a discharge upon common bail. But the court upon consideration granted a superfedeas, taking the delivery of a declaration to which the defendant was not obliged to plead, and on which the plaintiff could not sign a regular judgment, to be no delivery at all.

Where the defendant is in custody the declaration must be delivered to the turnkey and not into the office.

Dominus Rex vers. Jones.

A Conviction of forcible entry was quashed for the old exception of mesuagium sive tenementum; but the restitution was opposed, on an affidavit that the party's title (which was by lease) was expired since the conviction. The court said, they had no discretionary power in the case, but were bound to award restitution on quashing the conviction.

Where a conviction of forcible entry is quashed, the court must award restitution.

Where an order of bastardy is made originally at sessions (as it may) Q. If a summons should not be set out.
3 Mod. 3. S. C.

AN order of bastardy was made at sessions, (which was admitted to have original jurisdiction (1) and Mr. Denton objected, that it was not said the defendant was ever summoned or appeared, and natural justice required that he should at least have an opportunity to defend himself.

C. J. I believe these orders made originally at sessions are very rare, the usual way being to bring the matter before the sessions by way of appeal from the order of two justices. Now if it should be taken, that the order of two justices will be well enough, without their shewing a summons or appearance; yet I think this case will fall under a very different consideration. For in the other case the party has an opportunity to relieve himself by appeal, whereas upon an original order at sessions he can have no opportunity to bring the matter to a farther examination; so that it is but a lewd woman's going behind his back and swearing a bastard upon him, by which means the most innocent man in the world may be condemned. In the case of the Queen v. Simpson, * it was long debated, whether there ought not to have been a personal appearance of the deer-stealer; at last indeed it was determined, that a summons was sufficient, but it was never offered to be supported upon the foot of not shewing a summons. So far from it, that exceptions were taken to the manner of the summons, and the court delivered a special opinion as to them. Ante 44. Lord Raym. 1406.

Eyre J. (absente Powys). It not appearing this order was made in the absence of the party, I think we must take it to be a regular proceeding. And so it was held in the case of the King v. Peckham, Carth. 406. The court said, where a summons was necessary, they would presume there was one, unless the contrary appeared; for all jurisdictions are presumed prima facie to act according to law (2).

Fortescue J. It is certain, that natural justice requires, that no man shall be condemned without notice; for which reason I think the order will be good, because it does not appear to us that he had no notice: are we to suppose the sessions have proceeded contrary to right and justice, and that too in a case where they have undoubted jurisdiction? In the case of servants wages the jurisdiction is given only in husbandry, and yet orders have been held good, where it did not appear the service was in husbandry; for the court said they would intend it so, unless the contrary appeared. Salk 442. Post. 1002.

C. J. I do not see to what purpose we exercise a superintendency over all inferior jurisdictions, unless it be to inspect their proceedings, and see whether they are regular or not. I have often heard it said, that nothing shall be presumed one way or the other in an inferior jurisdiction. And to the case of wages, it was always wondered at, and in my Lord Parker's time it was actually contradicted in the case of the King v. Helling, ante 8. *Adjournatur. Fazakerley moved to quash the order, upon the general ground, that a bastard is settled at the place of its birth. Which was opposed by Strange, who cited Trin. 1 Geo. between the parishes of Tottenhoe and Newton Longville, where a bastard born at A. pending an illegal order of removal, was sent back with the mother upon reversal, and adjudged that the bastard should follow the settlement of the mother. So is Salk. 474. 532. 2 Bulst. 349. Et per curiam, (absente C. J.) That case will govern this, and therefore the order must be confirmed.

N. B. This case was never well considered, for it went off without any debate, upon the answer given by the cases which I cited, and which seem to differ widely from the present case; for those cases were all adjudged upon the apparent fraud, in illegally removing a woman big with child of a bastard; and lest the parish should take advantage by their own wrong; but in the present case, it is stated that she returned of her own accord, which makes it no more than the common case of a bastard born in the parish of A. when the mother is settled in another parish; which settlement of the mother was never thought to be the settlement of the bastard. And I do not see that it makes any difference, that she returned to the parish from whence she was removed, any more than if she had rambled into any other parish (1).

(1) Vide Rex v. Astley, 2 Bott by Const. 10. pl. 25. But there are other exceptions to the general rule, "that a bastard is settled where born," beside cases of

But where nothing of that appears, he cannot justify the depriving her of her liberty: that there was no colour for what he did in this case, there being a separation by consent. And therefore they discharged the Lady from her confinement, and being desired to bind the husband from attempting the like for the future, they refused to do that; but however intimated to him that they should bear a heavy hand over him, if he acted contrary to the declared opinion of the court (1).

The defendant upon oyer of the original, pleads in abatement, that the charge against him ought to be according to the tenour of the note, and not of the indorsement. And Strange pro def. insisted that it might be, that the indorsement appointed the money to be paid at a different time from what is mentioned in the note; which are terms that the indorfor cannot lay upon the party who made the note. Suppose the note be payable 1 May, surely the party to whom it is given cannot say, I appoint the contents of this note to be paid to J. S. upon 1 April. Or if he should, yet the other will not be bound to pay it till May. And if he is charged according to the terms of the indorsement, his only remedy must be, to traverse the being charged otherwise than according to the tenour of the note. And as to the objection, that in counts upon promissory notes there is no occasion to lay any express assumpsit, and therefore the whole may be rejected; he answered, that where the pleader does not rely upon the first part of the case he makes, but goes on further and alledges other matter, he by that gives the other side an opportunity of traversing the last matter; as Lutw. 108.

Sed per curiam, There is no occasion to pray in aid of that objection here, where the action is against the indorfor; it is true he cannot lay a charge upon the giver of the note in a manner different from the terms of it; but he may charge himself if he pleases, for every indorsement is the same as making a new note; and if the note be payable 1 May, and the indorsement appoints it to be 1 April, as to the indorser this is a promissory note payable 1 April. In prohibition the contempt is but form, and the jury need not give any verdict about it.

The quantity demanded by the plea may be two entire parts

ERROR on an attachment sur prohibition, wherein the plaintiff declares, that by the laws of Ireland no tithes ought to be paid twice in one year, or for cattle fed with hay whereof tithes have been paid, or for stubble, &c. That he was seised of certain lands for which he had paid tithes, and yet the defendant libelled against him, as being rector, and intitled to two thirds of the tithes of certain bullocks and horses depastured upon the land, for which tithes had been paid as aforesaid; and that he was proceeding against him, though he had alledged all this in his defence.

The defendant as to the contempt pleads Not guilty, upon which issue is joined; and for a consultation, that as to two entire parts of the tithes of the agistment of those lands he is intitled to them as rector, and therefore libelled; and traverses, that for all the time aforesaid the cattle were fed with hay for which tithes had been paid, and only in meadows that had been tithed: upon which issue is joined and found with the defendant in the words of the traverse: on this the King's Bench in Ireland award a consultation, upon which error is brought, and the general errors assigned.

Mr. Solicitor General pro querente in errore took several exceptions.

1. That the traverse to the merits of the suggestion was immaterial, for it ought to have been to the refusal of the plea, which is the foundation of sending the prohibition, and it is not any want of jurisdiction. 2 Co. 45. a. Cro. El. 511. The Judge below might have tried whether the beasts were fed with hay of which tithes had been paid.

2. If the matter was properly traversable, yet the traverse is too narrow; for it is, that during all the time they were not so fed fed, and so is the verdict, whereas they should have answered to every part of the time. 2 Townsf. Jud. 174. F. N. B. 54.

3. The traverse is a negative pregnant, that the beasts were not fed with hay that had paid tithes and only in meadows which had been tithed that year; all in the conjunctive, whereas these being several matters ought to been separately traversed. 1 Roll. Abr. 640. pl. 12, 13, 14. Yelv. 86. It amounts only to saying both facts are not true, but yet one of them may. A negative pregnant is a denial with an insinuation of another affirmative, as ne dona pas per le fait implies a parol gift. Cro. Jac. 505, 560. And this exception goes likewise to the verdict, for that finds both the same way; when if one was true, the plaintiff will be excused. 12 E. 4. 6. Bro. Issue 39. And the difference lies between the affirmative and negative proposition.

4. There is no verdict as to the issue upon the contempt, which is a discontinuance. 1 Roll. Abr. 801. pl. 4. 802. pl. 7. And it is not barely an imperfect verdict. 3 Lev. 55. Trespass for a coat and mantle, and a special verdict as to one, and none as to the other; held ill. Co. Ent. 459. the precedent is with the objection.

5. The defendant in his plea does not go for a consultation as to every thing in the libel; whereas the consultation is awarded generally for the whole. 1 Book of Judg. 97. Asb. 376. 2 Townsf. Judg. 107, 172, 173, 174. Vid. 61. 5 Co. 66. Jeffries's case.

4. In the case of trespass there never is any verdict as to the vi et armis. 1 H. 7. 19. Salk. 346. And in the case of Sumner v. Aston in Scaccario I took this very exception in trespass, and it was over-ruled; and yet that is in a point material, because the King is intitled to his fine of 6 s. 8 d.

5. The general award of a consultation can only go to what is covered by the plea.

6. Eat inde sine die would not be proper, because there may be another prohibition. Nor is it necessary here, where the plaintiff claims nothing.

7. The incertainty in the quantity is nothing in the temporal courts: their proceedings below are more loose than ours; they libel for words et eis simil: for such a sum of money, aut eo circiter. 2 Lev. 193. 2 Roll. Abr. 298. 2 Lev. 173. 1 Mod. 182. Fine for two parts of a manor. 1 Leon. 115. And 13 Co. 58. explains it that two parts are two thirds, three parts three fourths, &c.

Mr. Solicitor General. The case of trespass is different, for there finding the justification is a denial of the force, but here a verdict upon the merits is no denial of the contempt,

C. J. The incertainty of the demand in their proceedings is no objection in a case within their jurisdiction, as to which their law is the rule. The refusal of the plea need not be traversed; the material point being, whether tithes are payable or not. I think the traverse good, in denying it as the plaintiff alleges it, but there does seem to be a difference between the case of a trespass and the contempt.

Eyre J. In demurrers the contempt is never answered, for that is but form, and of a modern introduction, it being the course before Queen Elizabeth's time to sue out a scire facias quare non fieret breve de consultatione. Co. Ent. 452. 2 Co. 46. Archbishop's case, has no eat inde sine die; nor can it be necessary, because inde would refer to the contempt, and that is only matter of form.

Fortescue J. I think the incertainty is no objection, and as to the contempt it is but form, and the jury is never charged with it.

Adjournatur. And this term

Reeve pro querente in errore, waiving all the exceptions which on the former argument the court inclined had nothing in them, mentioned only three, which he insisted on.

1. The

1. The praying a consultation for two integral parts, without distinguishing whether thirds, fourths, &c.

2. The plea extends to lands not mentioned in the libel, so the award of a consultation in hac parte goes to the whole; and a consultation cannot be granted for a matter not in suit below.

3. But the objection he principally relied upon was, that there was no verdict as to the issue joined upon the contempt. It must be agreed, that if the verdict does not go to all the material points put in issue, it will be error, 3 Lev. 39, 55. (which the court agreed) then the nature of this contempt is to be considered. In a prohibition both parties are actors, the plaintiff for damages, and the defendant for a consultation, and no body can say but the proceeding after a prohibition is a damage, an injury to the plaintiff. 1 Cro. 559. 1 Jon. 447. 2 Roll. Abr. 516, 575. And therefore in 1 Vent. 348, 350, 362. 2 Jon. 128. a judgment was reversed for want of alleging a venue where the proceeding was, and Jones cites two precedents, Pasch. 3 Car. 2. and Pasch. 22 Car. 2.

Pengelly Serjeant contra. When two parts are demanded, it cannot be understood otherwise, than that one only remains. It is allowed in ejectionment, 1 Leon. 115. 1 Mod. 182. 13 Co. 58, 59. In fines and formedons.

2. The consultation can go only to what lands are comprized in the libel, and therefore in hac parte is confined to that; or if it should go farther, yet as it can give no new authority to the court below, it signifies nothing. Hob. 119.

3. As to the contempt, every body knows it is but form, and like the case of the vi et armis in trespass. 1 Saund. 81. Parl. Cas. 201. where the cause is determined on a demurrer, there never was any instance of inquiring into the contempt. 1 Townsh. Jud. 101, 102, 103, 105, 106. Rast. 491. 1 Saund. 140, 142. *Co. Chief Justice. The general rule laid down is certainly right; that it will be error, if the verdict does not go to all the material parts of the issue: and therefore the question is truly stated, whether this be material or not. Now as to that, consider what is the design of the party's declaring in prohibition; it is only to see whether the court below ought to proceed farther, and not whether they have proceeded; for that is a matter alleged for form sake, that there may be a demand of damages, to give it the requisites

[486] quises of a suit in law; but in fact we all know it is a fiction, for they never proceed after the first motion, and we must take notice of the course of proceeding: besides if this exception should prevail, it will avoid almost every judgment in prohibition. As to the other two objections, I think there is one answer for both; that upon the whole it appears, the court below ought to proceed upon the libel, and the consultation doth not enlarge their jurisdiction. Powys Justice accord.

Eyre Justice. The only point in prohibition is, whether the court below shall be admitted to proceed. Formerly this was determined by a seire facias quare non fieret breve de consultatione, and then it lay upon the inferior court to shew they had a jurisdiction. But in case of them this method of declaring was introduced, and that puts the plaintiff to shew, that the court below has not a jurisdiction.

The consultation does not depend on the prayer of the plea, but upon the libel, and is only giving them a power to proceed upon the libel, without any regard to the pleadings upon the declaration. As to the contempt, it is merely fictitious, for does any body think we would not punish the Judge if he should proceed? The case where no venue was alleged is widely different, for there the point was tried; and if they do try it, no doubt it must be in the same manner as all other issues are tried.

Fortescue Justice. I do not think duas partes are two thirds, they may as well be fifths. But the true answer is, that the libel is two thirds. And it matters not what the party prays in his plea. In Co. Ent. there is a precedent, where the judgment is quod fiat consultatio, and that the Judge shall proceed in ista causa. The same answer serves for the supernumerary lands. As to the contempt, I concur with the rest, for since the precedents are both ways, we must adhere to them which tend to support the judgment. The judgment affirmed.

That after the marriage Hugh Hunt surrendered the premises to the use of his will, and afterwards devised the same to Jane his wife and her heirs, and died without issue by her; after whose death Jane was admitted and likewise surrendered to the use of her will, and devised the same to Jane Day her daughter and heir by her first husband John Triggs, and to her heirs for ever, and soon after died. That Jane Day before admittance made her will, and thereby gave the premises to the defendant in the words following; "Item I give and bequeath all my freehold and also all my copyhold estate, which I intend to surrender to the use of this my will, lying in Edmington in the county of Middlesex, unto my cousin Thomas Triggs (the defendant) for and during the term of his natural life, with remainder over." That after making the will, and before any court day, Jane the devisor died, having never surrendered to the use of her will; but the defendant who is the devisee is notwithstanding admitted under the devise.

The lessor of the plaintiff claims the lands as cousin and heir of Jane Day, (viz.) as grandson and heir of Thomas Triggs, elder der brother of John Triggs, father of the said Jane Day. And the defendant claims under the devise.

Short pro quer' argued, 1. That the devise by Jane Day to the defendant is void for want of a surrender to the use of her will, and 2. That the lessor of the plaintiff, who is heir at law to Jane Day is therefore well intitled to the lands whereof no disposition was made by his ancestor.

1. That the devise is void. The nature of a copyholder appears in 1 Inst. 57. b. and he is called tenant by copy of court-roll, because all the evidence which he has of his title are the rolls of his lord's court, by which copyholds may be transferred from one to another as effectually, as freeholds may by deed. And he enjoys the method of passing his estate by the court-rolls, in lieu of the power which a freeholder has to alien his land by deed; for if a copyholder aliens by deed it is a forfeiture. 4 Co. 209. Litt. §. 74. Alienare (says my Lord Coke) est alienum facere, that is in legal understanding when the estate passes out of one into another, and that cannot be unless there appears some evidence of the right's being changed upon the rolls of the court. A copyhold is not devisable but by custom, for the statute of Hen. 8. of wills relates only to freeholds, and doth not extend to copyholds, so that a bare devise of a copyhold will not pass the estate, as it will of a freehold. Cro. Car. 44. And as a copyholder has not such power to devise as a freeholder has, so likewise he cannot exchange his estate by parol, as a freeholder could for lands in the same county at common law; but is obliged to surrender the same into the hands of his lord, to the use of him with whom he exchanges. So is 1 Bull. 200. 1 Inst. 50. a.

The law will not supply a defect in a title against the heir at law, but will construe every thing in his favour; and therefore a surrender to the use of this will shall not be supplied, since that will be to the prejudice of the heir at law. Salk. 187.

2. The devise being void for want of a surrender, the lessor of the plaintiff has a good title as heir at law to the devisor. And if it be objected to him, that he is not heir on the part of the mother, I answer, that these lands are not descendible to the heir of the part of the mother, for though they came to Jane Day by her mother, yet the course of descent was altered by the surrender and devise made to her by the mother, under which the lands vested in her as a purchaser, and not as heir by descent. That a surrender will alter the course of descent is proved by this, that if there be two jointenants of copyhold lands, and one surrenders to the use of his will and dies; by this the jointure is severed, and the the surrenderee is in from the surrender, by which the land is bound. Co. Litt. 59. b. 2 Cro. 100. Cro. Eliz. 717. And yet a bare devise would not take away the right of survivorship. So in the case at bar, the surrender and devise was a compleat conveyance to Jane Day; and though she died before admittance, yet her heir shall not be prejudiced. 1 Vent. 260. 3 Keb. 329. 4 Co. 22. b. Dy. 291. b. 2 Sid. 61. 37. (Contra Yelv. 144. Pop. 127. that the grantee of such a surrenderee shall not be admitted.)

The course of descent being therefore altered, and the devise to the defendant void, the heir at law of the part of the father has a good title, and therefore he prayed judgment for the plaintiff.

Darnall Serjeant contra. Agreed the devise would not pass the estate to the defendant without a surrender to the use of the will; but his possession would be a good title against the lessor of the plaintiff, who must recover upon his own strength. He can have no title as heir to Jane Day, because he is not heir of the part of the mother; for as he argued, Jane Day took the lands as heir by descent, and not as a purchaser under the devise. And that for these reasons:

1. Because her title by descent is more worthy than one by purchase; and where two rights meet, the elder or worthier is to be preferred. 2. Because the devise was void, being made to the heir, and therefore she shall be adjudged in by descent, which is most for her advantage. 1 Roll. Abr. 626. Salk. 241, 242. 3. Because admitting the devise was well made to the heir, yet in this case, it is not compleated by her admittance under it, as it ought to be; for before admittance she could be no purchaser, and then the lessor could not be heir to her as a purchaser, because his ancestor was never seised. 1 Roll. Abr. 627. pl. 9.

Jane therefore took by descent as heir of the part of the mother, and the lessor being only heir of the part of the father can have no title, since the lands remain descendible to the heir ex parte materna.

Chief Justice. The devise without a surrender will not pass the estate to the defendant, but his possession will be a good title against the lessor of the plaintiff, if Jane Day took as heir by descent: and that she was in as such is plain, because the surrender to her never took effect for want of her admittance, and so she had no good title as a purchaser, but her title by descent was compleat. She had her election of two rights, one vested immediately, ately, and the other not before election, she died before election, and therefore that which vested must take effect: and then the course of descent was not altered, and the heir of the part of the father can have no title. Adjournatur. And this term,

The devise of a copyhold to the heir is void, and he is in by descent.

Pratt Chief Justice delivered the resolution of the court. The case in short is this. It was the estate of Hugh Hunt, who married Jane Triggs, and by surrender and will devised it to Jane and her heirs. Jane surrendered it to the use of her will, and devised it to her daughter Jane Day, who before admittance devised it to the defendant, and died without any surrender or admittance.

Devisee of a copyhold cannot re-devise it before admittance.

As to the defendant there is no title in him for want of an admittance of Jane Day, and also for want of a surrender to the use of her will (1); and therefore the matter rests upon what title the the lessor of the plaintiff can make, and if he makes none the defendant must have judgment.

And the title which the lessor makes is this: says he, I am the cousin and heir of Jane Day, i. e. I am the grandson and heir of Thomas Triggs, the elder brother of John Triggs, who was her father, and this being a void devise to the defendant, I am intitled to the estate as heir at law.

And it is true, and is so stated in the case, that the lessor is heir at law to Jane Day, that is on the part of the father; but the objection is, that these lands are descendible to the heir ex parte materna; and if they be, then the lessor has no title.

And in order to see what heir these lands are to go to, it is to be considered under what title Jane Day took the estate, whether she was in by purchase or by descent: if she was in by purchase, then the lessor must take them as heir to her: but if she took by descent, he has no title, because he cannot make himself of the blood of the first purchaser Jane Triggs, who was afterwards married to Hunt. 1 Inst. 12. b. is express, that he must be of the blood of the first purchaser.

And we are all of opinion that Jane Day took by descent, and, consequently the lands remain descendible to the heir ex parte materna.

Jane Day was heir at law to her mother, who surrendered the estate to the use of her will, and devised it to her daughter in fee; that is, she gave her such an estate as would have descended to her without the will.

Consider it first upon the surrender; that we all know was only an instrument by which the lord took nothing, and the estate notwithstanding remained in the surrenderor: this is plain from Cro. Eliz. 441. where the tenant made a second surrender, and it was adjudged for the second surrenderee; upon the bare surrender therefore nothing passes, and the lands will descend notwithstanding.

The next thing to be considered is the will. Quid operatur by that, to prevent the course of descent. And we hold that to supra. It appears, however, from v. Robinson, Gilb. Eq. Rep. 13. the above cases, and expressly that a natural child is not within from Tudor v. Anson, 2 Vez. 582. the rule. that a cousin, and from Furaker be of no force in this case. A devise to the heir is void. 1 Roll. Abr. 626, because he has a better and more worthy title by descent. This rule holds as well in the case of copyholds as freeholds. Indeed where the will devises the estate in a different manner from what it would have descended in, it will be good; this is so notorious, that instances will be needless.

If Jane Day was to claim by the will, that title was never compleat for want of an admittance. That plainly shews her election to be in of her more worthy title by descent. That was a compleat and a perfect title, but the other was not. And for this the case of Abbot v. Burton is strong in point, where a man seised in fee of lands which descended to him of the part of the mother, levies a fine to several uses, with a remainder to his own right heirs; and it was resolved, that this remainder was the ancient use, and the heir ex parte materna should have it. The case of a feoffment is certainly as strong as surrender to the use of the will (2.)

The daughter therefore taking by descent, and the mother being the first purchaser; the lessor, if he claims any thing, must make himself heir to the mother, which he is not, and consequently the defendant must have judgment.

next continuance after the fact happens; and as to the special entry here made, he said that indeed the common practice is only to enter continuances from term to term, because that being sufficient to prevent a discontinuance, the attornies for their own ease never enter any more; but yet in fact the party has a right to enter all the continuances, the proceedings here being de die in diem. Besides, the plea is false in fact, and that is another reason to set aside a dilatory; the words of the act are, "That such memorial shall be signed by the party," and it is upon that they ground themselves, for the contract is registered, and in this manner, "This contract was made for the benefit of me William Martin, and has not been compounded;" which being all the plaintiff's hand writing, that is a signing, though the name is not at the bottom. As to the point of the continuances the court did not determine that matter: the C. J. and Fortescue J. inclined that as the fact would warrant it, every act of the court might be entered, and then the plea must be set aside, as not coming in time; but Eyre J. (absente Powys J.) thought this uncommon entry, which was to deprive the defendant of a benefit, which in the common course of practice he would be intitled to, ought not to be allowed; however they did not determine this point, being all of opinion, that for the second reason the plea should be set aside as false, saying it was constant experience at the assizes, to put the party to verify such a plea, before it is allowed, and if the party does not give some evidence of the truth of it, the Judge will reject it and go on with the cause(1). And at another day Eyre J. cited Mo. 871. that a plea puis darrein continuance could not be pleaded after a demurrer. The others gave no opinion as to this, but set it aside upon the point of its being false in fact, without meddling farther with the continuances.

contrary to the statute, per quod the bond became void. The plaintiff replies, that the bond was given for a just debt, and traverses that the 1500 l. was won by gaming, contra formam statuti modo et forma, as the defendant has pleaded. The defendant demurs, and

Strange pro def. argued, that the replication was ill, because it makes the sum parcel of the issue, and obliges the defendant to prove, that the whole sum of 1500 l. was won by gaming; whereas the statute avoids the bond, if any part of the consideration became due on that account; and he urged the common case of a plea of payment before the day, where if issue is joined, and a verdict pro quer, there shall be a repleader, because it leaves it open to a possibility, that there might be a payment at the day, and then the plaintiff could have no cause of action: so in this case the finding that the whole sum of 1500 l. was not won by gaming will not toll the presumption as to a less sum. Besides, the sum is put in only for form, and therefore within the reason of the case of Stallard v. Tims, the replication will be ill, for making it the substance of the issue.

Wearg contra insisted, that the replication following the words of the plea, would be well enough; and cited Dy. 365. pl. 1. for that purpose. Sed per curiam, There is no colour to maintain the replication: the material part of the plea is, that part of the money for which the bond was given was won by gaming, and scilicet, so much, is only matter of form, of which no notice should be taken in the replication.

Wearg, then admitting the replication to be ill, so is their plea, and then the declaration must stand, and the plaintiff have judgment.

For this, my exceptions are, 1. That the words of the statute are not pursued: the statute says, the bond shall be void where it is given for money won by gaming, whereas the plea is, that the money for which the bond was given was won by gaming, and though in fact that may be the same, yet the very words of the statute should be pursued. Sed per curiam, It amounts to the same thing, and is good to a common intent.

2. The statute only avoids bonds given after the first of May 1711. and therefore the defendant should shew this to be so; and the time in the declaration (3d of September 1720.) will not be sufficient, because the bond may be given at a different time from what it bears date.

That which appears in the plaintiff's declaration need not be averred in the plea.

Where the defendant pleads that the bond was given for money won by gaming, he must shew what game they played at. Post. 498.

Strange. The time is not mentioned as the date of the bond, but that such a day the defendant concessit se teneri, which relates to the execution of it; and therefore it appearing upon the whole record to be since the statute, it is the same as if it had been in the words of the plea. Et per curiam, The answer is right, and there is nothing in that objection.

3. The main objection he insisted on was, that it is not shewn at what play or game the money was lost, and that ought to appear to the court, that they may judge, whether it was such gaming as is contrary to the statute: some people call stock-jobbing gaming, and yet if it had appeared to the court, that there was no more in the case, they would not have determined it to be a gaming within this act of Parliament.

It may be said that concluding contra formam statuti is an averment that it was at such a game as is contrary to the statute, and then what game, is not material, but the case in Dy. 363. is a full answer to that, for contra formam statuti being only the inference of the party, must be supported by premises, or it stands for nothing.

Strange contra. I shall endeavour to answer this by shewing, 1. That it is not necessary to mention the game, and 2. That if it be, the words of the plea are sufficient.

1. As to the first, there might be some colour for the objection, if the statute had only made it penal to play at some particular games, but here are added the general words, other game or games; so that it can answer no purpose whatsoever to particularize the game, because the bond may be void, and yet the money not be lost at any one of the games enumerated in the statute. The fact of gaming is all that need be alleged, the mode and manner of it is only matter of evidence, of which the jury are judges; and so it was said in the case of Groenvelt v. Burwell, Trin. 12 W. 3. B. R. where in trespass, the college of physicians justified under a conviction pro mala praxi in administering unwholesome pills and drugs, whereby a woman died; and it was held by the court, that if the matter of the conviction was traversable, even then the fact was sufficiently alleged, without setting out what the drugs were, because that was matter of evidence.

It is likewise considerable, whether obliging the defendant to mention the game, may not be a hardship; for though he may be able to prove in general, that he lost so much money at unlawful games, games, it may be impossible for him to distinguish how much was lost at hazard, and how much at picquet.

2. Admitting it necessary to be particular, the plea is sufficient; for if the statute avoids the bond where it is given for money lost at gaming, then the words of the plea, that the bond was given for money won by gaming contrary to the statute, are an averment that it was such gaming as is contrary to the statute. 1 Sid. 337. the plaintiff maintained his action on a promise made by the defendant ut administrator, and that was held an averment of his being so.

Besides, this general way of pleading, that the money was lost by gaming contra formam statuti is agreeable to the entries where offences against acts of Parliament are alleged. Co. Ent. 46. a. Rast. Maintenance.

C. J. I think the game ought to be mentioned in the plea, for it is matter of law, and not barely evidence; and the saying in general that it was contra formam statuti will not be sufficient. Et per Eyre J. It is like the case of an usurious (a) or simoniacal contract, where the agreement itself must be shewn; and so it is likewise upon the statute of Edw. 6. against the sale of offices, where the particulars of the contract must be expressed. Et per Fortescue J. In Lutw. 180. Clift. 187. the game is mentioned. The plaintiff had judgment.

Upon the trial (which was at bar) we who were counsel for the King offered to give in evidence several declarations made by the deceased on his death-bed, whereby he charged the defendants with barbarously murdering him, and without much hesitation the court let us into that evidence. Whereupon we called a clergyman who attended him, and he swore that being desired by some friends of the defendants to press Mr. Lutterell to declare what provocation he had given the defendants to use him in that manner; he declared upon his salvation, that as he was a dying man he gave them no provocation, but they barbarously murdered him: that in the afternoon of the same day, two justices of the peace being present, and having given him his oath, he made another and more particular declaration to that purpose, which the witness at the desire of the justices took down in writing, but Mr. Lutterell not being able to write, it was not signed by him, and therefore we did not deliver it in. And the same witness proved, that upon his administering the sacrament to him he exhorted him in the most proper manner to deal ingenuously, and declare once more, whether there was no provocation given by him, and whether he would stand by the account he had before given; upon which the deceased answered, that as he hoped to be judged at the last day, it was every syllable true, and soon after expired.

Law* p. 293. who is of opinion, that upon the facts stated here, the bailiffs would have been guilty of murder, but on those proved at the trial, it amounted only to manslaughter at most.

When

When this gentleman had finished his evidence, the court called upon us to produce the paper that had been written from the mouth of the deceased, saying that was better evidence than the memory of the witness; whereupon we acquainted the court, that we had not the original, it being in the custody of one of the justices, whom going to subpæna we found he was in Wales; but the clergyman said he had a copy of it, which he took for his own satisfaction, before he delivered in the original to the coroner, and he offered to swear this to be a true copy.

Whereupon a debate arose, whether this copy was evidence or not: we who were for the King insisting, that the paper being only the writing of the witness, not signed by the examinant, this which he now produced, was as much an original as that. But the court refused to let it be read, unless we could shew the original was lost, whereas it appeared we might have had it to produce, if we had sent after it in time (2).

It was then objected by the Chief Justice, that since the written evidence was not produced, the whole evidence of the deceased's declarations ought to be rejected, for the first, second and third being all to the same effect, are but one fact, of which the best evidence was not produced; and therefore he was of opinion, that we could not be let in to give any account of the first and third conference.

But the other judges were of opinion we might, saying they were three distinct facts, and there was no reason to exclude the evidence as to the first and third declaration, merely because we were disabled to give an account of the second.

Thereupon the witness was directed to repeat his evidence, laying the examination before the justices out of the case, which he did accordingly.

And upon the whole evidence the fact (upon which the question of law arose) was this:

The defendants were officers of the sheriff of Middlesex, and had a warrant to arrest Mr. Lutterell for 10*l.* they arrested him coming out of his lodgings, whereupon he desired them to go back with him to his lodgings, and he would pay the money.

They complied with this, and Reason went up with him into the dining-room, having sent Tranter to the attorney's for a bill of the charges. Whilst Reason and the deceased continued together, some words passed between them in relation to civility-money, which Mr. Lutterell refused to give, and thereupon went up another pair of stairs to order his lady to tell out the money, and then returned to Reason with two pistols in his breast, which upon the importunity of the maid he laid down upon the table (3), and retired to the fire which was at the other end of the room, declaring he did not design to hurt the defendants, but he would not be ill used.

By this time Tranter returned from the attorney's with the bill, and being let in by the boy, went directly up stairs to his partner, being followed by the boy, who swore, that as he was upon the stairs (Tranter being that minute gone into the dining-room) he heard a blow given, but could not tell by whom, and thereupon hastening into the room he found Tranter had run the deceased up against the closet door, and Reason with his sword stabbing him. Mr. Lutterell soon sunk down upon the ground, and begged for mercy (4); but Reason standing over him continued to stab him, till he had wounded him in nine places.

By this time the maid came in, and seeing her master in that posture, she and the boy run out for help, and immediately heard one of the pistols go off (5) and presently after the second, which a woman looking out at a window on the other side the way proved to be fired by Reason; and several people upon the alarm of the maid coming into the room found Mr. Lutterell upon the ground where the maid left him, without any sword or pistol near him.

Upon the defendant's evidence it appeared, that Mr. Lutterell had a walking-cane in his hand, and that Tranter had a scratch in his forehead, which might be probably a blow with the cane, and the blow heard by the boy upon Tranter's first going into the room. And one of the surgeons deposed, that the deceased had made such declarations to the clergyman, but this witness afterwards being alone with Mr. Lutterell pressed him very earnestly to discover the truth, upon which Mr. Lutterell did say, that he believed he might strike one of them with his cane, before they run him through.

Upon this the question arose; whether Mr. Lutterell's striking one of the bailiffs first would reduce the subsequent killing to be manslaughter only?

For the King it was argued, that notwithstanding such stroke the defendants would be guilty of murder, that not being a sufficient provocation for giving the death's wound with the pistol: and for this Holloway's case Cro. Car. 139. and Kelying 127. were cited, where the woodward finding a boy in the park who came to steal wood, tied him to a horse's tail in order to correct him, the horse run away and the boy was killed: and this was adjudged to be murder, because the tying him to the horse's tail, being an act of cruelty, for which no sufficient provocation had been given, he was answerable for all the consequences of it.

The defendants insisted, that the bringing down the pistols was a sufficient alarm to them to be upon their guard; and then when he struck one of them, it was reasonable for them to apprehend themselves to be in danger; and in such case a prudent man would not leave it any longer in the power of his adversary to do him any further mischief.

To this it was answered by the counsel for the King, that if Mr. Lutterell had continued to keep the pistols in his bosom, there might be some colour for an apprehension of danger; but the contrary appearing, viz. that he was at a distance from the pistols, with the defendants between him and them: they had no ground to fear any harm upon that account: and the death's wound was given after Mr. Lutterell was fallen down with the wounds he had received with the sword, and was intirely in the power of the defendants: so that what they did afterwards was murder in them, because it exceeded the bounds of self-preservation.

But the court in the direction of the jury did positively declare, that if they believed, Mr. Lutterell made the first assault upon the bailiffs, the killing with the pistol after he was down would be but manslaughter (6) and the jury upon that direction found them guilty

(6) The direction is stated to be, "that if the jury believed that Mr. Lutterell endeavoured to rescue himself, which he seemed to think was the case, and very probably was the case, it would be justifiable homicide in the officers. However, as Mr. Lutterell gave the guilty of manslaughter only, though otherwise they were disposed to have hanged them for the barbarity of the fact.

The defendants prayed the benefit of the statute, and were burnt in the hand.

the first blow, accompanied with menaces to the officers; and the circumstances of producing loaded pistols to prevent their taking him from his lodgings, which it would have been their duty to have done, if the debt had not been paid, or bail given, he declared it could be no more than manslaughter," 1b.

Ab. Ca. Eq. 64.
pl. 1.

AN executor brought his bill for the direction of the court touching the payment of a considerable legacy left by his testator to the defendant's wife, who was his daughter; and insisted to have the same put out for the benefit of the wife and her issue, and likewise for an injunction against the defendant's proceeding in the spiritual court in a suit there instituted for the legacy.

On the hearing the defendant insisted, that he having commenced his suit in a proper court, ought not to be enjoined; or if he ought, yet there could be no reason to direct the money to be put out as insisted on by the bill, it having been never done but in cases where the husband has brought the bill to compel the executor to pay the money; and no precedent was produced, where such directions had been given upon a bill brought by the trustee.

Et per Macclesfield Lord Chancellor, Then it is time to make one; can the difference, who is plaintiff in equity, alter the reason of the thing? If it should, it will but be for the husband, instead of coming here to go into the spiritual court, (as to be sure he will) and so get the whole into his power. There must be the usual direction, that the money may be disposed of for the benefit of the wife (1).

And for this omission the Chief Justice ruled it not to be a sufficient tender, for there was a possibility that leave might not be given, and the plaintiff had not done every thing in his power: he ought to have prepared matters so that if the defendant had appeared, there might have been a transfer immediately (1).

THE plaintiff according to the common course of dealing delivered to the defendant's servant an ingot of gold to assay; and it not being returned, he brought trover against the master. trover.

THE plaintiff being a chimney sweeper's boy found a jewel and carried it to the defendant's shop (who was a goldsmith) to know what it was, and delivered it into the hands of the apprentice, who under pretence of weighing it, took out the stones, and calling to the master to let him know it came to three halfpence, the master offered the boy the money, who refused to take it, and insisted to have the thing again; whereupon the apprentice delivered him back the socket without the stones. And now in trover against the master these points were ruled:

1. That the finder of a jewel, though he does not by such finding acquire an absolute property or ownership, yet he has such a property as will enable him to keep it against all but the rightful owner, and consequently may maintain trover.

2. That the action well lay against the master, who gives a credit to his apprentice, and is answerable for his neglect (1).

THE defendant bespoke a chariot, and when it was made refused to take it; and in an action for the value, it was objected, that they should prove something given in earnest, or a note in writing, since there was no delivery of any part of the goods. 2d. Whether a farmer who buys and sells potatoes can be a bankrupt.
3 Mod. 46. S. C.
1 Co. Bank.
Laws 46. 3d ed.

IN trover for goods, on Not guilty pleaded a trial was had at Nisi prius in London, where the jury found this special verdict:

That one Richard Baxter for divers years before any commission of bankruptcy taken out against him occupied a farm of 300 l. per annum, and during such occupation annually planted divers acres of the farm with potatoes, which he sold for gain: that he likewise bought of other persons several great quantities of potatoes, with intention to sell them for gain, which he publicly did in several markets, and that he hired warehouses to put them in, till he could conveniently sell them. That if this makes him a trader, he committed an act of bankruptcy within the intention of the statutes, and a commission issued, and the plaintiff was made assignee. That after the act of bankruptcy, and before any commission issued, the defendant recovered judgment against the said Baxter for 600 l. debt besides costs of suit, and took out a fieri facias, by virtue whereof the sheriff seized the goods mentioned in the declaration, which they find were before the bankruptcy the goods of Baxter. And whether Baxter was a trader or not within the intention of the several statutes against bankrupts, is the doubt of the jury, whereon they pray the advice of the court: et si pro quer, they assess damages, and if not a trader, they find pro defendente.

Chefbyre Serjeant pro quer. The 13 Eliz. c. 7. (which the subsequent statute Jac. 1. appoints to be largely expounded) describes scribes a bankrupt to be one buying and selling for gain. I admit a farmer or an inn-holder are not within the statutes, and were construed to be exempt before 5 Anne had made them so. Cro. Car. 549.

Brown v. Nixon
12. Q.B. 557.

His being a farmer will not screen him, if he deals as a trader likewise, and therefore I should think some farmers might be made bankrupts under the notion of cheesemongers. I remember a motion to supersede a commission, where it was he held that a gentleman of the bar who had a colliery, and dealt in coals at Durham (1), was such a trader as might be a bankrupt. He need not get his whole living by buying and selling, for the word is seeking not getting, and therefore if he seeks his living this way, his seeking it another way will not alter the case. A dealing of this sort gains him that credit, which traders give one another, and that is the best rule to go by. 1 Vent. 166, 266, 29. 1 Sid. 411. 1 Lev. 17.

Artificers differ from those that buy and sell, and yet they may be bankrupts. Such are shoemakers, and many others.

There can be no doubt but such a dealing as this would have made him a trader, if the farming had not been found; now if that be taken to have altered the case, every man may take a farm, in order to avoid the statutes.

Brantwayte Serjeant contra. He might buy these potatoes in the ground, as many gentlemen do a crop of turnips, of which they sell the overplus, and yet were never reckoned to be traders. The case in 1 Roll. 520. says, that the buying and selling in order to promote a business which does not make a trader, will not cause a man to be a bankrupt. 2 Jones 156.

Chief Justice. I think the question will turn on the manner of finding, for there can be no doubt but on one hand a farmer cannot be a bankrupt, and on the other, that a dealer in potatoes may, if such a dealing be found as will shew it to be a man's trade: it is indeed said only, that he bought divers great quantities, which in an indictment would be ill; but I am inclined to think it will be well enough here, where it is only necessary to shew that he sought his living in that manner. I should think, if a Herefordshire man bought apples to mix with his own, and then sold the cyder, he would be a trader. As far as circumstances can conclude, it appears this man was a trader, for he bought the goods, and kept markets and warehouses. Powys Justice accord. If a farmer should deal in wool or hops, he will be a trader, and so will an inn-keeper who sells corn in quantities, which are not consumed in his house.

Eyre Justice. The verdict must set out the quantities, that we may judge what share of his living was fought thus.

Fortescue Justice said the quantity must be mentioned, That it might appear whether this or farming was his chief business (2).

[515] Adjournatur. And afterwards the plaintiff moved on an affidavit that the quantities were proved at the trial, that a venire facias de novo might be awarded. Sed per curiam: Let the special verdict be amended in that respect (3); and so it was, and stood over upon an ulterius. An act of Parliament for the consolidation of endowed rectories and vicarages binds the crown though not named.

8 Mod. 5. S. C.

ERROR of a judgment in B. R. in Hibernia in a quare impedit brought by the crown for the presentation to the church of Louth, being an advowson in gross. The Attorney General counts that King Charles the Second was seised of this advowson in right of his crown, and presented one John Hudson, and so alleges several presentations by the crown, and brings down the title to his present Majesty, and shews a vacancy by the death of Thomas Cox, unde it belongs to the King to present; but the bishop and Peter Jackson eum injuste impediunt.

The bishop pleads, that long before 10 Car. 1. and ever since, there were within the parish of Louth both a rectory and vicarage endowed, and that King William and Queen Mary being seised of the advowson of the rectory presented the said Thomas Cox, who was admitted, instituted and inducted; and Narcissus archbishop of Armagh, being seised of the advowson of the vicarage, in the year 1712 presented the said Peter Jackson; and Cox died and Jackson survived, and before any presentation by the crown, the archbishop, by virtue of an act of Parliament 10 Car. 1. by writing under his archiepiscopal seal, united and consolidated the rectory and vicarage, prout ei bene licuit: and so concludes that he claims nothing but as ordinary, with the proper averments to bring the rectory and vicarage within the description of the act of Parliament.

The incumbent pleads the consolidation in the same manner, and the Attorney General demurs to both pleas, and judgment is given below for the King, and on error in this court the general errors are assigned.

Fazakerley pro querent. in errore. The only question below, and which I shall speak to is, whether the crown shall be bound by this this act of Parliament though not specially named: and to prove that the King is bound, I need only instance in some of the exceptions out of the general rule laid down in the books, and shew that this case falls within them. Acts for the advancement of religion, learning, and providing for the poor, are mentioned as cases where the crown is bound. 11 Co. 70, 72, 73. 2 Inst. 359, 681. Plow. 248. 5 Co. 14. 1 Roll. Rep. 151.

This provision is for the advancement of learning, by making it worth the acceptance of a man able to instruct the people; it encourages learning, when ministers have a prospect of being rewarded for their pains; and the poor will be the better for it, because the parson will be more able to relieve them.

Reeve contra. At the time of the union there was a right in the crown to present on the vacancy, and the intention of the statute was, that the union should be made when both the rectory and vicarage were full, that so both patrons might have an equal chance; for after the clause which enables the archbishop to consolidate, the act provides, that during the lives of the two incumbents they shall enjoy the rectory and vicarage distinctly, and upon the death of either, then the two rights shall survive to the other, and the patron of him that died first shall have the first presentation: no direction is given for settling the right, where the union is made during the vacancy of one; which shews that the intention of the Parliament was to have the union made when both the incumbents were living: but now by this contrivance the archbishop is sure in all events of having the first presentation to the united benefices.

C. J. At common law two churches could not be united without consent of both the patrons, but now this act of Parliament giving the archbishop a right to controul the title of the patrons, we must construe it strictly, that so the act may do as little wrong as possible: and therefore if upon considering every part of the act it appears to be the intention of the Parliament that the union should be made when both the rectory and vicarage were full; as this construction works the least injustice, we shall certainly follow it if possible.

The clause runs thus: "And whereas in divers places of this kingdom of Ireland there are within one parish both a parson and vicar endowed, and in some parishes more: be it enacted, that in every such case it shall and may be lawful to and for the bishop of that diocese and metropolitan of that province within which the said parishes are situate, by their writing under their archiepiscopal and episcopal seals, at any time or times here" after,

“ after, to unite and consolidate all and every the said parsonages “ and vicarages so being within one parish, into one intire par“ sonage or rectory or benefice, yet nevertheless so, that if such “ parsonages and vicarages, or any of them, be at that time full “ of incumbents, that every of the said incumbents may hold
 “ and retain to their own use his and their respective parsonages “ and vicarages, and all the profits thereof, for so long time as “ they shall live, and continue lawful incumbents thereof; and “ if one or more of such incumbents do die, or otherwise cease, “ resign, be deposed, or deprived, that then the said parsonage, “ vicarage or benefice, so or by any other means growing void, “ shall survive, remain, and accrue, to the survivors of the said “ incumbents; and after such survivors accruing or coming into “ one hand, shall thenceforth for ever be and continue one whole “ and intire rectory and parsonage or benefice, according to the “ union and consolidation aforesaid to such surviving parson and “ his successors for ever.” And then it goes on to direct the method of presentation; and as to this case the direction is, that after the death of the survivor the patron of him that died first shall present, and then to take it by turns.

Now taking all this together I think the only view of the Parliament was, to have the union made when both churches were full, and therefore they provide, that though the union be made when both are full, yet it shall not take effect till the death of one of the incumbents. As to that which was the main point below, I think they were mistaken, for I take it the King will be bound in this case; but we will consider of it.

Powys J. It is far from being clear to me, that the King shall not be bound by this act of Parliament. As to the construction of it, I think the only reasonable one is, that the union should be made in the life of both incumbents.

Eyre J. I think this statute will extend to the crown, because it does not deprive the crown of any prior right, but only new-models it, and therefore differs from Dr. Birch's case, where the ancient prerogative of the crown was to be destroyed. As to the construction of this statute, I am of opinion, that the archbishop may unite during the vacancy, for the power is given him to do it at any time or times, and then when the subsequent clause provides only for some particular cases, I can only take it to be a direction as to those particular cases, and not intended to abridge or controul the former power; and as to all other cases not expressly provided for, they must receive such a determination as is agreeable to law: this is what sticks with me, and is the only difficulty in the case, whether the latter part of the clause be a restraint of the general power, which it must be admitted would (if it stood singly upon that) include the case now before us.

Fortescue

Fortescue J. I make no doubt but the crown is bound by this statute; but then as it works a wrong to the crown, which-ever way we take it, I think we are to afford it no latitude in construction. The case at bar I take to be neither within the words nor meaning of the statute, yet nevertheless so that, &c. is a part of the same clause, and in my apprehension is the same as if the statute had run, yet in these cases only, &c. for as they are introductive of a new law, they infer a negative; and therefore if this case does not fall within the subsequent provisions, it is not a case within the act of Parliament. Can any man think the Parliament would do so absurd a thing, as to give an alternative, and not say who shall present first? And yet that will be the case of all consolidations, that do not fall within the direction of the subsequent words: but then it is said this case must be left to the decision of the law; for my part I know of no law that will determine who shall present first; so that by this method of consolidating during the vacancy, the archbishop is to unite the King's rectory to his vicarage, and so to get the first turn; whereas take it the other way there will be no difficulty; it is expressly determined who shall present first, and the act does as little wrong as possible, by giving an equal chance to both: for these reasons I think the court below have done right in giving judgment for the King.

Adjournatur; and this term it was argued by Serjeant Reynolds pro querens in errore. It being given up at bar, that the crown was bound by the statute, he proceeded to maintain the consolidation, though made during a vacancy of the rectory. At common law all unions were derived from the the authority of the ordinary with the licence of the crown and the consent of the patrons. 2 Corp. Jur. Civ. 256. Cro. El. 500. 2 Roll. Abr. 778. And Dy. 259. says the proper time for an union was in a vacancy. If the statute has not adjusted the manner of presenting in this particular case, it must be done according to the rules of the common law.

Wearg contra. The common law has laid down no rules; for as these things were done by consent, the parties settled that matter amongst themselves. This act according to Hatton of Statutes, must be construed to work as little wrong as possible; the law regards our advowson as a thing of value, it is what we have a property in, there is a recovery in value for it, and it may be sold. The 31 H. 8. had no saving of the rights of strangers; and yet Jones Sir William 71. it was held to be implied in order to prevent a wrong.

It may be a question whether by this union the patron of the vacant rectory has not intirely lost this right, it being difficult to determine how the ancient right can subsist in the new created church, church, since he can never say that church has been full of his incumbent, as the archbishop may.

C. J. Though the words of the act are general enough to take in this particular case; yet if it appears not to be within the intent and reason of the statute, we must construe it to be excluded. The plain intent was, that the union should be upon the most equal terms, and the least prejudicial to either party in favour of the other. At the time of the union the crown had a right to present, and this is to be taken away without any equivalent, by a construction that is to let in iniquum, and by a contrivance that ought not to be favoured. Besides the apparent injury of depriving the crown of the present turn; it is considerable, that the act not having settled the terms of presenting for the future, but only where both are full at the time of the union, it must necessarily create great difficulties in adjusting the right upon an union made whilst one church is vacant. I think this is a case that deserves no farther consideration, and the judgment must be affirmed. To which Powys J. agreed. Et per Eyre J. It is plain the prerogative right is invaded by the archbishop, who makes himself judge in his own case. Fortescue J. accord^d. And the judgment was affirmed.

DE B T upon a bond: the defendant pleads in abatement, that the oaths were tendered to the plaintiff by virtue of the statute 1 Geo. as a suspected person, and upon his refusal to take them the same was certified to the quarter-sessions and there recorded, prout, &c. and afterwards the same was certified into B. R. by the clerk of the peace, as the statute directs, whereby the plaintiff became a papist recusant convict; unde the defendant prays quod loquela remaneat sine die, &c. And the plaintiff demurs.

For he does not do it as a Judge, but as a ministerial officer.

(a) 1 Com. Rep. 307. but the court gave no opinion upon this point.

2. The statute 1 Geo. which creates this disability, has a proviso to exempt persons who before such tender have taken the oaths, and therefore it ought to have been averred that he had not not taken them. On the statute 5 Eliz. c. 4. it was always usual to aver, the party did not exercise the trade at the time of making the statute. 1 Vent. 148. 1 Sid. 303. Now indeed that is discontinued, by reason of a moral impossibility, of which there is none in our case. It will be said, that this coming in by way of proviso, ought to be shewn on the other side; but that rule does not hold place, where the matter is the very git of the whole. 1 Leon. 18.

3. There is another proviso, to restore the party on conformity; so that the disability being only temporary, the defendant ought not to pray that the loquela may be put without day. 1 Inst. 128. b. 5 Co. Trolop's case. Lutw. 17, 18. And it has been held, that an ill prayer of judgment vitiates the whole plea, 5 Mod. 145. Salk. 297.

Boote contra. The record of sessions alone does not create the disability, but only that of this court, which is the sum of all: and records of the same court need not be pleaded sub pede sigilli. Lutw. 40. 2. This coming in by proviso ought to be shewn by them in their discharge. 1 Vent. 134. 1 Lev. 26. 3. The Ec. at the end implies every thing proper to make it a right prayer of judgment. At least this should have been shewn for cause of demurrer. 3 Lev. 66. Lev. Ent. 11. Thomf. 191. Brownl. Red. 461, 466. 2 Mod. Ent. 6. 1 Inst. 362. Litt. § 691. 2 Lev. 19. 34 H. 6. 1, 2, 24.

Wearg. It still continues a record of sessions, and the clerk of the peace only transmits an account, that there is such a record.

Et per curiam, The disability being only temporary, this plea is in the nature of a dilatory, and therefore should be pleaded sub pede sigilli. And it is considerable, whether this certificate be any record of this court. This does not seem to be within the general rule of proviso's, because the enforcing people to take the oaths being the aim and design of the statute, it is much stronger than the common case of a proviso.

Adjournatur; and this term it was argued by Fazakerley pro querente. This plea of a disability cannot be pleaded after a general imparlance, 1 Mod. 14. Yel. 112. 1 Vent. 76, 135. Neither can privilege. 3 Lev. 343. Trin. 9 Ann. in C. B. Kelsey v. Sedgewicke. Nor to the jurisdiction. 1 Lev. 89. 1 Inst. 128.

Where matter of record must be pleaded sub pede sigilli.

2. It should be with a profert in curia sub pede sigilli, whereas it is only with a prout patet per recordum remanens in this court. Bro. Record 36. Co. Lit. 128. Lutw. 17, 18. 3 Lev. 334. Lutw. 1100. Litt. § 201. Mich. 5 Geo. in C. B. Moor v. Coatsworth, worth, this exception was taken and allowed on demurrer. The matter of the conviction is traversable, and should therefore be alleged, otherwise you give the clerk of the peace a very great power to bind persons by his certificate. 1 Leon. 205. Mo. 541. pl. 714.

He mentioned the two other exceptions, for want of a quousq. and that of the proviso, and cited the same cases.

Reeve contra. The rule laid down as to imparlances is generally right, but the reason of it does not extend to this case; for where you are to give the plaintiff a better writ, you must do it in the first instance, that he may receive as little delay as possible; but here we say the plaintiff is intitled to no writ at all.

2. The conviction is a record of this court, and so need not be pleaded sub pede sigilli (1); and this differs from the case of an outlawry, where the record is that which creates the disability, whereas here the record is only the evidence of it. It is a matter of fact, whether he neglected to take the oaths, and as such it might have been traversed; and it is like the plea of auter action pendent in another court, which is never pleaded sub pede sigilli, because it involves a matter of fact, whether both are for the same cause of action.

[523] It will be very well without a quousque, and there are many precedents so in the case of an excommunication pleaded. 1 Inst. 127, 128. Rast. 320, 333, 334. Lev. Ent. 11. Tho. 191. It would be well enough, if it was only petit judicium, because the court will give the proper one. 2 Lev. 19. 1 Lev. 222. Hil. 2 Ann. B. R. Wilson v. Cross, Error e C. B. in replevin, the defendant pleaded prisel en auter lieu, to which there was a demurrer concluding in bar; and the court rejected all that came under the petit judicium, saying, as that was sufficient, the other should not vitiate it.

He said the proviso extended only to such as were to take the oaths upon account of qualifications, but upon looking into the act of Parliament, it appears to be general.

Curia advisare vult. And Trin. 11 Geo. responds ouster agord, without further argument or debate, they saying it could never be supported after an imparlance (2).

Upon appeal to the sessions they state the fact specially, that she was hired for a year into Christ-Church College in Oxon, being an extraparochial place, where she served part of the time; that during the year her mistress went upon a visit (1) to Fawley-Court, where she staid three months, and took her servant with her, and afterwards they returned to Christ-Church; and upon the whole, the sessions discharged the order for sending her to Fawley-Court.

And now upon debate it was adjudged a settlement in Fawley-Court, and consequently the last order was quashed, and the order of two Justices set up again.

It was not disputed, since the case of Rufford, but that the hiring into an extraparochial place would give a settlement. The only doubt was whether the settlement gained at Christ-Church was not superfed by a subsequent settlement at Fawley-Court; and they were all of opinion, it was. As to the case of a master who goes upon a visit, they strongly inclined it would be no settlement; because it must have that consequence, that he may be sent away. But as to the case of the servant, they all held it a settlement; for he comes there in the capacity of a servant, and is taken to be hired into any parish where he serves forty days; and it is not material to him, whether the master goes there under the capacity of gaining a settlement or not; like the case of a school-boy, he gains no settlement, but the servant that waits upon him will. And the court said, they could not take the return to Christ-Church to have given her a new settlement there, it not being stated to have had a continuance of forty days (2).

And the sessions discharge the lessee of the parson, and tax the tenant of the land. Et per cur': The order must be quashed. The farmer of the tithes is prima facie liable to the poor's rate, and therefore unless he can throw that charge over upon another, the tax must be made upon him. The tenant of the land in this case can never be said to be the occupier of the tithes; for he is either a person who buys the tithes, or else he is to be taken as only excused from paying any; and no body can say but that though the parson thinks fit to excuse a parishioner, he will still remain in point of law the occupier of the tithes. This agreement being only by parol, cannot enure as an under-lease of a thing that lies only in grant. Suppose it was the case of underwoods, which are sold standing, and the vendee grubbs them up; can it be imagined, that makes him the occupier; or suppose the tenant sells the whole crop standing, will that make him less the occupier pier of the land? If it should, it would be impossible for the officers of the parish to know whom to charge. We must take this tenant of the land to be like any other buyer of the tithes, since he has no more title to them than any stranger whatsoever; and when the parson or his farmer receives a sum of money in lieu of tithe, that is in law a receipt of the tithe; with this only difference, that it is not tithe in kind. UPON a special order of sessions it appeared, that the master of the Oxon stage coaches hired a servant for a year, to stay in an inn in Wicomb where the coach baited, and to take care of the horses: he lived there for the whole year, but in as much as the master lived all the while in Oxford, the sessions adjudge the settlement of the servant to be with him. Et per curiam: The order must be quashed, for the settlement is gained by the service, which was in Wicomb; and it would be hard to make it a settlement in Oxon, when the officers there had no power to remove him: the officers of Wicomb might have removed him, if they had pleased; they did not do it, and therefore they must provide for him (1).

BY the statute 9 & 10 W. 3. c. 11. it is provided, that no certificate-man shall gain a settlement in the parish to which he comes with such certificate, unless he takes a lease of 10 l. per annum, or shall execute some annual office in such parish. In this case the certificate-man took a farm of 10 l. per annum, part of which was in St. John's, and part in Amwell, but the greatest part, together with the house, being stated to lie in the parish that received his certificate, the court held it a settlement there.

An entire tenement of 10 l. per ann. tho' it lies in two parishes, gives a settlement in that where the party lives.

Sir George Ludlam, Chamberlain of London, vers. Lopez.

BY the statute 6 Ann. c. 16. intituled "An act for repealing an act for the well garbling of spices, and for granting an equivalent to the city of London by admitting brokers," it is taken notice, that the office of garbler of the spices is an inheritance of the city of London, and by them leased out for 300 l. per annum, which office and duty it was convenient to abolish, by which the revenues of the city would be diminished; it was therefore enacted that every broker should on his admission pay 40 s. to the chamberlain, and a yearly sum of 40 s. for the use of the city, and that every person acting as a broker without such admittance should forfeit and pay to the use of the mayor, commonalty and citizens of the said city, for every offence the sum of 25 l. to be recovered by action of debt in the name of the chamberlain.

The act of grace doth not release a forfeiture to which an interest is vested in another.
8 Mod. 103. S. C.

The defendant acted as a broker without admittance; and in an action for the penalty the question was, whether this forfeiture was pardoned by the last act of grace?

For the defendant it was insisted, that this is a statute offence of a publick nature, and the action arises ex maleficio, like the case of exercising a trade contrary to 5 Eliz. which is always pardoned, unless it be excepted. Cro. El. 632. In an appeal of murder the defendant was convicted of manslaughter; and though this was the suit of a private person, yet it was held that the King might pardon the burning in the hand. And as the penalty is but a consequence of the offence, if that be done away, the penalty must fall: and it makes no difference that the penalty is given to the chamberlain, and not to a common informer.

Sed per curiam : This is not to be compared to the case of a common informer, who has no interest vested in him till action brought, whereas here the city has an interest vested upon committing the offence, and they may release the penalty without bringing any action. They are purchasers of this revenue, and the laying a penalty does not make it a publick offence ; it is only a security for the duty, that if brokers do not take a licence, they shall pay so much ; and if this penalty were not added, the revenue would be worth nothing. 3 Inst. 238. is exprefs, that the King cannot pardon, where the action is given to the party grieved ; for that would be for him to discharge the interest of another. The offence against 5 Eliz. is of a publick nature, and indictable, but this is not. Et per Eyre Justice, I much question, whether that case of the appeal be law, for the burning the hand is part of the judgment (1).

This being upon a point saved at nisi prius, the plaintiff had judgment.

THE defendant being the son of the late Master of the Rolls, and under the displeasure of his father, did upon the marriage of his daughter with the plaintiff enter into a bond of the penalty of 5000 l. conditioned to settle one third of whatever estate in lands should come to him on the death of his father. The Master dying without a will, a very considerable estate descended to the defendant his eldest son, who neglecting to make any settlement within the time limited, the plaintiff brought his bill in this court for a specifick performance. The defendant by his answer insists, that he ought to be left to sue the penalty, having his remedy upon that at law: but Lord Chancellor decreed a specifick performance, saying it was unreasonable to give an election to the defendant, when the plaintiff could have none; for if the lands to be settled were not of the value of 5000 l. he could never resort to the penalty; and on the other hand, if they exceeded that value, it was not just he should be left to it; neither would it answer the intent of the parties, which was to secure a provision for the wife and children by the settlement of the estate; because if the plaintiff was to have the penalty, it must be as a debt due to himself, and this court would have no power to compel him to do any thing out of it for their benefit.

After an alias and pluries they return, that Hen. 8. by his letters patent under the great seal of Ireland, dated 10 May, Anno Regni 33, gave to the dean and chapter and their successors a power to make statutes and ordinances for the better government of the church, by virtue of which they ordained, that every person before he should be admitted to his stall in the choir and his voice in the chapter, should take his coporal oath before the dean and chapter for the time being, of canonical obedience to the dean, and to observe the statutes and customs of the church, and to keep the secrets of the chapter. That they were ready to have admitted the said Dowgate to his stall and voice, but that he refused to take the said oath, though requested so to do, et ea de causa they cannot admit him. Then the entry goes on with a quia videtur cur', that the return is insufficient, ideo concedatur, et per cur' hic ordinatum est, quod fiat breve de peremptorie mandamus.

Upon error of this the general errors are assigned, that no such writ ought to have been awarded, and that the return should have been allowed. The Attorney General here pleads in nullo est erratum.

Fazakerley pro queren. in errore. That a writ of error will lie in this case, though that is a point never yet determined; it is the policy of the law, that no one court should be intrusted with the sole determination of any man's property; for which reason it furnishes the party with writs of error, bills of exceptions, demurrers to evidence, &c. If the validity of this return had been determined in an action, no body will say, but a writ of error would lie; and is not the very same matter put in judgment, only in a more summary way? And is not property more and more every day the subject of mandamus's? 2 Cro. 6. says all proceedings of courts of justice ought to be examinable in another place; and in the case of Ashby v. White it was held, that a writ of Error lies on the award to remand, where the court refuses to bail.

(1) Pender v. Herle, 3 Bro. upon the authority of this case as P. C. 178. S. P. in Dom. Proc. affirmed there.

error would lie on the award to remand, where the court refused. Taking it therefore for granted that a writ of error will lie, I shall proceed to mention my exceptions to the mandamus.

1. Here is no title to the archdeaconry set out, only that he was collated, instituted and inducted: in a quare impedit they always shew a vacancy.

2. The writ is felo de se, and shews it to be unnecessary, for being inducted he has a right to all the incidents of his office. Suppose an house was annexed to the archdeaconry; would this court grant a mandamus for that? No surely, they would leave him to his ejection: you will indeed help him into the office, without which he could not maintain an ejection. The case of a parson is the same, for he is put to sue for his tithes, and cannot have a mandamus to the parishioners to set them out. In the case of corporation officers indeed you grant a mandamus to deliver the insignia after the party is sworn in; but that is because the office is annual, and it is necessary the mayor should have them immediately, in order to command the more respect.

3. This is an ecclesiastical office, and therefore the right may not be so properly determinable on a mandamus, as before the ordinary.

Reeve contra. A writ of error may by the same reason lie on the award of the first writ of mandamus, as on the peremptory one; and then it is easy to see, the delay would be infinite.

Ld. Raym. 545.
Salk. 136.
Error lies not on denial of a prohibition.
Lill. Ent. 248.

The property is not determined on this writ, for it gives the party no right whatsoever; on the award of a habeas corpus error will not lie. 8 Co. 127. And in the case of the bishop of St. David's the entry was, that the party prayed a prohibition, et ei non conceditur, and yet no error was held to lie of it. And in the case of Strode v. Palmer, Trin. 2 Geo. where this point was stirred but not determined; it was however resolved by all the court, that it would be no superfedeas to the peremptory mandamus; and therefore I cannot imagine what use it will be of, for as the mandamus gives no right, he has nothing to make restitution of upon the reversal.

Where a corporation has a power to make statutes they cannot give themselves a power to administer an oath.

But if error will lie, yet the return is insufficient, and therefore the peremptory mandamus was well awarded. 1. Because the bye-law is void, in imposing an oath on a person not obliged to take one, and in giving themselves a power to administer it. Besides, he is not a member till admitted, and therefore this is to bind one not a member. 2. They have not set out, when the bye-law was made, perhaps it was since our induction. 3. They say he was requested to take the oath, but not that it was tendered to him.

As to the exceptions to the mandamus, I shall content myself with this general answer, that the party here has no occasion to shew his title; and it was never intended he should be as exact, as if he was answering an information in nature of a quo warranto.

Fazakerley. The case of Strode v. Palmer is very different from this, for that was a case upon the mandamus act, and the judgment of the court was founded on the words of that statute, which are, "That if the return be adjudged insufficient, a peremptory mandamus shall issue without delay."

Chief Justice. Here are three questions, 1. Whether the mandamus be good? 2. If the return be so? And, 3. If the writ of error will lie?

As to the first, it is true we grant mandamus's where otherwise the party would be without remedy, as to be sworn in; but if that be done, we go no further, but leave him to get an actual admission how he can: we give him a legal possession, and then leave him to his remedy. Indeed in the case of mandamus's to restore, we go further: but that is because he had an actual possession before: and the reason why in the other case we do not meddle with the actual possession is, because when we have given him a legal one, he is by law as much intitled to every right belonging to the office, as if he had the actual possession, and may maintain that right without our assistance, even against another who is in possession of the office. Consider what would be the consequences if we should interpose: here are two persons who both claim a title to the same office, and each of these have an equal right to our assistance; we grant each of them a mandamus to be admitted, which writs are executed on behalf of both; what then are they to do when they come together? neither will submit to the other, and so there is no remedy but to fight it out, by which means we are the instruments of breaking the peace. He that has the legal possession, may maintain his right against any disturbances, we only put him in the way to pursue his proper remedy. Here has been an induction, and that is sufficient; and therefore I think the mandamus destroys itself. As to the case of the insignia (2), that depends upon the particular reason that has been mentioned.

A mandamus is only to give legal, not an actual possession (1).

(1) Vide Powell v. Milbank, of Chester, ib. 396. Clarke v. Term Rep. 399. Rex v. Bishop The Bishop of Sarum, post. 1082.

2. But if the writ were proper, then the return is ill: can they force an oath upon a man not to reveal secrets? I am sure it is a very dangerous one: and as to the canonical obedience, they may enforce that by ecclesiastical censures without an oath. Dr. Sherlock's case was founded on an act of Parliament, which said he should have a stall and voice; and till that was assigned, he was not in legal possession of the prebend. Ante 159.

3. As to the third point, I am doubtful whether the writ of error will lie; if the return had been allowed, I should think it hard to re-examine it.

Powys Justice. I think the mandamus is not proper, and that the case of the insignia stands single on that particular reason, that without them no body will give the mayor due respect.

Ante 159.

Eyre Justice. I think the mandamus is good, for as to the want of title, here is as much set out as is done in the case of corporation officers, where they only say debito modo electus. As to the main point, I think a mandamus is very proper to admit a man to the exercise of his office; and that if a common-council-man, after swearing in, should be denied admission into the council-room, he might have a writ for that purpose. And I take Dr. Sherlock's case to be the same with this, for he was prebendary by virtue of the act of Parliament, without any further ceremony, and had the same right to his seat and voice as this man has; and if a mandamus will not lie, I do not see what other remedy he has to get into his stall, unless it be by force.

Where the charter gives no power to administer the oath of office, there must be a dedimus for that purpose.

As to the return it is certainly ill, for it is not the charter but their own by-law that gives them power to administer the oath: in the case of corporations where the charter doth not empower any body to give the oath, they are forced to get a dedimus out of Chancery. Neither is the by-law well set out, for it is only inter statuta ordinatum est, without shewing when or by whom it was made.

This entry of the award of a peremptory mandamus is no judgment, for want of consideratum est, which should have been in Mich. 10 W. 3. rot. 83. the writ recites, that the return was held insufficient, per quod consideratum fuit, quod fieret breve de pre-emptorie mandamus tam in complemento judicii quam in executione ejusdem. 16 Car. 2. rot. 135. Rex v. Majorem de Maidstone. 29 Car. 2. rot. 44. Mich. 3 W. 3. rot. 139, 142. 7 W. 3. rot. 60. are all so. But I do not find they ever entered up a formal judgment.

(2) It lies also for the delivery of corporation books, &c. Rex v. Wildman, post. 817.

This award therefore of a peremptory mandamus is a judgment of which error will lie; and the party will have the effect of it in superseding the writ, if reversed.

Fortescue Justice. I think it is hard to maintain, that a writ of error will lie, because without ideo consideratum est it is no judgment: it is against the nature of mandamus's, which are festinum remedium, and great inconveniences will follow, where the writ is to deliver the insignia, or publick records. Ryley says they were formerly no more than letters, and now the disobedience of them is only a contempt. Entries are made of contempts, and yet I believe error was never brought. Bags's case (a) was the first judicial mandamus, and till 12 W. 3. they were never entered of record, when a rule was made, that they should be entered of the same term they come in. [540] (a) 11 Co. 93.

As to the point of the mandamus, I am inclined to be of my Lord Chief Justice's opinion, that it will not lie where there is a legal possession, and there was not that in Sherlock's case, for he was never sworn.

It was afterwards argued a second time Pasch. 8 Geo. when Wearg pro quer' in errore made two points, 1. Whether the writ of error lay; and, 2. Admitting it did, whether the judgment was erroneous.

As to the first point, appeals are a privilege much favoured by law, and therefore a new erected jurisdiction is not exempt from them. Salk. 263. A mandamus is now become a formed writ, and like other writs must bear teste in term. 2 Keb. 91. It is like a civil action, the party must shew a title, and the return must either admit or deny it, and when the proceedings are closed, the judgment is entered with an ideo consideratum est. A writ of error lies upon a fine, and yet that is only an agreement of the parties upon record.

The rights that are determined upon these writs are many times of an high nature, and are of consequence to the publick in keeping out an improper, or bringing in a rightful officer: and it is of consequence likewise to the party himself, who has his private right bound by such a determination as is made upon this writ.

It was objected, that if error will lie upon the award of the peremptory mandamus, it may as well lie upon the first writ, and then the delay would be infinite. But I take it to be no consequence; that if it lies on the last, it must lie also on the first; for I look upon that to be of the nature of an interlocutory judgment, of which error will not lie, but the party must stay till the cause is closed.

[541] The inconvenience of delay may be avoided, by construing this writ of error to be no superfedeas, as they did in the case of Strode v. Palmer, Lill. Entr. 248. and in many other instances, Ante 105, 537. which might be put. 1 Mod. 285. 106. 1 Vent. 266. 2 Lev. 120. 1 Sid. 184. 44.

But then it is objected, if it be no superfedeas, to what purpose should you bring it? Answer to have him turned out again, if the judgment be reversed: that reversal may put him in the same condition as when he brought the writ.

2. Taking it therefore for granted, that a writ of error will lie, I shall proceed to shew wherein the judgment is erroneous. It will be admitted, that if the original mandamus ought not to have been granted, then every thing done upon it must fall. A mandamus is not to give a right, but only a capacity of asserting it, which the party cannot do till he has a legal possession; if he has that, it is all the writ can give him, and then he stands in no need of any writ. In this case it appears, the party was in possession of the office, which gave him a right to his stall and voice, and he might as well have taken the writ to the verger or the sexton, or to have a house, or his dividend; in which cases he having such a right as will enable him to maintain an action, the law leaves him to that. Dr. Sherlock's case is widely different, for there the letters patent were no more than a standing nomination, which left the right of admission in the dean and chapter as it was before, and so was no more than the common case upon a bare nomination or election; but the party here has at the time of suing out the first mandamus all that which Dr. Sherlock did not enjoy till the peremptory mandamus gave it him.

Pengelly Serjeant contra. That the mandamus well issued, and that the writ of error would not lie.

As

As to the mandamus, it appears that Dowgate has a right to a stall, and in consequence of that he must have a remedy to come at it. It is not pretended, that a quare impedit will lie, nor can he bring an assise, he having the office already, and that for which he is contending, being only a particular privilege annexed to it. He cannot have an ejectment, it not being such a thing whereof the sheriff can give possession; nor will an action upon the case answer his purpose, because in that he cannot recover his stall, but only damages for being kept out.

As therefore he can have none of these remedies, he is under a necessity of praying a mandamus, which lies for him on behalf of the crown, as he is an officer appointed by the royal charter.

I wonder to hear it said we are already in possession of every thing the writ can give us, when it appears by the writ and return, that though we are archdeacon, yet we have no sort of possession of this particular franchise. In the case of the insignia the officer is not without remedy, if a mandamus should not be granted, for no doubt he may maintain an action of trover; but the reason you do not put him to that is, because damages will not answer the purpose, which reason holds equally in our case. 1 Lev. 119. a mandamus was granted for such a privilege as this annexed to an office, for that was to give an alderman his precedence. 1 Vent. 188. 2 Roll. Rep. 482. Pal. 51. It is no objection, that this office is of a spiritual nature. Sir T. Jones 199. F. N. B. 34. D. a writ to induct to a stall.

2. Whether the mandamus was well granted or not, will be immaterial here, if I shew that no writ of error will lie upon it. It can be of no consequence or inconvenience if error does not lie, because the mandamus neither gives, nor concludes the right. Suppose there should be a reversal, who can pray that the party may be put out again? Error will not lie on a habeas corpus. 8 Co. 127. Nor on a fine imposed by the court; and yet these may be matters of great consequence to the parties: here is no body else contending for this stall, or who can demand a restitution; and if it had ever been imagined a writ of error would lie, we must have met with it before now.

Wearg replied. The reason why the party cannot bring a quare impedit is, because that is not his proper remedy, which he must seek by action upon the case. A mandamus will not lie to command the providing necessaries upon a visitation, but the party must sue for procurations. In the case of precedence the alderman could have no action, and therefore the mandamus might be proper.

Adjournatur; and this term it was argued ex parte defendantis in errore on the single point of the writ of error, upon which only the court delivered their opinions.

Chief Justice. This cause being argued ex parte, I suppose the plaintiff in error gives it up. Several matters have been stirred in the case, which might deserve consideration, if we could properly come at them; but as we are all of opinion that the writ of error does not lie, it is not necessary to enter into the debate of them. A writ of error is calculated to restore the party to somewhat that is lost; the mandamus gives no right, not even a right of possession; so that if the judgment should be reversed, still the same right would subsist in him, which makes the reversal signify nothing. To which Powys Justice agreed. Et per Eyre Justice, A writ of error only lies on what is properly a judgment, which this is not. I was indeed inclined to think it a judgment from the entries that I mentioned formerly; but upon looking further into it, I find that the entries, where returns have been allowed, do not warrant that opinion, for they are without an ideo consideratum est. In all procedendo's the entry is with an ideo consideratum est, and yet it is certain error will not lie, neither will it on the return of a rescue. The entry in the case of the Aylesbury men is, Super quo visis et per curiam hic plenius intellectis omnibus et singulis præmissis, pro eo quod videtur curiæ hic quod causa captionis et detentionis supranominati A. B. non pertinet ad hanc curiæ, ideo remittitur, without an ideo consideratum est; which entry was made on great consideration, and is an argument the judges thought that not to be a case relieveable by writ of error. Et per Fortescue Justice, Entries of mandamus's are of late date; perhaps in Ireland they do not enter them yet: the party cannot traverse this return, and why then should he bring a writ of error? There would be no end of proceedings, if all sorts of officers that are intitled to a mandamus should be hung up by writs of error. Per curiam: The writ of error must be quashed.

Afterwards a writ of error was brought in Parliament, and the judgment of B. R. in England affirmed, with 60 l. costs.

Under what circumstances the court will allow writs of attorney to be assigned on a writ of error out of Ireland.

MR. And after consideration the court set aside the plea, being all of opinion, such clerks had no privilege at all, they not being sworn as attornies are, nor ever acting as clerks in the prothonotary's office. And that it was not sufficient for the prothonotary to enter their names in his book. As to such clerks as were actually employed under him, for so long as they continued in that employment, they would be privileged, but no longer; as in the case of a Judge's clerk; and an old rule 8 Car. was cited, where they were restrained from practising as attornies.

and it follows in the act, that the person so convicted shall forfeit, which word so is relative to the former method by oath of one or more credible witnesses: and he put the common case upon the removal of a poor person, which must be upon complaint of the churchwardens or overseers, the justices having jurisdiction only in that manner.

[547] Sed per curiam, (præter Eyre J.) The conviction must be confirmed. The intent of mentioning the oath of one witness was only to direct the justices, that they should not convict on less evidence: suppose the confession had not been before the justices, but before two witnesses who had sworn it; that would be convicting him on the oaths of witnesses, and yet the evidence would not be so strong as this. By the civil law confession is esteemed the highest evidence, and in some cases, though there are one hundred witnesses, the party is tortured to confess. Here the justices had a better evidence than the oath of any single witness, and it is a monstrous thing to say that a better sort of evidence shall not do.

Eyre J. contra, thought there was no occasion to carry this act of Parliament so far, the 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 26. giving power to convict for this offence upon confession, with a different penalty, and that it ought to have been a conviction upon that statute. The conviction was confirmed.

It was moved in arrest of judgment, that this was an immaterial issue, because the act of Parliament does not require such registry till the first of November 1721. and then the plea being only to the first of November 1720. upon which the issue is joined, the jury

Sed per curiam, The time was impertinently mentioned in the plea; the issue is joined upon that part which is only material, viz. the registry secundum formam statuti, and therefore the rest must be rejected as surplusage. If not, then the replication is ill, and so is the plea, and then the declaration must stand, and the plaintiff have judgment (1).

[558]

To this they return, that the university of Cambridge is an ancient university, and a corporation by prescription, consisting of a chancellor, masters and scholars, who time out of mind have had the government and correction of the members, and for the encouragement of learning have conferred degrees, and for reasonable causes have used to deprive. That time out of mind there has been a court held before the chancellor or vice-chancellor for the determining of all civil causes where one of the parties was a member of the university. And that Queen Elizabeth by letters patent 26 April 3d year of her reign, granted them consuance of pleas, and to be a court of record, and several other clauses of the charter are set out, upon which no question arising, they may be omitted. That by 13 Eliz. this and all other charters of the university were confirmed by act of Parliament. That at a court held 23 September 1718. according to the usage of the university, before Thomas Gooch, D. D. the then vice-chancellor, one Conyers Middleton, D. D. a member of the university, levied a plaint in debt for 4 l. 6 s. against the said Richard Bentley, and prayed process against him. That thereupon according to the custom of the university a process issued to Edward Clark the beadle, to compel the said Bentley to appear at the next court. That before the return the beadle waited upon Bentley at his lodgings within the jurisdiction, and shewed him the process, and served him with it: and upon discourse between them concerning the process and the vice-chancellor, Bentley contemptuously said, the process was illegal and unstatutable, and that he would not obey it; that he took the process out of the hands of the beadle, saying the vice-chancellor was not his judge, et quod prae procancellarius stultè egit. That at the next court held 3 October 1718. Middleton appeared, and declared in debt for 4 l. 6 s. and the register of the court exhibited a deposition of the beadle touching the contempt, which being read, the said Richard Bentley according to the usage of the university was suspended ab omni gradu suscepto. That time out of mind there has been a custom for the chancellor or vice-chancellor to summon a congregation, consisting of such and such particular members, who are specified in the return, who have used to examine and determine all matters relating to the university, and to take away degrees for contumacy or reasonable cause. That a congregation was held 17 October, 1718. when the vice-chancellor declared this whole matter to them, and desired their judgment upon it, after which having read the deposition and the several acts of court, a certain grace was propounded, according to the usage of the university, in these words, Cum reverendus vir Richardus Bentley collegii Trinitatis magister, ad summos in hac universitate titulos et honores vestro favore dudum promotus, adeo se immemorem et loci sui et vestrae auctoritatis dederit, ut

That he has not yet submitted himself to the authority of the university, Et his de causis salva auctoritate academica, they cannot restore him.

Chefbyre Serjeant pro Rege. The matter of the writ's issuing having been argued upon the rule to shew cause why there should not be a mandamus, I shall say nothing as to the writ itself; but taking it to have well issued, I shall proceed to consider, whether this return be sufficient to hinder the awarding a peremptory mandamus.

The return I take to be an insufficient return, and therefore a peremptory mandamus ought to go.

As this is not a case within the act of Parliament, it must be considered as a mandamus at common law, and the return must be certain to every intent,

That this writ is not brought for a small matter, I would just mention the consequence of the deprivation: there are many preferments and privileges which can only subsist in dignified clergymen, and some of them are mentioned in our statutes. 13 Eliz. c. 12. 17 Car. 2. c. 3. § 6. So that now these degrees which at first were only titles of honour, (Seld. 326. to 333.) now affect men in their freeholds and possessions.

The defendants have shewn themselves to be a corporation by prescription, and as such they are under the controul of this court, and therefore they, as all other corporations, must shew the removal to be for a reasonable cause, and that the proceeding has been in a legal manner.

But this we say is neither a reasonable cause, nor a legal proceeding.

As

As to the reasonableness of the cause, I think the whole will come under these four heads, and if neither of them will warrant the suspension (for I am now upon that only) it will be admitted to be illegal. 1. The first is, that Bentley said, the process was illegal. 2. That he declared, the vice-chancellor was not his judge. 3. That he acted rashly, stultè egit. And, 4. The taking away the process.

As to the first, in saying the process was illegal, do not the parties every day say as much of your proceedings in Westminster-hall? Is any thing more common than for a man to tell the court, they have given judgment erronicè, or have charged him minus justè? You bear all this even where it is false in fact, and the judgment not erroneous; whereas in this case I am sure the return has verified what was said of the process, that it was illegal. For, 1. It doth not appear whether the officer was to compel the appearance, by an arrest of the body, or goods, or by distress infinite. 2. The plaintiff was in debt, and therefore it should have been a summons. 3. It is to appear at the next court, without saying when it was to be holden; which objection has been often allowed. 2 Cro. 314. Cro. El. 105. 1 Mod. 81. 1 Vent. 181. Raym. 204. 1 Roll. Abr. 484. 4. It is not said in the citation, at whose suit, or for what account, he was to appear. 6 Co. 54. These are all good objections to the process, and shew that Bentley was well justified in saying the process was illegal; though if it was legal, I know no harm in any man's disputing the legality of any process whatsoever.

2. He said the vice-chancellor was not his judge. But could his denying that weaken the power of the vice-chancellor over him, if he was his judge? In these cases they ought to have returned the occasion of speaking the words, which perhaps may very much alter the case.

3. He said the vice-chancellor stultè egit. What are we to understand by that expression, since they have not put an Anglicè to it, I cannot tell. It may signify that he has acted rashly, or unadvisedly, or something that is very innocent.

4. His taking the process. I do not find that he did any more than ask to see it, and so received it from the officer; it does not appear he did not give it him again, or that he took it out of the officer's hands without his consent.

But now if all this charge against Bentley was true, yet it will never warrant the suspension; admitting them to be improper expressions, pressions, yet for contemptuous words a man cannot be deprived. If he had said so in court, perhaps he might have been committed; and as they were out of court, he might be bound to his good behaviour; but removals for words can never be justified. 1 Vent. 302. 2 Cro. 586. 1 Vent. 327. 3 Keb. 709, 811. Cro. El. 78, 689. Mo. 247. Latch. 299. Noy 92. Palm. 451. In Bagg's case he charged the mayor with acting foolishly (which is the most they can make of stultè egit;) but it was held, they could not remove him for it.

But admitting all this against me, that here was a reasonable cause of suspension, yet if there be not likewise a legal proceeding, the suspension will be void.

The first objection to the legality of the proceeding is, that the vice-chancellor had no sufficient evidence of the contempt; the register only exhibited quasdam depositiones, which doth not conclude them to be upon oath, for depono is a relative term, and must be applied.

But in the next place, if the word deposition should be thought to import the evidence to be upon oath, yet here is no authority to administer the oath set out in the return: the old books call such an oath sacramentum fatuum. 3 Inst. 167. Yelv. 72, 111. A Master in Chancery must be averred to have power to administer an oath, or else the court takes no notice of it. Latch. 29. 133. 2 Keb. 284.

Another imperfection in the proceeding is, that here was no notice given to Bentley, to come in and defend himself against the contempt; if he had been there, he might have so far explained himself, as to have taken off the force of the expressions: he might have told them, It is true, I did say the process was illegal, and have shewn them wherein: he might have shewn that the vice-chancellor was not his judge, but that he was visitable by some body else: and if you take stultè egit to signify no more, than that the vice-chancellor had acted rashly, it would have been easy enough for Bentley to have satisfied any body, but the vice-chancellor, of the truth of his assertion: and as to the charge about taking the process out of the hands of the officer, might not he have replied, though I took the process out of your hands, yet did I not give it you again, when I had looked upon it? All this would have been a very good defence, if they had given him an opportunity of making it.

But now to take it in the strongest manner, that he was utterly defenceless against every part of the charge, and that the charge charge will warrant his suspension; yet still there ought to have been notice; quia quicumque aliquid statuerit, parte inaudita altera, æquum licet statuerit, haud æquus fuerit. 11 Co. 99. 1 Sid. 14. 2 Sid. 97. Sti. 446. 453. 457. 478. I should not have cited these authorities to prove first principles, but only for the information of some who attend the argument of this cause.

The only matter which remains now to be considered is, what was done by the congregation in consequence of the vice-chancellor's suspension. If the suspension was illegal, what was done by the congregation will fall of course. If the suspension was legal, yet I shall insist the deprivation was not so.

The defendants themselves have shewn, that even this body is bounded by a restriction, to deprive only for reasonable cause. Now though the suspension, and the non-appearance for three court-days to submit himself (which by the way he was never called upon to do) will warrant a deprivation by the congregation; yet it is but reasonable that this accusation should be made out to them in a proper manner: and surely these gentlemen will never contend, that because Mr. Vice-Chancellor narravit the contempt, and petiit the judgment of the congregation de præmissis, that this is sufficient to found the sentence upon. But they tell you, they inspected the acts of the court, and heard the depositions; perhaps there were no acts of court relating to this matter entered in the books; the expression is general, inspectis actibus curiæ, without referring it to this case.

But further: If the suspension without notice could be got over, yet the deprivation never can. It was never imagined, that a member of a corporation, whose only privilege is perhaps to dine at the same table with Mr. Mayor, could be removed without a summons; and then a fortiori there ought to be one in this case, where the consequence will be the loss of several valuable preferments. It would be mispending your time, to cite cases to prove the necessity of a summons, and therefore I shall rest it upon the notoriety of the fact, which is every day's experience.

The defendants have founded their proceedings on custom, prescription, and act of Parliament, all subjects of the jurisdiction of this court; and if on the one hand they cannot restore him salva autoritate academica, on the other hand this deprivation cannot consist with the preservation of all rights, liberties, and rules of law, which the members of the university are intitled to as Englishmen.

Comyns

Conyns Serjeant contra. The nature of the proceeding at the suit of Dr. Middleton is no more than an outlawry or excommunication, to compel the appearance of the party: Excerpta ex Statut. Oxon. printed in 1674. tit. 21. de judiciis. The return amounts to shewing a jurisdiction to hold plea, an action properly instituted against Bentley, his contempt to the court, for which he was suspended, and afterwards upon his non-submission deprived.

It is very true what my brother Chefbyre has said, that degrees in universities were first introduced to encourage learning and learned men; but then it is no consequence, that if learned men behave themselves in a manner that does not become them, they may not be suspended or deprived.

To consider therefore the several parts of the return, I shall first endeavour to contradict what Bentley said to the officer, that the process was illegal. It appears the vice-chancellor had jurisdiction of the cause; it is averred to be agreeable to the course of the court, which answers the two first objections, that it should have distinguished how the officer was to compel the appearance, and that being in debt it ought to have been a summons. [563]

The objection that the time when he was to appear is not mentioned, would overthrow all inferior jurisdictions that hold courts at no certain time, but only summon one when they have business, in which case the party must take care to inform himself as well as he can. The distinction is, where the courts are held at a certain day, and where not. Dy. 262. 2 Cro. 214. 2 Bulst. 36. 2 Cro. 571. Cro. Car. 254. 1 Roll. Abr. 484. pl. 22, 35. Show. 95.

It is said that it does not appear at whose suit, nor for what occasion he was cited. But upon the whole return it does appear, taliter processum fuit, that Dr. Middleton came in and declared for 4*l.* 6*s.* shews it to be a proceeding upon what was done before in issuing the process.

My brother is pleased to say, the whole behaviour does not amount to a contempt, and that any man may insist the process is illegal, and that he is not convened before his proper judge: and certainly so he may, but then it ought to be in the course of a legal proceeding. If Bentley had so far complied as to have appeared before the vice-chancellor, and have insisted on these several matters; though there should perhaps have been no ground ground for the objection, yet it would have been unreasonable in the vice-chancellor to have taken it as a contempt. But when nothing of this nature is done, when there is no appearance at all, but a great deal of matter insisted on without doors, in order to arraign the jurisdiction of the vice-chancellor, and the manner of the proceeding; it is certainly a behaviour which no man who is summoned to appear before a court of justice can justify. Is it fitting any man should tell a beadle, that he will not obey the vice chancellor, and that he has acted foolishly? Or is the vice-chancellor to sit and hear all this, without shewing he has a power to punish such a contempt?

But then it is objected that though this be a contempt, yet the manner of the proceeding was not regular. In answer to which I would observe, that it is agreeable to the methods, both of the common and civil law courts, to punish contemptuous words without calling in the party. If a man treats the process of this court with contempt, the way is to grant an absolute attachment, without giving him an opportunity to serve you so a second time.

As to the evidence of the contempt, it is averred to be according to the course of that court. A deposition is a matter related upon oath: the civil law says it may be done at the relation of the officer, that the court will so far give credit to their own officer, as to punish a contempt that he only relates to them.

The charge against Bentley for taking the process, does amount to an actual taking away; it is de manibus absculit.

The case of disfranchisement of corporators has been insisted on, but surely that does not come up to this. There the right of the officer is finally concluded, whereas here is only a suspension till a submission; besides the members of a corporation have an interest in one another, but Bentley's case has no relation to any body else.

Post. 576.

The method of the whole proceeding, both as to the suspension, and what was done by the congregation, may be right, though it does not tally with the method of our common law proceedings. A feme covert may sue in the spiritual court without her husband, and if in a motion for a prohibition cases should be cited to prove the necessity of the husband's joining in a suit, yet we should be told at last, that it was the method of their proceedings below, and was well enough: does not our admiralty court enforce the sentence of a foreign court, without examining into their method of proceeding?

I would

I would not have it gone away with as a notion, that the university of Cambridge affect an uncontrollable jurisdiction. They only desire to enjoy their privileges in a manner consistent with law and justice: they insist, that what they have done in this case is so, and therefore they hope there shall be no peremptory mandamus.

C. J. This is a case of great consequence, not only as to the gentleman who is deprived, but likewise as it will affect all the members of the university in general.

I think the return has fully justified us in sending the mandamus, as it shews the power of the vice-chancellor and the congregation is only to deprive for a reasonable cause; and as it is not pretended there is any visitor (1), or any other jurisdiction, to examine into the reasonableness of the deprivation, but that of this court.

It is the glory and happiness of our excellent constitution, that to prevent any injustice no man is to be concluded by the first judgment; but that if he apprehends himself to be aggrieved, he has another court to which he can resort for relief; for this purpose the law furnishes him with appeals, with writs of error and false judgment: and lest in this particular case the party should be remediless, it was become absolutely necessary for this court to require the university to lay the state of their proceedings before us; that if they have erred, the party may have right done him, or if they have acted according to the rules of law, that their acts may be confirmed.

The

The university ought not to think it any diminution of their honour, that their proceedings are examinable in a superior court. I am sure this court, which is superior to the university, thinks it none; for my own part I can say, it is a consideration of great comfort to me, that if I do err my judgment is not conclusive to the party, but my mistake will be rectified, and so injustice not be done.

As to the proceeding against Dr. Bentley, it must be agreed that the vice-chancellor had consence of the cause, and so the suit was well instituted against him. I must likewise take the process to compel an appearance to be regular, being averred to be according to the course of that court.

As to Dr. Bentley's behaviour upon being served with the process, I must say it was very indecent, and I can tell him if he had said as much of our process we would have laid him by the heels for it: he is not to arraign the justice of the proceedings out of court before an officer, who has no power to examine it.

When he said the vice-chancellor stultè egit, it was what he might have been bound over for to his good behaviour; but I believe it is also established, that such a behaviour will not warrant a suspension or deprivation.

He said he would not obey, but non constat but he thought better of it afterwards, and did appear.

I cannot think the evidence of this contempt was sufficient: it does not appear to have been upon oath, as it should have been.

But be these matters how they will, yet surely he could never be deprived without notice. I do not observe but it is a total deprivation, and not temporary only, as was said at the bar.

[566] As to the proceedings before the congregation, it does not appear they reheard the matter any otherwise than by the relation of the vice-chancellor. They should have adjudged all the facts again, and have averred, that the deprivation was for them; whereas his de causis they deprived him, amounts to no more than that the vice-chancellor told them so.

The vice-chancellor's authority ought to be supported for the sake of keeping peace within the university; but then he must act according to law, which I do not think he has done in this case.

Porvys J.

Powys J. accord. in omnibus.

Eyre J. The university, unless they had a visitor, are certainly accountable to this court. As to the deprivation, I am not satisfied, that for a contempt to the vice-chancellor's court, the congregation which is another court can deprive; for it is not a contempt to the university in general, and it is not said in the return, that for contempts to the vice-chancellor the congregation can deprive. Every court has a power to punish contempts to itself, but I never till now heard of one court's resenting a contempt to another.

But surely for a contempt they cannot deprive. We punish our officers, but we do not turn them out. Or if they could deprive, it can never be done without notice.

Though the vice-chancellor had jurisdiction in this matter, yet in virtue of our superintendency over all inferior jurisdictions, we must take care he does not abuse his authority. Do not we prohibit the spiritual court, till they give a copy of the libel, in all cases within their jurisdiction?

Fortescue J. If they had returned a visitor, it would be something, but without that they must submit to the jurisdiction of this court, which is no more than exempt jurisdictions, as the county palatine which has jura regalia, do.

A deprivation can never be the proper punishment for a contempt, because it cannot hold in the case of under graduates. I think the behaviour of Dr. Bentley was a contempt, for which he might be bound to his good behaviour, as it was out of court.

There is another thing considerable in this case, whether upon any account the university can deprive a man of his degrees; because he is in from the crown, whence the power originally flows.

Besides, the objection for want of notice can never be got over. The laws of God and man both give the party an opportunity to make his defence, if he has any. I remember to have heard it observed by a very learned man upon such an occasion, that even God himself did not pass sentence upon Adam, before he was called upon to make his defence. Adam (says God) where art thou? Hast thou not eaten of the tree, whereof I commanded thee that thou shouldest not eat? And the same question was put to Eve also. Per cur^a, alterius concilium.

This has long been a litigated question, whether the executor should have the surplus, where there is a specific legacy to him. The case of Forster v. Monk before Lord Jefferies was soon after the statute of distributions, and he held that the surplus should be distributed. The three commissioners of the great seal afterwards reversed this decree, but upon appeal to the House of Lords the reversal was reversed, and the decree for a distribution set up again.

Then came the case of Littlebury v. Buckley, which was in the equity court of London before Sir Peter King the Recorder, who decreed a distribution where the devise to the executor was of all his effects beyond sea. But there being in that case a strong evidence of a contrary intent, the Lords allowed themselves a latitude of examining such proof, and thereupon reversed that decree.

The last case I shall mention was that of May v. Lewen (a) in this court in February 1720, before the present Chancellor, where there was a devise to two executors of 50 l. a-piece for their trouble and pains; and a distribution was decreed.

This case is the very same with the case at bar. The giving a legacy for his care, shews plainly the testator intended him only as a trustee, and therefore I found myself upon those words, in decreeing a distribution in this (2).

N. B. This being vexata questio, in 1725 King, then Lord Chancellor brought a bill into the House of Peers (which

THE plaintiff declares, that the defendant by his writing indented agreed with the plaintiff, that he (the defendant) would accept of the plaintiff 500 l. fourth subscription so soon as the receipts should be delivered out by the company, and would pay for the same 950 l. on the 5th of November next after the date of the writing. Then he avers, that the defendant did not pay the money at the day.

Where there are mutual remedies, either may sue, without shewing a performance on his part (1). But where defendant by deed poll covenants to accept so much stock from plaintiff so soon as the receipts should be delivered out, and pay 950 l. for same on a day certain. In an action for the money, a tender of delivery of the stock must be averred. 3 Mod. 40. S. C.

The defendant demurs generally, and Mr. Lingard pro defendente objected, that the plaintiff had not shewn the delivery of any receipts, or an impossibility of doing it, and cited 1 Lutw. 245. Salk. 171.

Probyn contra answered, That there were mutual remedies, and therefore it need not be shewn. 1 Saund. 319. 1 Lev. 274.

Eyre Justice doubted whether here was a mutual remedy, for the plaintiff does not covenant to deliver, but the other only to accept; to which Fortescue Justice inclined. Sed per Pratt Chief Justice, The time for payment of the money is certain at all events; but as for the delivery of the receipts, that was left uncertain, because it was impossible to fix a time for that, and if the defendant has made a foolish bargain in undertaking to pay the money on the 6th of November, whether he had the receipts or not, we cannot help him. The nature of these contracts is for the other party to give a deed obliging himself to deliver the stock, but even upon this agreement I should think the defendant would have his remedy. In the case of a deed poll, if the lessee enters and enjoys the land, the other shall maintain debt for rent, and yet the whole is the words of the lessor.

Pasch. 8 Geo. it was argued a second time by West pro defendente. It will not be disputed but that generally speaking the word pro will create a condition precedent. 1 Vent. 147. 2 Mod. 33. 1 Lev. 87. Salk. 112. And that it will do so in this case, if I can clear it from two objections that have been made. 1. That here is a mutual remedy: and, 2. That here is a particular day fixed for the payment of the money.

Vide in Cowper
v. Andrews,
Hob. 41.

As to the first; That is begging the question, for I take it there is not a mutual remedy, the words being the words of the defendant only, "That he will accept the subscription, and pay for the same:" which lays the plaintiff under no obligation to deliver the receipts, 1 Saund. 320.

2. As to the second objection, that here is a particular day appointed for payment of the money; I do admit, that if it appeared upon the contract, that such a day must of necessity happen before the receipts could be delivered, it would then be very difficult to answer it; but that is not this case, for the company might if they pleased have given out the receipts; and that brings the case within the distinction laid down by Lord Chief Justice Holt in the case of Thorpe v. Thorpe, Salk. 171. Besides, it is observable, that this is an entire covenant to accept and pay, so that he is not to pay till he can accept, Lutw. 490.

Reeve contra. I admit the first part of Mr. West's argument, but insist on the two objections he has taken notice of, as sufficient to bring this case out of the reach of that general doctrine.

Here is a certain sum to be paid at a certain day, and that too before the other part of the contract could possibly be performed. The court will take notice of the South-sea acts, and by that of 7 Geo. st. 2. it appears the receipts could not be delivered by the 6th of November; so that this case falls within the first distinction of Thorpe v. Thorpe, that if a day be appointed for payment of the money, and that day is to happen before the thing can be performed, an action may be brought for the money, before the thing be done; because it appears the party relied upon his remedy,

But then say they, here is no mutual remedy. But I take it, that this being an agreement by indenture, the court will intend it was executed by both parties. As to the cases they are all of parol agreements, where a consideration must appear to make it a binding promise; but here the action will be maintainable on the bare covenant to pay, without any consideration at all, and therefore the pro, &c. may be left out.

Adjournatur. And this term Pratt Chief Justice delivered the resolution of the court.

This is an action upon a deed poll made by the defendant, and whereby he covenants to accept so much stock, and to pay for the same, and the plaintiff in an action for the money has not averred a delivery or tender of the stock, and for this fault we are all of opinion, the declaration is not good.

The intent of the parties appears to be, that one should have the money, and the other the stock; and not that either should perform his part of the agreement, and lay himself at the mercy of the other for the equivalent. This is not a covenant entered into by both parties, upon which each will have his mutual remedy; but it is the deed poll of the defendant only; and therefore though upon delivery or tender of the stock the plaintiff will have his remedy for the money, yet the defendant on the other side upon payment of the money will have no remedy to compel the delivery of the stock; and having no such remedy he shall not be obliged to pay the money, till the consideration for which it is payable is performed.

The word pro will be either a condition precedent or subsequent, as will best answer the intent of the parties: in this case it must be a condition precedent, because otherwise the intention of the defendant to have the stock for his money can never take effect, and this is proved by 7 Co. 10. and 1 Inst. 204. where the annuity pro una acra, says the book, supposes the acre to be first granted.

The case of Callonel v. Briggs, (Salk. 112.) was not so strong for there was a promise to transfer, which gave a mutual remedy; but yet Holt Chief Justice held the plaintiff to shew a tender, because that was the consideration for the defendant's payment of the money. And the case he there puts of the sale of a horse for 10 l. is exactly the same with this.

The resolutions that were mentioned at the bar of the case of Thorpe v. Thorpe, are all founded on great reason, and the first of them is agreeable to the resolution of this case, which is an executory contract, where one is to do the act, and for the doing thereof the other is to pay,

And this difference between a mutual covenant and a deed poll is likewise taken and allowed in the case of Pordage v. Cole, 1 Saund. 320. where the court were of opinion the defendant had his remedy, "otherwise (says the book) it would have been, "if the deed had been the words of the defendant only," which is this case.

For these reasons we are all of opinion the defendant must have judgment,

The defendant pleaded non assumpsit, and after verdict for the plaintiff it was moved in arrest of judgment, that this action is founded upon the tort in not delivering the goods, and therefore the proper plea would have been Not guilty.

E contra it was insisted, that though it is a tort, yet it arises from an agreement, and any general issue will be good, that will bring the merits of the cause in question. Upon this Bostock brought trover against Henry, who at the trial offered to prove the property to be in Ball, and called Lechmere for that purpose. But it appearing he had given bond to indemnify the company in stopping the bonds, King C. J. refused to let him be examined, saying that though there are many instances where a party shall be a witness, though he is concerned in the event of the cause; yet there never was a case of allowing one who had made himself liable to pay costs in the action (1) upon this the plaintiff recovered. Then Ball brings trover against Bostock, and at this trial exception was taken to Lechmere's evidence, because if Ball should recover against Bostock, that would be set in equity against the former recovery by Bostock against Henry, and so discharge Lechmere's bond: but the Chief Justice said, that was too remote to exclude him from being a witness, and went only to his credit (2). Whereupon he was sworn, and proved the property in Ball, and that they were stolen. Children born where the father is not settled may be sent to his settlement after his death.

UPON a special order it was stated, that William Chesterman was born in St. Giles's, and put apprentice in Everfley Blackwater, where he served two years, till the master failed; that then he returned to St. Giles's, where he lived four years, married a wife by whom he had there two children, and died; and that during the last four years he never lived in Everfley Blackwater.

Upon this order the question was, Where the wife and children were settled. As to the wife, all agreed her to follow the last settlement of her husband, which was in Everfley Blackwater; but as to the children the court were divided, the Chief Justice and Powys J. inclining, that they having never been removed during the life of the father, they were settled in St. Giles's, the place of their birth. But Eyre and Fortescue Justices, thought the settlement to be in Everfley Blackwater, and that since during the life of the father they might have been sent thither, his death would not vary the case.

Adjournatur; and this term it was debated again, and the Chief Justice changed his opinion, holding now that the settlement of the children was in Everfley Blackwater, and that the death of the father would not hinder their being sent thither; Powys J. likewise came over, so that there were three of that opinion against Raymond J. (1) who thought that this case must often have happened, if children could be thus sent after the death of the father (2). They said the case of settling bastards and vagrants at the place of their birth was ex necessitate, but here was none.

The order for sending the children to Everfley Blackwater was confirmed.

UPON a special order the case was stated, That A. was bound an apprentice, and served and inhabited two years, till a commission of bankruptcy was taken out against the master, at which time the apprentice without having the indenture delivered up, or any discharge at the sessions, hires himself as a common servant into another parish, and served a year. The sessions adjudge this to be no dissolution of the apprenticeship, and consequently, that the settlement of the apprentice was in the first parish where he was bound.

Et per curiam, Their judgment is right. There could be no dissolution of the contract, unless the indenture had been delivered up, or the sessions had discharged him; as no doubt they would have done, if they had been applied to. And then as the first contract had continuance, the apprentice had no power to hire himself; and the service afterwards for a year was void, as to any pretence of giving him a settlement (1). That service must be taken as a service to the first master, who by law was intitled to the wages, and therefore the order must be confirmed.

Where there are two qualifications to an election of an officer, he who has but one only may be a witness as to the right.

THE question was, whether the plaintiff was qualified to be elected common council-man of Apulby. The defendant attempted to disqualify him, by setting up two qualifications which he had not, viz. a burgage tenure, and being an inhabitant; and to prove this called one who was an inhabitant, but had not a burgage tenure. It was objected, that he was no witness to narrow the right, and confine it to burgage tenants and inhabitants, having one of the qualifications himself and therefore so far interested, as he was nearer the right he set up than other persons; but the court said there was a necessity of allowing such people in a question of this nature, since they must best know the right; besides he was in effect a witness against himself, by saying, though I am an inhabitant, yet I have no right to be chosen, because I have not a burgage tenure.

But it was answered and resolved by the court, That true it was he might by will or any new conveyance have made such new disposition, and even the same deed would have been sufficient for that purpose, if there had been a new grant, or a new covenant on consideration expressed; but here he had declared new uses as under the recovery, whereas the uses of the recovery were full before, and the power was only to revoke, and not to limit new uses. Ex relatione aliorum. The plaintiff was nonsuit.

What is a good registry of a South-Sea contract.

3 Mod. 232. S. C.

IN an action of covenant on a South-sea contract the defendant pleaded, that the contract was never duly registered according to the late act of Parliament; and upon the trial of that issue a case was made for the opinion of the court.

That the contract was by indenture set out (in hæc verba) whereby the plaintiff in consideration of 1436 l. 10 s. to be paid by the defendant, doth covenant to transfer to him all such stock, bonds and money, as the South-sea company shall allow on the account of 1277 l. 1 s. 6 d. lottery annuities then lately subscribed into the stock by and in the name of the plaintiff: in consideration of which the defendant covenants to accept the produce of such annuities, and to pay for the same 1436 l. 10 s. at the same time: that this contract was entered in the books of the South-sea company in hæc verba, under which the plaintiff subscribed these words, This is for my proper use and benefit; and then signed his name Philip Wilkinson.

[[586] That no evidence was offered that the contract was made for the use and benefit of any person besides the plaintiff, nor that the contract was made for the use and benefit of the plaintiff only.

And a verdict was given for the plaintiff, subject to the opinion of the court upon this case,

Strange pro quer. The question is, whether this contract be duly registered, according the direction of the late act of Parliament. I shall offer my reasons in support of this registry; and since this is like to be a leading case, and that many thousands of contracts contracts are to stand or fall by the event of this question, I shall state the clause at large, because I apprehend it will be material.

The act of Parliament upon which this question arises is the only act that passed in a session held for that purpose at the latter end of the seventh year of his Majesty's reign; and after some other provisions for restoring the publick credit, which then greatly suffered by the mismanagement of the South-sea directors, it comes to the case of contracts between private persons, and takes notice of the necessity there was, to make some regulations or orders touching contracts for the sale or purchase of subscription or stock, for preventing a multiplicity of vexatious and doubtful suits in law or equity concerning the same, and therefore it enacts, "That every contract for the sale or purchase of subscriptions or stock, which shall be unperformed and not compounded before such a time, or an abstract or memorial thereof, signed by the party interested therein, and who shall be minded to take advantage of the same, shall be entered and registered in books, which the respective companies are required to prepare for that purpose: and in default of such entry or register every such contract, as to so much as shall remain unperformed or not compounded, shall be void." And then it follows, "That such entries shall express the names of the parties or persons for whose use or benefit such contracts were made."

Having stated the clause, I shall consider what was the intention of this act of parliament, and whether our registry has fulfilled that intention. The intention of the legislature is expressed in that part of the clause which is introductive to the enacting part; it was to prevent a multiplicity of vexatious and doubtful suits in law or equity, by giving the buyer of stock a view, as well of him who has the legal remedy, as he who has the equitable interest, thereby to ease him of the trouble and expence of a suit in equity against the visible contractor, to discover whether the sale was not secretly in trust for another, against whom perhaps the buyer might have an equitable bar; and therefore if it is disclosed in the registry, not only where the legal remedy lies, but also who has the equitable interest, there is an end of any trouble from vexatious and doubtful suits in law or equity about that matter, which was all that was proposed or designed by the legislature.

In the case at bar, the contract is registered in hac verba, and by that it appears the now plaintiff has a legal remedy (such an one as he has pursued) by action of covenant against the defendant. But say they on the other side, that is not enough, he may only be nominal in this affair. In answer to that, he has added these words that are stated in the case, This is for my proper use and benefit, Philip Wilkinson. So that he has answered the intent of the act in both respects; he has registered the deed, which, gives him the title at law, and he has likewise shewn the equitable interest to be in himself.

To this it is objected, that by the words of the act he is required to express for whose use or benefit the contract was made; and that in the present case, it is only expressed for whose benefit the contract was at the time of registering.

I would submit two things as an answer to that objection. 1. That this is a forced construction, and carries the words were made farther than is necessary to answer the design of the act. And, 2. That if your Lordship should be of opinion to construe it so nicely, yet our registry will be sufficient.

1. To shew this to be a forced construction, and what there is no occasion to make, in order to attain the end of the legislature, I would beg leave to say, that considering, this act is made to restrain men in some degree from the full exercise of a legal remedy they had before; it is to be construed in such a manner, as will deprive the subject of as little as may be, and it is not to be extended to any construction beyond what will strictly answer the view of the Parliament; and so the court did often intimate upon several motions that have been in this court relating to bail upon this act of Parliament, where they kept strictly to the words of the act, without extending them to similar cases.

The expression in the act is indeed in the preterperfect tense, were made; but I shall submit it, whether considering how that expression comes to be made use of, it ought to be expounded strictly to mean the time of making the contract.

[588] The legislature are speaking of contracts then in being, and therefore it was natural to speak of them as contracts that were made; and in this view the expression will be far short of what it would have been, if the act had required the entry to express the names of the parties for whose benefit the contracts were at the time of making; and it may be material to observe, that in another part of the act that phrase is used, where they are providing for the case of a contract, when the seller had not the stock at the time of the contract: now if it had been intended to have gone so far back in our case, what reason is there why the same expression was not made use of? The act of Parliament was never intended as a snare, to avoid all contracts that were not registered according to the strictest letter of the law. The only general view (besides what related to particular persons) was to see a little into the number and extensiveness of the contracts, in order to apply farther remedies if there was occasion. In

In a common law conveyance the word procreantis (which strictly Ante 41. n. (2). speaking signifies children that were born at the time of the feoffment) has nevertheless been construed to take in all the issue, whether born before the feoffment or after; and yet that is an expression as strongly respecting a time past as the phrase made use of in this statute; and if in that case it was extended to a future time, why not as well in our case? especially when by that construction the intent of the legislature is answered.

2. Admitting this act does require the entry to shew for whose use the contract was at the time of making; even then our registry, if we take it altogether, will be sufficient. It appears upon the books of the South-sea company (where the deed is entered in hac verba) that Mr. Wilkinson was possessed of several lottery annuities, which he subscribed in as his own, sold as his own, registered that contract as such, and which he shews continued to be his own sole property and interest to the time of such registry. Is there now after all this any room to doubt, whether this contract was made upon his own account or not? If there be no room to doubt it, and if it be a matter naturally to be collected from this registry; then it is a registry that in the strictest acceptation of the words is conform to the act of Parliament, and there is an end of their objection that way.

It is stated in the case, that no evidence was offered, to prove that this contract was for the benefit of any body but the plaintiff: what influence that will have in this question I must submit; and also another matter that appeared upon view of the South-sea books, which was, that hardly any of the entries were even so strong as this signing by the plaintiff, it's being for his own proper use and benefit.

So that upon the whole matter I must submit it, that as by this registry the defendant is fully apprized who he has to deal with, and therefore has no occasion to go into equity to discover who would be intitled to the benefit of the contract, since he sees at one view that both the legal and equitable interest are in Mr. Wilkinson; the giving him all this light is performing every thing that was required of us by this act of Parliament; and therefore I hope your Lordship will be of opinion, our action of covenant was well brought; and that the question which has arisen upon this registry shall be determined in favour of the plaintiff.

Fazakerley contra. It must be admitted, that this registry is not according to the words. They require it to shew for whose use the contract was, the registry only shews for whose it is at the time of registering.

And

And as it is not within the words, so neither is it within the reason and intent of the act. The preamble takes notice of the great frauds and abuses that had been committed by the late South-sea directors, to the prejudice of the publick; and therefore being made for the benefit of the publick, it ought to be carried as far as may be. One main end of this act was, to discover what contracts the directors were interested in, that so the publick might have the benefit of them; and that it should not be in the power of a director, to set up a nominal person, to recover for his private use, in order to defraud the publick of so much, which was declared to be forfeited. But how will that end be attained if this registry subsists? Not at all. For supposing Mr. Wilkinson to have been at first only nominal, and in trust for a director; may not that director assign over the equitable interest after the contract is made, and then that will be a contract for the benefit of Mr. Wilkinson at the time of registering, though at the time of making it was not. By this means the act will be eluded, and those fraudulent clandestine assignments can never be got at.

There can be no inconvenience in keeping them strictly to the words of the act, for if the transaction be fair, then they may make the registry according to the words; but if the fact will not warrant it, I apprehend the Legislature never intended to give the equitable proprietor a power to change hands, perhaps to the defrauding the publick, or at least the private contractor.

Mr. Strange says it will be sufficient, because now it appears both where the legal and equitable interest are; and so it does, but that is not enough, the statute intending to give the buyer an opportunity of knowing who had the equitable right when the contract was made.

I must therefore insist, that if this registry stands, the intent of the act is not answered; because it is liable to that objection that it might at first be in trust for another, which trust might afterwards be assigned or released.

Chief Justice. This was tried before me at nisi prius, and it being a case of very great consequence, I did not think it proper to determine it there, though I must own that I was in no great doubt about it.

It is certain that this registry is not within the words of the act, since it is not said that the contract was at first made for the use and benefit of the plaintiff. But though it be not within the letter, yet I think we are to give this act such a construction as is reasonable, considering the nature and circumstances of the case. I believe the Parliament never intended to avoid contracts upon so great a nicety as this, and therefore since the plaintiff has shewn, that he is the only person the defendant can have to do with, or be called upon by, in this matter, I am of opinion the registry is well enough, and the plaintiff must have judgment.

Powys Justice. I think this is a good registry. There is nothing in the deed that looks like any thing of a trust, and we are not to suppose it one. Besides, considering the nature of this case, it is not probable that it could be a transaction privately for the benefit of a director, because this is not a money subscription, but a subscription of lottery annuities; and every body knows, that though in the case of the money subscriptions they made use of other people's names, yet they were fond enough of subscribing annuities in their own names; and the thing has answered, by the Parliament's giving greater allowances to those directors who subscribed in the most. The words of the act are mindes to take advantage, and all they intended was to see what bargains were insisted on.

Fortescue Justice. The intent of the act was to let the buyer know, whether he that sued him was really intitled to the money; you shall register your contract, and put your name to it. This is for my proper use, in a legal acceptation, denotes it was so; because being a chose in action it could not be assigned. In the nature of the thing surely it is well enough.

Raymond Justice. This is an action ex post facto, to lay a clog upon a legal remedy, and therefore ought to have such a construction as the plaintiff contends for. The case of the directors was not under consideration at the time of passing this act, their business having been settled before. This deed imports it to be for the benefit of the plaintiff, and no proof is offered to the contrary; we must therefore take it to be so, and I see no inconvenience therein. Per cur': Judgment for the plaintiff.

ERROR of a judgment in C. B. in an action upon the case, wherein the plaintiff declares, that the defendants, according to the custom of merchants, drew a bill of exchange upon J. P. whereby they requested him to pay the plaintiff 1945 l. out of the monies in his the said J. P.'s hands belonging to the proprietors of the Devonshire mines, being part of the consideration money for the purchase of the manor of West Buckland. That J. P. refused to accept it, and the defendants as drawers are liable. There was judgment in C. B. for the plaintiff, but upon error in B. R. that judgment was reversed, the whole court being of opinion, that this appointment to pay out of a particular fund, which might or might not answer, was not a bill of exchange, and exactly like the case of Jocelyn v. Lasferre in B. R. Pass. 1 Geo. which was a bill drawn by an officer, upon his agent, requesting him to pay out of his growing subsistence; which the court on a special resolution delivered by Parker C. J. held not to be a bill of exchange, because in the nature of the thing no body would negotiate it, by reason of the uncertainty of the fund.

Revoking a submission to arbitration which has been made a rule of court is a contempt. So is procuring a release from the nominal plaintiff in ejectment (2).

IN an information for a misdemeanor there was a rule for a special jury to be struck by the master, who was to chuse forty-eight out of the freeholders' book, out of which each side was to strike twelve, and the remaining twenty-four were to be returned for the trial of the cause. At the trial the defendant challenged the array for want of hundredors, and the challenge was allowed; whereupon the prosecutor moved for an attachment against the defendant, as being guilty of a contempt of the rule; and upon the motion it appeared, that the defendant's agent in striking out his twelve had expunged all the hundredors.

The defendant's counsel insisted, it was no contempt, because they were not restrained by the rule; and mentioned several precedents, where the rules have been express, that the defendant should strike out twelve, and not challenge the array for want of hundredors. In Queen Elizabeth's time, Regina v. Lord Hunston (a) was so. Rex v. Kiffin, 29 Car. 2. 3 Keb. 340. The Attorney General moved to add those words, but it was denied. Rex v. Sherrard, 1 Geo. those words are added ex assensu.

Sed per curiam. This is a plain contempt. Does not he defeat the rule, by insisting, that the twenty-four, who the rule says shall be returned to try the cause, shall not try it? Suppose a submission to arbitration be revoked (as by law it may) after it is made a rule of court, that is certainly a contempt. The same in a release procured from the nominal plaintiff in ejectment. In Mr. Gibbon's case he pleaded such a release puis darrein continuance; and Lord Trevor, who tried the cause, said he was bound to allow the plea, if they insisted upon it: but at the same time told them, he would lay them by the heels; upon which the plea was withdrawn. This is not making contempts by implication, but it is the natural construction of the rule, without which the justice intended by making these rules cannot be had. He might indeed have had a challenge to the polls, because that would not hinder the cause from going on; for they might have had a tales. If there was a rule to restrain the party from taking out execution, does any body think we would suffer him to bring an action of debt upon the judgment? Per curiam, An attachment was granted.

Et per curiam, This would have been ill upon a demurrer (1), but is well enough after a verdict. *Marriage articles 23d of June 1715.

*Upon a treaty of marriage between Earl Gilbert and the plaintiff his second wife, articles of agreement dated the 23d of June 1715, were made between Earl Gilbert of the first part, the defendant Sir Strensbam Masters, and the plaintiff his only daughter, of the second part, and the defendants Mr. Leigh and Mr. Williams of the third part, whereby in consideration of such marriage, and of 10,000*l.* marriage portion paid down by Sir Strensbam Masters to the said Earl Gilbert, he the said Earl Gilbert for himself, his heirs, executors and administrators, did covenant, promise and agree, to and with the said Sir Strensbam Masters, his heirs, executors and administrators, and to and with every of them by the said articles in manner and form following, (that is to say) that he the said Gilbert Earl of Coventry, or his heirs, should and would, at any time after the solemniza-tion of the said intended marriage, at the request of the said Sir Strensham Masters, his heirs, executors, or administrators, but at the proper costs and charges in the law of the said Gilbert Earl of Coventry, his executors or administrators, according to the power given to him the said Earl of Coventry for that purpose, in and by the last will and testament of the Right Honourable Thomas the late Earl of Coventry deceased, father of the said Gilbert Earl of Coventry, bearing date on or about the 24th day of March, in the year of our Lord 1698, or otherwise by good and sufficient conveyances and assurances in the law, well and sufficiently convey, settle, limit and appoint, or cause or procure to be conveyed, settled, limited or appointed, manors, messuages, lands, tenements, and hereditaments, of the full and clear value of 500*l. per ann.* unto or upon the said Anne Masters, for and during her natural life for her jointure, to commence and take effect in possession immediately from and after the death of the said Gilbert Earl of Coventry, in case the said Anne Masters shall him survive, as by the said Sir Strensham Masters, his heirs, executors, or administrators, or by his surveyor, or any of their counsel learned in the law, shall be reasonably devised, advised or required: and also that his heirs, executors, or administrators, should, after his death, pay her during her life 250*l. per ann.* as an addition to her jointure, half yearly, free from taxes.

And it was further agreed that Earl Gilbert should deposit 5000*l.* part of the 10,000*l.* in the Bank of England, or invest it in Exchequer notes carrying interest, and deposit them in a box or trunk to be locked up with three locks, upon trust that the defendants Leigh and Williams should lay out the 5000*l.* in the purchase of lands, and settle them to the use of the Earl for life, with remainder to trustees to preserve contingent remainders, and after his death to the use of the plaintiff for life, to be with the manors and lands of 500*l. per ann.* aforesaid, and the said annuity of 240*l. per ann.* in full for her jointure and in bar of dower; with other limitations to the use of the children of that marriage; and in default of such issue to the use of the said Earl Gilbert, his heirs and assigns, as therein is mentioned, with a power in the trustees, until a purchase, to put out the 5000*l.* at interest, to be applied as therein directed.

The marriage took effect, and the 10,000*l.* marriage portion was paid, and 5000*l.* part thereof, was invested in bank bills, and afterwards lent on a mortgage that had been made of part of the family estate, pursuant to said articles. And Earl Gilbert soon after his marriage gave directions to his steward, to find out proper lands for a jointure, and the steward according to orders perused the family settlement, and could find no other estate than the manor of Woolvey, which was free from incumbrances, and which was within the Earl's power to settle; and the said manor being of little more than the yearly value of 400 l. the Earl paid off a 1200 l. mortgage on lands in Woolston, and agreed to make up the 500 l. per annum out of those lands; and accordingly, at the request of Sir Strensbam Masters, caused a settlement by way of lease and release the 5th and 6th of July 1719 to be prepared, which was agreed to by all parties, and approved of by Sir Strensbam, and actually ingrossed; wherein, after recital of Earl Gilbert's power by the said will, and of the articles, the said Earl Gilbert is therein mentioned to limit and confirm unto Sir Strensbam Masters and Mr. Leigh, their heirs and assigns, the said manor of Woolvey and several lands in Woolston therein particularly mentioned, of the value of 500 l. per annum. And the Earl often expressed his intentions to execute the said settlement; but by his sudden illness, whereof he died, and the absence of the steward, in whose custody the intended settlement was at that time, and many other unforeseen accidents, set forth in the pleadings, the same was not executed before his death.

Earl Gilbert died without issue male, leaving by Dorothy his first wife the Lady Anne, now the wife of Sir William Carew, his only daughter and heir. But before his death made his last will and testament in writing, dated 27th of October 1719, and thereby (inter alia) gave the plaintiff (besides what was agreed to be settled on her by the marriage articles) 3000 l. and several specific legacies, and made his said daughter the Lady Anne Carew sole executrix, who hath since proved his will, and taken upon her the execution thereof.

Francis Coventry also died without issue male. So that upon the death of Earl Gilbert, the defendant William (the present) Earl of Coventry became seised of divers manors and estates under and by virtue of the limitations in the said will, subject not only to the 5000 l. mortgage, but as the plaintiff insists, to the 500 l. annum agreed to be limited to the plaintiff for her jointure: and the plaintiff's bill is, to compel the trustees in the mortgage to call in the 5000 l. in order to lay it out in a purchase, and to compel Sir William Carew and his lady to give a real security for the 250 l. per annum, and to pay the 3000 l. legacy. And against the Earl of Coventry, that she may hold and enjoy the land contained in the settlement intended to be executed, for her life; but in case the indenture so ingrossed should proved defective, and not amount in equity to a sufficient appointment pursuant to the power, then that she may have a satisfaction out of the Earl's real and personal estate.

On the hearing of this cause the 18th of April 1722. several cases being then cited, the court was pleased to refer it to Mr. Conway, one of the Masters, to take account of the real and personal assets of Earl Gilbert come to the hands of any of the parties, who were to be examined on interrogatories, and the Master was also to take an account of the debts of Earl Gilbert unsatisfied at his death, and also of his legacies, and to state the real and personal assets, and any other matter he should find difficult, specially to the court: and when the Master should have made his report, this cause was to come on again to be heard thereupon; and also as to the 500 l. per annum claimed by the plaintiff upon the marriage articles. At which time the court (being before attended with the cases then cited) would desire the assistance of some of the Lords the Judges and the Master of the Rolls: and all further directions were reserved until the cause should come to be heard on the Master's report.

The Master made his report, and thereby certified, that the real and personal assets of the said Earl Gilbert amount to 13,467 l. 0s. 9d. over and besides the 1200 l. and interest due on the said mortgage of Woolston, and that there was 3792 l. 9s. 7d. paid and to be paid by the said Sir William Carew, in discharge of debts, legacies and funeral charges, besides what is due to the plaintiff, as in the report is mentioned: and the plaintiff's demands out of the said 13,467 l. 0s. 9d. are as follows, viz. 250 l. annuity clear of taxes; jewels, furniture, and other specific legacies, amounting to 1448 l. 1s. 7d. halfpenny; and the demand of 500 l. per annum now in question, with the arrears thereof from Earl Gilbert's death, being four years and upwards.

In this case it was argued for the defendant, that here was no execution of the power limited in Earl Thomas's will, because the covenant with Sir Strensham Masters was, that Earl Gilbert, or his heirs, should and would, at the proper costs and charges of the said Earl, his executors or administrators, according to the power in the will of Earl Thomas, or otherwise by good and sufficient conveyances in the law, sufficiently convey lands to the value of 500 l. per annum: and that therefore they could not come into a court of equity for a specific performance, because they were not specially mentioned in the covenant to be set forth as a jointure; and that the covenant was to be interpreted as a personal covenant, because it was made with Masters, his heirs, executors and administrators, either to settle in pursuance of the power, or otherwise; so that Earl Gilbert had his election, to satisfy the covenant, either by settling the lands under the power by appointment, or by limiting any other lands to the same purposes; and according to the circumstances of this case he could not be said to have made his election, because from 1715 to 1719, there was nothing done, nor any request by Sir Strensbam, to settle any particular lands in pursuance of the power. And though about July 1719, a draft was prepared and ingrossed, yet that continued to lie by till October 1719. and was never executed; and he had therefore an animus deliberandi continuing, and had not taken hold of the power, by appointing the lands of Woolvey and Woolston in performance of the covenant, since the indentures were only ingrossed, and never executed. And in all conveyances of this nature the animus deliberandi must be supposed to continue, till the act be compleatly executed. And the power not being executed, this was compared to the case of Lanyon v. Williams, where tenant in tail for valuable consideration covenants to sell the estate-tail and dies; a court of equity would not compel him to execute such conveyance, though there had been a decree against the tenant in tail to levy a fine and suffer a recovery: and therefore it was urged, that since the remainder was vested before the legal estate was executed by Earl Gilbert, the court would not compel the remainder-man in this case to execute conveyances in pursuance of this covenant.

And here they quoted those cases of law, which say that powers, which go in derogation of remainders vested, are to be taken strictly; because it was looked upon as dangerous for a court of equity to overthrow by their decrees the interests that were originally vested in the parties by legal conveyances; and the rather in this case, because there was a personal and some real estate to satisfy the covenant: and this covenant is to be considered as a debt due from Earl Gilbert on receiving his marriage fortune; and wherever there is a debt, the personal estate shall go in exoneration of the real, which is to support the honour and dignity of the family. And it was further urged, that the heir being expressly bound in the covenant, the estate descended to the heir should be first liable.

But it was answered and resolved by the court (1), that after the statute of 27 Hen. 8. c. 10. for transferring of uses into possession, the courts of common law held, that powers in derogation of estates executed were to be taken strictly; and therefore if not pursued, they would not impeach or destroy an estate already executed by legal conveyances. But in the courts of equity they soon found that the construction was too artificial, and not according to natural equity; and therefore they construed these powers as a reservation of so much of the ancient dominion of the estate, to be under the controul of the tenant for life. Et cuius est dare illius est disponere; and as often as any such dominion is reserved, the tenant for life may contract about it; and when a marriage contract is made, as this was, in contemplation of the execution of such a power, it was a real lien upon the estate; for both the marriage was had, and the marriage portion paid, in contemplation that the charge should be laid on the estate in pursuance of the power. And therefore a court of equity may decree it against the remainder-man, because he claims under the devise of Earl Thomas, whose intention was, that such a charge should be induced on the land; and the present Earl taking the estate under the will, takes it sub onere: so that a court of equity may decree the charge to be made good by the remainder-man, because it is decreeing a charge in pursuance of the intent of the testator. And equity in this case was obliged to make such decree, because the first provision was made both for the honour and advantage of the family; since they could not have married according to their quality, without having a power to make such a jointure; and the present Earl takes the benefit of such power, by having such a dominion over the estate for his own advantage, and therefore he is obliged in conscience to discharge the intention of the testator in behalf of Earl Gilbert. And this is not like a case of tenant in tail, for when such tenant sells, and dies before cutting off the entail, equity cannot relieve; because the statute de donis binds a court of equity, as it does the courts of law: but if the vendee avoids the statute by a recovery, the courts of equity have never prohibited such a fictitious suit to overthrow the title of the heir in tail. Nay farther, if there was a trust in tail, and the cestui que trust should covenant to convey for valuable consideration, there the court of equity would oblige the heir in tail to convey; because this is a creature of equity, and out of the statute. And wherever an agreement is made, and money paid: equity does not consider the form of the conveyance, but takes it as if it were actually executed in the best manner that could be contrived at law; for the substantial part of the agreement is the price, and for that the right is transferred, and what ought to be done is looked upon as done. And therefore if a man article for the purchase of land, and sells all his estate, it would pass the lands in the articles. And this distinction was taken, that if it had been a mere voluntary conveyance, the animus deliberandi should have continued till the conveyance was executed; but here being a contract to settle in pursuance of that power; when an estate is afterwards set out, it shall be presumed to be an execution of that contract, which in conscience he was obliged to perform; especially in a case so circumstanced, since nothing can be objected to the value of the lands: and in this case what the persons contracting tracting had in contemplation was an estate executed in pursuance of the power: and the words or otherwise, &c. are to be looked upon as auxiliary, and to aid the estate to be conveyed; so that if the Earl had settled, or purchased other lands in order to be settled, according to the contract, he might have exonerated the lands subjected to the power by Earl Thomas's will; and since the real estate now in question was mortgaged, it was necessary the covenant should be large enough to bring in all the real and personal estate of Earl Gilbert in aid of the settled estate, in case of deficiency. And therefore the covenant is not to be construed on the one hand so strictly, as to subject the heir in the first place, nor so generally as if the word heir was only matter of form, and merely the word of the conveyancer; but the intention was, that he at his election should have a power out of any other estate to satisfy the covenant, and after his death, in case the land contained in the power should be deficient, that all other his estate should be subject thereto; but since Earl Gilbert did not settle any other estate, as he might have done to discharge the contract; it remains as a real lien on the settled estate in the first place to bind the same, as what the party had in contemplation to bind by the contract. And this is not like the cases where equity decrees that the personal estate shall go in exoneration of the real; for the reason of that is, that the personal estate is the natural fund for the payment of debts and legacies, and therefore as far as that is not specifically devised, it shall exonerate: but the articles of Earl Gilbert must not be considered as a debt, but as a conveyance of so much of the estate, over which he had a power, because his primary intention was to convey: and if it be considered in this light, there can be no application of the personal estate, since there is no debt of which the real estate was to be exonerated (2): and that this was the construction of powers in equity, the following cases were quoted, Dr. Garth v. Lady Beaufry, by Lord Somers. Pasch. 1695 (a). Henry Beaufry settles lands to the use of himself for life, then as to part to his wife for life for her jointure, then to the issue male of his own body, with several remainders over; with a proviso, that if he should have any younger children; it should be lawful for him, by deed or will, executed in the presence of two or more witnesses, to limit and appoint any of the said lands (except those in jointure) to such persons and for such estates as he should think fit, for raising 500 l. a-piece for such younger children, to be paid at such times, and in such manner, as by such deed or will should be declared or covenanted. Henry died, leaving several younger children, but did not make any appointment. Decreed this was a charge upon the land, and bound the issue in tail, and ordered the 500 l. a-piece to be raised for the younger children.

Accordingly the covenant in this case was looked on as an execution of the appointment in pursuance of the power. [604]

Lady Clifford v. Lord Burlington, by Lord Keeper Wright, in the Temple-Hall. Lord Clifford had power to settle a jointure not exceeding 1200 l. per annum. On his marriage with the plaintiff, he covenants to settle on her 1000 l. per annum: he sends to his steward for a particular of lands of that value, and settles according to that particular. After his death it appeared that the lands so settled were but 800 l. per annum: the bill was against the remainder-man, to have these lands made 1000 l. per annum; and decreed against the remainder-man.

Decreed accordingly.

So in the principal case it was decreed, that the plaintiff should hold and enjoy the lands of Woolvey and Woolston, according to the articles, and the deeds of 5 and 6 July 1719. And that the plaintiff, and the defendant the heir, and the Lord Coventry, should have their costs out of the personal estate, because Earl Gilbert ought to have settled it during his life, and the present Earl had only by his answer laid his case before the court, and had not joined in the examination of witnesses, but the plaintiff had examined to prove the allegations of the bill (3).

THE plaintiff recovered judgment in C. B. against two defendants, and a writ of error is brought, alleging it to be ad grave dampnum of one only, without taking any notice of the other: and Reeve moved to quash it, which was done without much argument, upon the authority of a like case, Mich. 6 Geo. in B. R. Brewer v. Turner, ante 233.

Then the defendant in error moved for costs, and upon consideration the court were of opinion he was intitled to them, the act for the amendment of the law (a) not being confined to the case of a variance from the record, (which this is not) but having general words, other defect, to take in this case (1).

Where the judgment is against two, a writ of error ad dampnum of one only will not lie.

Then

[607]

Then the plaintiff in error brought another writ of error coram vobis; and Reeve moved to quash that also, as not lying in this court; because the first writ of error being quashed, the record is not removed. He argued, that if the record had been once well removed, and the writ had abated by matter dehors, as death; in that case a writ of error coram vobis will lie: but this he said was never a good writ of error, and the fault appeared upon the face of the record; so that it is no more, than if an entire stranger, making a true description of the record, had brought the writ of error, which no body can pretend would be a removal of the record.

If a writ of error be quashed for any other fault than variance, error coram vobis lies (1).
Co. Ent. 289.

Serjeant Comyns contra insisted, that the record was well removed, though by a mistake in not joining the other defendant, they could not proceed to reverse the judgment; and therefore to set that matter right, they had brought a writ of error in the name of both. 3 Mod. 134. 1 *Roll. Chief Justice. If the record was ever well removed, this writ of error coram vobis is the only one which could be had. I should think, besides a true description, that the writ should be brought by one who can entitle us to examine the record, and it is admitted, that one defendant alone cannot. I can see no reason to construe this a removal of the record; since if it be a removal, it is a removal to no purpose. Powys Justice accord.

Ld. Raym. 71.

Carth. 368. S. C.

Fortescue Justice. I am very doubtful in this case. A writ of error has in its nature two things, a certiorari to remove the record, and a commission to examine it; and that is the reason why it was never amendable at common law, because no court was ever allowed to amend their own commission. The certiorari part of the writ is good, if the record be rightly described, as this was; and therefore I see no inconvenience in construing it a removal of the record. I remember a case of Walter v. Stokoe in this court, which was an action against five defendants; and one being dead, the other four, without taking any notice of that, bring a writ of error; and it was quashed for the same reason as we quashed the first writ of error in this case. The plaintiff in error there brought a writ of error coram vobis, and the cause was determined upon that, without any objection to the propriety of the writ.

Raymond Justice, I remember that case, and it was so. As to this case I should think, that when a writ of error goes to remove a record for a particular purpose, and by some defect in that writ the purpose for which it issued cannot be obtained, the record should be taken to be in the same condition as if no writ of error had been brought. If one defendant only can remove the record, I do not see why a mere stranger may not.

UPON a special order of sessions the case appeared to be, that thirty years since, Humphry Card built a cottage upon the waste in Wyley belonging to the Earl of Pembroke, and lived on it till his death, about three years since, when it descended to his daughter Elizabeth, then married to John Darby; that they entered and enjoyed it three quarters of a year, and then sold the possession of it to John Wyvel, who has enjoyed it ever since without any molestation from the lord; but no original grant appears. And whether John Darby and his family are settled in Wyley, where they lived three quarters of a year in the cottage in right of his wife, or in Ashbrittle, which was the place of his last settlement before the marriage, was the question: and by the order of two justices, and the order of sessions, it is adjudged to be a settlement in Wyley.

Et per curiam, The order must be confirmed; he lived forty days in the capacity of a person irremovable, and that is a settlement of itself. Here has been an enjoyment for * thirty years, during all which time the lord never claimed any thing. The least that can be made of it is a title by disseisin, and a descent is cast. This man had undoubtedly a title against all the world but the lord, and even against him it may be doubtful, after so long a possession. In ejectment he might either make or defend a title by twenty years possession. Therefore in this case there is no colour to determine against his right, when the lord does not think fit to impeach it; though if he did, it would never be allowed, to determine the title upon an order of removal, but upon an ejectment only.

and some pasture, and especially two meadows called Laine's meadows, the defendant covenanted to pay 5*l.* per acre for every acre of meadow which he should plough up during the lease, and assigns the breach in ploughing up Laine's meadow, &c. The defendant pleads, that for sixty years past Laine's meadow has been arable land, and by times ploughed up and sowed, as the tenants thereof thought proper; and traverses, that at the time of making the lease it was meadow ground, as is supposed in the declaration.

To this the plaintiff demurs; and it was objected by Reeve, that the lease being by indenture the defendant was estopped, to say that what is called meadow in the lease is of any other nature; and that though they had not replied the estoppel, it was the same thing now it came before the court upon a demurrer. And he cited Post. 4 Ann. Kemp v. Gooday, where in debt for rent the defendant was estopped from saying the plaintiff nil habuit in tenementis, it appearing that the lease was by indenture (2). *L. Raym. 1154.

Sed per curiam, The indenture is to be construed according to the intent of the parties, and here the intention was only to covenant against the ploughing up real meadow. Every body knows that in deeds of this nature the parcels are very often taken from former deeds, without regard to every alteration of the nature of the land: and it would be the hardest case in the world, that if this land has been arable at one time, and laid down at another, that the tenant should be concluded by calling it by either of those descriptions. This is not the essence of a deed, as what is struck at by nil habuit in tenementis. It would be carrying of estoppels too far, should we extend them to this case: therefore we are all of opinion, the defendant had a right to try the fact, whether it was ancient meadow or not. The consequence of which is, that the plea is good, and the defendant must have judgment.

There was judgment by default, and on executing a writ of inquiry before Chief Justice Pratt at Guildhall, he refused to let the defendant in to give evidence of fraud on the side of the plaintiffs at the sale, because he said the defendant had admitted the contract to be as the plaintiff had declared, by suffering judgment by default, instead of pleading non assumpsit; and now they were only upon the quantum of damages.

England, and called themselves Generalis Societas Belgica privilegiata ad Indos Occidentales negotiandum, and laid the articles to be made at Amsterdam in Holland, viz. apud London in parochia sanctæ Mariæ de arcubus in warda de Cheap.

Upon the trial it appeared, the money was borrowed at Amsterdam in Holland, and by the covenant was to be paid in Bank there: and that this company had never sued by this name before, or ever had any particular name given them by any act of the States; but upon the dissolution of an old West-India company, it was declared, that there should be still a general West-India company, the members of which should be privileged to trade to the West-Indies, and that all others should be prohibited.

Note; The jury found, that this was the same company that lent the money. [613]

Upon the trial at nisi prius before King C. J. two points were reserved for the consideration of the court: 1. Whether these articles could be sued in England. 2. Whether this was a good name for the company to sue by.

Chefbyre Serjeant for the defendant agreed, that where a covenant is made beyond sea, and is to be performed here, or e converso, an action may be well brought upon such covenant in England: but when a covenant is made beyond, and is to be performed there, it cannot be tried here, because there is no place from whence the verum shall come, nor can our Judges be informed of the law of that country: and this is resolved in Dowdal's case, 6 Co. 47. b. It hath been always held, that if a bond be said to be made at Bourdeaux in regno Francia, it wants trial at our law; and whether it arises upon the evidence, or appears upon the pleading, is not material. Lutw. 950. Trespals done at Fort St. George in partibus transmarinis, is not triable here. Lord Chief Justice Vaughan in his treatise of Wales says, if a bond be made in Wales, Ireland, or Scotland, it cannot be tried in England. The covenant in the present case, appoints the money to be paid at Amsterdam, and therefore cannot be performed in any other place, and the defendant cannot oblige the plaintiffs to accept the money here, but is confined to pay it in Holland.

As to the second point, whether this be a good name for the company to sue by, I apprehend it is not a sufficient name: for this corporation never having any particular name given them, are not enabled to sue even in Holland, much less in England. Corporations made by act of Parliament are to be taken notice of;

but when private corporations sue, they must produce their charter or grant by which they are constituted, and shew to the court that they have a name and a capacity to sue. And he said that the name by which the plaintiffs were called in the declaration, was different from the common name that they are known by.

Pengelly Serjeant contra. This is an action brought for the loan of money, which is a thing clearly transitory and personal; and in such a case the defendant is a debtor, wherever he goes, and may be sued wherever he can be found. I admit that where it appears from the party's own shewing, that the bond was made at B. in Regno Francie, that the court here is ousted of jurisdiction; but in this case the covenant is said to be apud Amsterdam in London in parochia, &c. and it being not traversable, the court hath a sufficient jurisdiction. It is the common practice to bring actions here upon bills drawn in Holland payable in France and assigned to Dutch merchants. An action was brought upon a bond which appeared to be dated at St. David's in the East-Indies; and it was resolved, that if it had been laid in the declaration to have been made at St. David's in the East-Indies, viz. in London in parochia, &c. it had been sufficient, and suable here. In Trin. 7 Ann. in B. R. an action of trover was brought for timber cut in Ireland; and it was objected, it could not be tried here, because title of land would come in question: But per Holt C. J. et totam curiam, This action being merely transitory, may be sued any where. This was the case of Brown v. Hedges, Trin. 1708. Vide Styles 331. Rogers v. Done. And to this point a case was cited by Dormer J. where William Penn was sued here for rent, upon a lease of lands in Pennsylvania; and it was adjudged the action well lay (1).

To the second point Pengelly said, Though the company had no certain name given them by any act of the States, yet they may collect a name by reputation from their business; and being always known by that name, may be well sued by it. He cited the case of Queen's College Oxford, 11 Co. 19, 20, 21. That college had no name given them at their foundation, but having received their foundation, and several other benefactions from the Queen, they collected by reputation the name of Queen's College, by which name they sue and are sued. Hob. 122. 124. And this present case is the stronger, because there is not any other company that pretends to use this name that the plaintiffs

Due by, and they are found by the verdict to be the same persons who lent the money. If a particular name be given to a corporation, and in suing, when their name is turned into Latin, though there be some circumlocution in naming them; yet if it appear to be the same corporation, it is sufficient. So in an information for words, or for a libel, if the words or libel be set forth in Latin, for the very words need not be set forth, the jury may find the defendant guilty of those words.

Per totam curiam, The action is well brought: and they were all of opinion for the company in both points. And the judgment was affirmed in B. R. and in Parliament.

It was agreed on all hands that the plea was bad, so that the reason on which the court below founded their judgment was not right; but whether upon the whole record the judgment was not warranted was a question.

Reeve objected to the declaration, that the plaintiff had shewed no cause of action, for that the covenant to pay was only on acceptance, and here was only a tender (and that insufficiently alleged) but no acceptance. The defendant covenants to accept on or before the shutting the books, and then (that is) upon such acceptance to pay.

Fazakerley contra insisted, they were mutual covenants; or if not, yet the plea of a feoffment in satisfaction admits every thing necessary necessary to entitle the plaintiff to be satisfied. Cro. Car. 384.

Chief Justice. I think the judgment of C. B. ought to be reversed. The construction the defendant puts upon this covenant is a very strange one, for it is no less than to discharge himself of one covenant by the breach of the other: it is true, says he, I did not accept the stock as I ought to have done, and therefore I am discharged from the payment of the money. This is so harsh, that if any fairer construction can be made of it, I am sure it ought. Now I think the natural import of it to be, that then should not relate to the actual acceptance, but only to the time at which he covenants to accept. If so, then as these are mutual covenants, the breach is well alleged in non-payment of the money, and if the plaintiff has failed on his part, it will be no excuse here, because the defendant has his action to right himself. Powys J. accord.

Eyre Justice. This not being an action for the whole money, but only for the deficiency, I take it the mutual remedy is gone. And if so, then a tender and refusal are necessary to be averred, to entitle the plaintiff to sell out the stock. This is not a sufficient tender, either as to time or place; as to the time, if nothing be shewn to the contrary, the last part of the day is what the law appoints, and the plaintiff is deficient in that; and as to the place, it should have been averred, that the South-sea-house is the proper place, for we cannot take notice of it. Lancashire v. Killingworth, (Salk. 623.) entered Trin. 12 W. 3. rot. 369. Shales v. Signorel, intr. Pasch. 10 W. 3. rot. 115. and adjudged Pasch. 11 W. 3. Lutw. 516.

Fortescue Justice. If it be necessary to aver a tender, this is certainly naught; but I am not clear that there is any occasion for it. I think the payment is so far from being to be subsequent to, or upon the acceptance, that it is the very first act to be done according to this contract, which is, that the plaintiff shall upon paying transfer, and the ad tunc refers to that time. Per cur' ulterius concil'.

A covenant to pay upon transferring is mutual.

And Mich. 11 Geo. it was argued a second time by Serjeant Pengelly for the plaintiff, and Serjeant Comyns for the defendant; and the court kept them to the point of the mutual covenants, declaring that the tender and the pleading over were both to be laid out of the case.

Serjeant Pengelly insisted, that the first act was to be done by the defendant, the covenant on the plaintiff's part being only upon payment or tender to transfer, and then comes the clause for the defendant to accept and pay, and the proviso to sell out is on any default of the defendant.
 upon

Serjeant Comyns contra insisted, that in the nature of the thing there must be something done on the part of the plaintiff, at least he ought to be there, and ready to transfer; and wherever the defendant's act depends upon an act to be done by the plaintiff, it is not enough to say they are mutual covenants.

Adjournatur. And in a few days the Chief Justice delivered the resolution of the court. The objection is, that the plaintiff should have done the first act by transferring, or tendering at least, else how could the defendant adtunc accipere et solvere proinde. This depends upon the wording of the indenture and the intent of the parties. It could never be the intention to make the payment depend upon the defendant's own acceptance. Adtunc is the time mentioned for the transfer, not the act of transferring, and it would be unreasonable to oblige the plaintiff to part with the stock first, since every body knows that was not the nature of these agreements. The money is not to be paid as the consideration of a transfer, but of the covenant to transfer; and the true consideration in this case is the remedy, which the defendant has upon the covenant to transfer. We are all of opinion that these are mutual covenants, and therefore though there is no tender sufficiently alleged, yet the declaration is well enough (1). And the judgment below being for the defendant, when it should have been for the plaintiff, it is erroneous, and ought to be reversed. We accordingly reverse it, and give judgment for the plaintiff.

N. B. This judgment of reversal was afterwards reversed in Parliament, and the judgment of C. B. set up again.

Afterwards the court was moved for their direction to the Master in taxing the costs, the plaintiff insisting on full costs to this time, the statute of Gloucester, 2 Inst. 288. extending to all costs consequent upon the suit.

Sed per curiam: At common law there were no costs upon any writ of error, and 3 H. 7. c. 10. and 8 W. 3. c. 11. extend only to the case of affirmance of a judgment, and that very reasonably; for why should any man in the case of a reversal pay costs for the error of the court below? We are in this case to give such judgment as the court below should have given, that is judgment for the plaintiff, with his costs to that time. They could have n

THE plaintiff declared, that he was a justice of peace, and that upon a colloquium of him and the execution of his office, the defendant said, "You are a rascal, a villain, and a liar."

After verdict for the plaintiff it was moved in arrest of judgment, that these words are not actionable.

Chesbyre Serjeant pro quer. There is a great difference between magistrates and common tradesmen: words of the latter must affect them in their particular way of dealing, but any thing that tends to impeach the credit of the former is actionable. A justice of peace is sworn to do his duty. What can be worse than to call a man a villain? An action lay for claiming a man as a villain, Keilw. 34. And the pillory we call a villainous judgment. The word liar does not signify a single erring from the truth, but denotes a habit of lying. It is actionable to say of a tradesman, "He keeps false books."

post. 1157. acc.

Rever. It must be taken now that the words were spoken in relation to his office, which will much aggravate the matter. I agree, these words spoken of a common person would not be actionable; but the distinction between magistrates and others has been often allowed. Mo. 243. *Cro. Reeve. In many of those cases there was no colloquium of the office, and the words were capable of a good as well as a bad sense, which these are not.

Curia advisare vult. And this term the Chief Justice delivered the opinion of the court, That though rascal and villain were uncertain, yet being joined with liar, and spoken of a justice of peace, they did import a charge of acting corruptly and partially, and therefore there ought to be judgment for the plaintiff.

Where the owner of the fee with a term to attend the inheritance, makes an incomplete devise to carry the inheritance, it shall not be set up in equity as a devise of the term. S. C. 2 Will. 236. 2 Eq. Ca. Abr. 763. pl. 10. and more full 9 Mod. 124. Gilb. Eq. Rep. 163.

SIR Jeffery Gilbert, one of the Commissioners of the Great Seal, delivered the resolution of the court.

The lands in question were mortgaged to Edward Whitechurch for a term of five hundred years, and upon advancement of a further sum of money, another term of two thousand years, from the expiration of the first term, was made to trustees, in trust for the said Edward Whitechurch; after this Edward Whitechurch bought in the inheritance of the mortgagor.

Edward

Edward Whitechurch being so possessed of both the said terms, and of the inheritance of the said lands, he wrote his will with his own hand, and devised these lands to William Whitechurch his younger brother for life, remainder to Edward Whitechurch his nephew in tail, with divers remainders over. But this will was never signed or executed in the presence of three witnesses, as is requisite by the statute 29 Car. 2. c. 3.

It is plain by this will the testator intended to pass an estate-tail to Edward Whitechurch, which he had power to do by the statute 32 Hen. 8. c. 1. But by the 29 Car. 2. c. 3. "That all devises of any lands and tenements deviseable, &c. shall be in writing, and signed by the party so devising the same, or by some other person in his presence, and by his express direction, and shall be attested and subscribed in the presence of the said devisor, by three or four credible witnesses; or else they shall be utterly void and of none effect." So that where this solemnity is wanting, the statute makes such devise of lands utterly void. But in this case the devisor had a term of years in him. Now though a term for years be within the words of the statute, yet the statute doth not extend to it, for the term would have gone to the executors, had it been undevised, and it never was the intent of the statute to take any thing out of the hands of the executors: but where the will comes to derogate from the interest of the heir, for whose security, among other things, the statute was made, there the will ought to have the solemnity of the statute.

It will be said, that if this will cannot pass the inheritance, yet the testator intended something should pass by this devise; therefore the term shall pass, for which the solemnity of the statute is not requisite.

But when the testator had the inheritance in him, and designed to pass it as such by this devise; nothing else shall pass but what he intended. Besides, the will was not compleat, but under deliberation; and whilst it was such, you cannot construe that will so as to pass any other interest in the mean time, till such time as he had perfected it; and therefore this being a will in fieri, a court of equity will not carry it further than the testator himself has done.

And in this case there is to be no argument made from the dominion and intent of the testator, for the intent of the statute was to restrain the exercise of his dominion: and this statute has always had a large construction, in order to remedy those mischiefs, which it was designed to prevent, and therefore it extends to all estates of freehold. For ever since the 32 H. 8. by which lands are made devisable, great inconveniencies were found in the devising of estates, for want of a solemnity. And in the making of this statute, which was contrived by the Lord Chief Justice Hale, and the most learned men of that time, they went upon the foot of the old Roman law, by which at first seven witnesses were necessary to a devise of lands, but afterwards they were reduced to three, the number which this statute requires: and since this statute was made with so much care and caution, to prevent those inconveniencies, which attended the common way of devising estates before, it ought to be strictly pursued, and no relief be given in a court of equity where any part of this solemnity is wanting. Therefore in this case nothing shall pass by the devise, but the inheritance shall go to the heir, and the terms must attend it. The decree of the Master of the Rolls was confirmed (1).

Strange pro quer' in errore objected, that the issue upon payment before the day was immaterial; and cited the case of Merril v. Jocelyn in B. R. Trin. 13 Ann. where on the like issue a verdict was found for the plaintiff, and the judgment reversed.

But the court took a difference between the two cases. The present case being pleaded as a payment with interest, it must be taken as a plea upon the act for amendment of the law, and then the day is not material, the only point upon that statute being whether it was paid before bringing the action.

To this it was answered by Mr. Strange, that the act for amendment of the law was not applicable to this case, the act only giving a plea of payment after the day, when the defendant had broke the condition. And as to the interest, he said it ought to be so pleaded even in the case of payment before the day, because the bond carries interest from the date.

THE mayor was to be chosen out of the aldermen, who are annuatim eligend': the fact on a trial at bar was, that the aldermen present at his election had been in several years, and had none of them been re-elected within a year. On a bill of exceptions, the court was of opinion, that the election of the mayor was void for want of an annual election of the aldermen. But upon error in the Exchequer Chamber, and two solemn arguments, the judgment was reversed: and it was held, that the words annuatim eligend' were only directory, and that an annual election of them was not necessary to make an election in their presence good: and King C. J. de C. B. who delivered the opinion of the court, compared it to the case of a constable and other annual officers, who are good officers after the year is out, until another is elected and sworn. Mandamus lies not to swear one who has had judgment on an information against him for an usurpation.

Vide Cowp. 509.

MANDAMUS to swear in one Pender, mayor of Penryn: return, that an information in the nature of a quo warranto, was exhibited against him, to shew by what authority he exercised the office of mayor, whereon two issues were joined, one whether he was duly elected, and the other whether he was duly sworn: the first issue was found for the defendant, and the second for the King, whereupon judgment of ouster was given against him; and because he was never since elected mayor, he cannot now swear him in according to the command of the writ.

Hussey pro quer. The question is, whether after this judgment of ouster he be intitled to a mandamus, to swear him in, in consequence of his precedent election. And I shall insist, that though he was justly punishable for acting before he was sworn; yet his election was not so totally done away, but that it still subsisted.

[626] The nature of this corporation appears upon the writ and return to be, that no particular time is appointed for the swearing, and that he is to hold over; so it is no objection that the year is out. It must be agreed he had once a right to be sworn, this writ gives him no right; he is still liable to be prosecuted, if the first election be gone. It is therefore proper to be determined upon a new information after he is sworn, rather than to refuse to put him in a capacity to assert his right. The return admits the truth of our suggestion in the writ, that Pender was duly elected, and has not been sworn: will it not be hard to say, that because he once acted before he was sworn, therefore for the future he shall never act at all? He confesses he did wrong to act before swearing, and submits to be punished as an usurper for so doing; but now says he I am convinced of my error, and am desirous of conforming myself to the rules of law for the future. He had a right to the office before he was sworn, though he had not a right to act; he does not forfeit the office by acting, but subjects himself to punishment.

Besides it is considerable, whether his acting can forfeit the interest which the corporation have in this election, for it appears upon the return, that if this election be gone, the corporation (as the law now stands) is gone also; this being an election upon a death, so as there is no predecessor to hold over.

Chapple Serjeant contra. We confess the election, and avoid it: we say you were once intitled to the office, but you were guilty of an usurpation, and were excluded upon that account; the words of the judgment are, that in the said office nullo modo se intromittat, sed penitus adjudicetur et excludatur. Can any words be stronger to destroy the first election than these? Even in a writ of quo warranto they are not. Rast. 540. Co. Ent. 527. 537. 540. 559. As he does not pretend to any new right, we say he can have no mandamus to be sworn into this office.

Curia advisare vult. And this term, Mr. Justice Reynolds being come into court since the argument of this cause, the counsel were directed to repeat what they had before offered; and then the court delivered their opinions.

C. J. The party certainly comes in time for this mandamus, though the year is out, it appearing that he is intitled to hold over, and that no other person hath been since elected into this office. I think the judgment on the information was right, for he then appeared to us as an usurper, and we punished him as such; and I believe no precedent can be shewn where in these informations the judgment was ever entered in any other manner. If the judgment is right, we must give the words of it their full latitude: they import an absolute exclusion from the office, and are we to intend a quousque in any case? or are not the words of this judgment as strong as the case of a corporate amotion? It seems to me that the election is done away, and that unless there had been a new election since the judgment, the party is not intitled to this mandamus. Powys J. accord'.

Fortescue J. A quo warranto is the King's writ of right, and as against the crown want of swearing is as much as want of an election: the jury therefore have found in effect, that he had no title to this office, and then of course he is to be excluded from it by our judgment. I never heard of any other judgment, nor can any thing be more reasonable, than to exclude him who appears to have no title. Where the franchise claimed is such as may subsist in the crown, the judgment is to seize it into the King's hands, but where (as in this case) it cannot be exercised by the crown, the judgment is only to exclude the party. This judgment is as strong as a forfeiture or amotion. We have expressly adjudged, that he shall never take upon him this office, and therefore it would be absurd for us to command him to be sworn in consequence of a right prior to our judgment. If a man who has one right, claims that in a manner different from his grant, he loses even the right granted; as in 2 H. 7. 11. where one had a grant of a fair for one day, and he claimed it as a grant for two; the judgment is that he shall lose his fair, and that grant could never be set up again.

Reynolds J. I should have had some difficulty in giving this judgment, had I been in court when it was pronounced, for I know of no certain form of words in judgments, but every judgment may and ought to vary according to the circumstances of the case: and it is no new thing to meet with judgments that are only quousque, as I think this might have been (1). But whatever my opinion might be in that case, yet in the present case I must concur with my brothers, because I am bound to take and consider this as a judgment; and whether he should have been barred or not is not material, since in fact he is barred, and will be so, till that judgment is reversed by writ of error. Per curiam, The return must be allowed.

On error in Parliament adjudged that error does not lie, and the writ quashed (2).

Strange contra. In a common scire facias by an executor to revive a judgment recovered by the testator, it may perhaps be necessary to shew him to be dead, because that is the first act or process after his death; but in this scire facias, which comes after a suit by the executrix, and wherein she has recovered a judgment, which must be taken to be good, there is not the same necessity: it may as well be expected to be repeated in every process, which was never done. When the executrix first comes into court, she must shew herself to be compleatly so; but when she has once done it (as it must here be taken she has, else she could not have had judgment as executrix) it will be to no purpose to repeat the same thing over again. In every declaration it is necessary to say the defendant is in custod' mar'; to give this court a jurisdiction, but it is never taken notice of in the subsequent proceedings. In the first suit the defendants might have pleaded ne unques executrix, but not having done it at first, they have lost the opportunity: if we had averred in this scire facias that the testator was dead, the defendants could not have been admitted to traverse that suggestion, after a judgment against them at the suit of the plaintiff as executrix. In the case of the first process after the death of the testator, they might traverse that matter, and therefore it may be necessary to be shewn; but in this case they are too late to object any thing of that nature, and I submit this as a good answer upon that distinction.

The court at first doubted upon the point of its being shewn for cause of demurrer, but said afterwards there was nothing in the objection, and gave judgment for the plaintiff.

On error in parliament the judgment was affirmed.

There was another exception that the sheriff had returned, that the wife as well as the husband had converted to her own use; but this was over-ruled on the authority of Bellew v. Scott, ante 440 (1).

The court set aside the execution, saying, that though not being served with the allowance it was no contempt, yet in point of law it was a superfedeas from the moment of pronouncing judgment.

In debating this case, 2 Vent. 48. was cited, which was trespass quare clausum fregit, and putting stakes upon his ground, where it was held, that the plaintiff should not have full costs, but if any thing had been taken away, of how little value soever, it had been otherwise. The court did not seem satisfied with the case in 2 Vent. 215. which was trespass quare clausum fregit, and digging up and carrying away his trees; wherein it appeared upon the evidence, that the defendant had digged up several roots of the plaintiff's trees, and removed them to a place upon the same ground about two yards distance

Jolland*, Hil. 8 W. 3. in *B. Reeve pro defendente insisted, that this exception amounted to a licence of the party, and that a distinction has always been taken between a licence in law, as to go into a tavern, and the licence of the party, and that this being of the latter sort, an action of trespass will not lie; but if the spout be a prejudice, the plaintiff must right himself by an action upon the case. 11 Co. The six Carpenters case. This is an action of trespass brought for a nuisance upon our own possession.

Et per Chief Justice, Though he had a right to enter into the yard, yet it is considerable, whether if he abuses that right to the detriment of another, he is not in the same case with every other trespasser. Et per Fortescue Justice, Trespass is a possessory action, and how does this invade the plaintiff's possession? The difference between trespass and case is, that in trespass the plaintiff complains of an immediate wrong, and in case, of a wrong that is the consequence of another act. Et per Raymond Justice, That distinction is perfectly right. I remember a case in B. R. Courtney v. Collett, which was for the defendant's diverting his own water-course in his own land, per quod the plaintiff's land was overflowed; after a verdict pro quer, it was often debated, whether this was an action of trespass, or upon the case, and at last judgment was for the plaintiff, who had brought trespass only.

After a second argument to the effect of the former, the court delivered their opinions this term. Chief Justice: We must keep up the boundaries of actions, otherwise we shall introduce the utmost confusion: if the act in the first instance be unlawful, trespass will lie; but if the act is prima facie lawful (as it was in this case) and the prejudice to another is not immediate, but consequential, it must be an action upon the case (2); and this is the distinction. The case I mentioned the last time of Courtney v. Collett was a plain trespass, and the account I then gave of it from my memory was mistaken : it was Hil. 9 W. 3. in B. R. trespass for taking fishes, necnon pro eo quod he broke down the bank of the river, per quod the water issued and other fishes went away : after verdict for the plaintiff, it was moved in arrest of judgment, that the latter part was case, and not joinable with trespass ; but the court held that was a trespass, and what came under the per quod was only matter of aggravation. There was another case in B. R. Hil. 8 Ann. Leveridge v. Hoskins (a). That was case for digging trenches, whereby the water was drawn away from the plaintiff's river ; it was moved in arrest of judgment, that this was trespass ; but the court said, that it not being laid to be a digging upon the plaintiff's ground, the action upon the case was most proper : and I take that and this to be the same case, the defendant having a right to enter the yard, and do the first act, which is here complained of, I think this should have been an action upon the case, and that trespass will not lie.

Powys accord. Et per Fortescue Justice, Trespass will not lie for procuring another to beat me ; if a man throws a log into the highway, and in that act it hits me ; I may maintain trespass, because it is an immediate wrong ; but if as it lies there I tumble over it, and receive an injury, I must bring an action upon the case ; because it is only prejudicial in consequence, for which originally I could have no action at all. Et per Reynolds Justice, The distinction is certainly right ; this is only injurious in its consequence, for it is not pretended that the bare fixing a spout was a cause of action, without the falling of any water ; the right of action did not accrue till the water actually descended, and therefore this should have been an action upon the case Per curiam, Judgment for the defendant.

Where the act is immediately injurious trespass will lie, where it is only so in its consequence it must be case (3).

ERROR of a judgment in the grand sessions of Chester, whereby a judgment given in the mayor's court of Chester was reversed for an error in fact: the error assigned and found on record was, that the action was properly commenced and tried before a mayor who was no party; but that after the verdict, and before the judgment, one of the company of mercers was chosen mayor, and gave judgment for the plaintiffs (1). The court of grand sessions reversed the judgment, and upon error in *B. Et per curiam, This was very properly assigned as error in fact, and that was the first opportunity the defendant had to take advantage of this matter: he had no day in court, either to admit or deny the jurisdiction: he could only move in arrest of judgment, had it been a fact appearing upon the record, as it was not. My Lord Hobart carries it so far as to say, that an act of Parliament to make a man judge in his own cause would be void: if the defendant could have been admitted to suggest this matter below, must it not have been tried, and been tried before this man? The judgment of the reversal in the grand sessions must be affirmed.

I attended on behalf of the company, to desire to be excused, alledging that these were not of the nature of publick books, which every body has a right to have access to, and of which copies are evidence; whereas these related only to the private transactions of the company: and it might be of mischievous consequence, if in every action wherein the company is not concerned, they should be obliged to lay open the secrets of their trade, and disclose to all the world a whole series of letters and

The Chief Justice said he would not oblige the company to produce them, and so left us to our liberty; whereupon we refused to produce them, and they were carried back again to the India-House (3). The action was against the defendant as deputy governor; and on Not guilty he gave in evidence a release given by the plaintiff to the East-India company in pursuance of an award, whereby reciting he had sustained several injuries by the company's agents, particularly the deputy governor, therefore they award him 1000*l.* and order him to give a general release, The defendant being no party to that release, could not plead it, but the Chief Justice allowed him to give it in evidence in mitigation of damages; and these not being private papers, I consented on behalf of the company that they should be produced.

The plaintiff in reply would have called the arbitrators, to prove that they refused to take into consideration the occasion of this action, which was for the private personal wrong; but the award and release having general words sufficient to take in all, the Chief Justice would not suffer any evidence to be given to contradict the award (4); so the jury found for the plaintiff (as they could not help doing, the defendant having pleaded Non cul) and gave him a shilling damages.

And a difference was taken between this case, and the case of an action against the indorser, who is liable though the bill be not signed by the person who is supposed to draw it; because an indorser is in the nature of a new drawer, whereas an acceptor is not liable, unless the bill was fairly signed by the drawer. But as to this the Chief Justice was of opinion, that the proof of an acceptance was a sufficient acknowledgment on the part of the acceptor, who must be supposed to know the hand of his own correspondent: but he said it would not be conclusive evidence, and therefore if the defendant could shew the contrary, the reading the bill on behalf of the plaintiff should not preclude him (1).

The defendant upon this paid the 150*l.* bill; but in this action insisted, that it did not amount to an acceptance, being only conditional, to pay it in case the owners of the Queen Anne did not; and his promise to procure it from them was in favour of the plaintiff. But the Chief Justice was of opinion, that it was rather in favour of himself, and he having undertaken to write to them, it was not incumbent on the plaintiff to shew any application to them; and as to the acceptance, it was in his opinion a very strong one; the bill was presented to the defendant; says he, This is a good bill, and I will pay it: you need not protest it, for it shall be paid; I only desire, that for my convenience you would stay till I can write to the owners in Ireland, who I do not expect will do any thing in it: this will be of service to me; and as to you, you shall be secured, for I promise you shall have the money in all events.

Bravo*, where on an issue out of Chancery to try whether a bankrupt had forfeited the allowance out of his estate by gaming contrary to the act, it was refused to let any of the creditors be sworn to prove a gaming, because that was swearing to increase their own dividend.

L. Raym. 1411.

The sheriff not being able to excuse the return; it was attempted to mitigate the damages, by shewing that the defendant was still visible, and it being only mesne process, the debt was not lost, and the measure of damages should be only the expence of the process. The Chief Justice in his direction inclined to give the plaintiff the whole debt of 43 l. (it being an action of debt on a judgment) because there was but a possibility of the plaintiff's recovering against the original defendant. He said it would depend on circumstances, and if the defendant had been a man of estate, and so no danger; he should think the debt would be too much to give: but that not being this case, the jury found the whole debt in damages, with the opinion of the Chief Justice. And afterwards the defendant moved for a new trial; and upon the Chief Justice's stating the case, as it appeared upon the evidence, the whole court were of opinion, the Chief Justice had done right in refusing the bailiff to be a witness; and that as to the point of damages the verdict was right, and there ought to be no new trial.

respective estates, during the joint lives of such tenant and such admitting lord or lady. That in consideration of such admittances from the lord, the tenants have, time out of mind, respectively paid to such admitting lord a fine or gressum, which hath been generally assessed by the lord's steward at a court held for that purpose, called the court of dimissions. And that these fines or gressums are called the general fines, and are due to the next succeeding lord upon the death of the last admitting lord; by whose death there is a general determination of the estates of the tenants. That there are likewise other fines, which by the custom are due to the lord from these tenants; and those are, where the tenant dies, then his heir, who has a right to be admitted to his father's estate, is obliged to pay the lord a fine for such admittance. And where this tenant aliens his estate, the lord upon the admission of the alienee, has a right to a fine; and these fines which thus happen upon the death or alienation of the tenant are called dropping fines.

The fines the Duke demanded by this bill, were the general fines, which he insisted were due to him as next admitting lord, upon the death of his lady, the Dutchess of Somerset. And the bill set forth, that the Dutchess being the lady of these manors, and having married the Duke, a court of dimissions was held in the names of the said Duke and Dutchess, in order to grant the tenants new estates, their former having been determined by the death of Earl Jocelyn: and at such court, admittances were granted to the several tenants, habendum at the will of the lord, according to the custom of the said manors, during the joint lives of the said Dutchess and the said tenant. That the defendants (being tenants of the said manors) held their estates under such admittances, till the death of the said Dutchess; and that she being dead, the Duke became lord of the said manors, and the tenants' estates being determined by the death of the Dutchess, their admittances being only for their joint lives, the Duke, as next admitting lord, had a right to a general fine. And the bill set forth, that the Duke in pursuance of this right had called proper courts, and had regularly assessed the defendant's fines; and that several of the tenants of these manors had submitted to pay their said fines; but that the defendants, with several others, had refused, under a pretence that a general fine was not due to the Duke, but was to be paid to the heir after his death. The bill therefore prayed that the Duke's title to these general fines might be established.

Answer:

The defendants in their answer admitted the several allegations in the bill, and that the Duke was intitled to be tenant by the curtesy. They insisted that the fines which they were obliged to pay, were known and ascertained by custom, and that the lord was bound by such custom, and could not without their being parties, create any estate to a stranger, which would subject them to any extraordinary fines. They insisted that by the custom of these manors a lord who was tenant by the curtesy, or lady tenant in dower, had no right to a general fine; and that they were only obliged to pay a general fine to the lord who comes in by descent, or to him that comes in, in loco hæredis. They insisted that although the Duke was become tenant for life of these manors by the Dutchess's death, yet no fine was due to him; for if he had been tenant by the curtesy, no fine would have been due, and his claiming by settlement cannot better his case; for then it would be in the power of the lords of such manors, to multiply the tenants' fines, and greatly burthen their estates, if every such lord who hath an intervening estate by settlement should be intitled to a general fine.

Upon the 11th of June 1725, this cause came to be heard before the Lord Chancellor King.

Serjeant Pengelly, and Yorke Attorney General, argued for the Duke: that the Duke by this settlement was a purchaser, and stood in loco hæredis. That the tenants having accepted admittances to hold during the life of the tenant and the life of the Dutchess, and the Dutchess being dead, their estates were necessarily determined: and the fines being by custom due to the next admitting lord, and the Duke of Somerset being such lord, the fines were undoubtedly due to him, and there was no pretence that the payment of them should be postponed: nor is this any wrong or hardship upon the tenants, for this was a just and honest settlement, made without the least appearance of fraud, and upon the most valuable consideration in the law: nor is it any inconvenience to the tenants, for their estates will still depend upon the life of the lord, who admits them; and the life of a tenant for life, is as good as the life of a tenant in fee. It is in proof from several of our depositions, that tenants in dower, and tenants by the curtesy, have admitted in such cases, and have received general fines; and these instances determine the present question, and prove that the Duke hath an unquestionable right to the fines which he demands.

Wearg, Solicitor General, for the defendants argued, that the payment of these fines depends intirely upon the customs of these manors, and though the tenants' estates should be determined by the death of the Dutchess, yet it does not necessarily follow from thence, that the Duke is intitled to a general fine, unless there be a custom to support his claim. These fines were originally originally payable only to the heir, or a purchaser, and were paid in nature of a relief. We have many instances in our depositions, where tenants in dower and tenants by the curtesy have demanded these fines, and the tenants have refused to pay them; and it is the received notion throughout all the counties where these sort of customary estates prevail, that only the heir who comes in by descent, and he who comes in in loco heredis, are intitled to a general fine.

This settlement which the Duke claims by, does not alter the nature of his estate; it is only a life estate, and what the law would have given him; it does not enlarge his estate, but only exempts him from being punished for waste. The tenants are strangers to this settlement, and are not at all concluded by it, and it must be considered as a fraud upon them, if it was intended to create such an estate in the Duke, as would necessarily multiply their fines and encrease the burthen upon their estates.

[657] We admit that dropping fines have been paid to tenants in dower and tenants by the curtesy; but no argument can be drawn from thence, that they are intitled to a general fine: and if the rule, that every admitting lord is intitled to a general fine, should prevail; then tenants for years of those manors, who are domini pro tempore, would be intitled; and the consequence of that would be, that short leases of these manors might be made, and the tenants be thereby oppressed by frequent and extravagant fines.

But what the defendants chiefly insist upon is, that there is no custom in any of these manors, or in any other manor of the same tenure, which can support the Duke's demand of a general fine; yet as the depositions contain contrariety of evidence upon this point, the fairest way of determining this question seems to be, by directing an issue, in which this custom and the Duke's right may be tried.

King Lord Chancellor. The first question arises upon the determination of the tenants' estates; and they were undoubtedly determined upon the death of the Dutchess of Somerset; for the grants or admittances being to each tenant to hold for his life and the life of the Dutchess, the estate of each tenant is necessarily determined by her death.

The next and principal question is, whether a fine is due to the Duke from his tenants upon the death of his Dutchess. And in the resolving this question it is first to be considered upon what account these general fines become due: now it appears from from the nature of these admittances, that upon the death of the last admitting lord, all the estates of the tenants, which are held under his admittances, are determined; and their estates being so determined, it is necessary for the tenants, before they can have any new estate, to have a regrant from the succeeding and next admitting lord, which regrant they have a right to, and that right gives their estates the denomination of tenantright-estates: from hence it appears, that the fines which are paid, are paid upon account of the admission to the new estate; and therefore that lord who hath a right to admit, hath a right to the fines; the lord grants the tenant a new estate, and in consideration of that, a fine becomes due to him from the tenant. The only question then seems to be, whether the Duke hath a right to admit. And the tenants seem to agree that he has; for they allow that if a particular tenant dies, the Duke upon the admission of his heir, is intitled to a dropping fine: now how can the Duke be intitled to this dropping fine, if he be not the admitting lord? And if he hath a power to admit, and hath a right to a fine upon the determination of a particular estate by the death of a particular tenant, why hath he not an equal power to admit, and an equal right to his fines, upon the determination of the tenants' estates in general by the death of the last admitting lord? It is very extraordinary to allow it in the one case, and not in the other: if a particular tenant dies, his estate is determined, and his heir must pay a fine to the Duke; yet if the last admitting lord dies, all the estates of the tenants are determined, and yet the Duke hath no right to a fine.

It hath been objected, that this is multiplying the fines of the tenants, and subjecting them to frequent burthens of this kind. But where is the inconveniency to the tenants? They are still to hold during their own lives and the life of the lord who admits them; and that is the very tenure of their estates: nay if a lessee for years, or any other dominus pro tempore should admit them, their estates would be good, according to these admittances, during their own lives and the life of such lord; and the determination of the lord's estate would have no influence upon theirs. Indeed if there should appear to be any fraud or contrivance in a settlement of this kind, by putting in a number of lives successively, on purpose to multiply the fines of the tenants; this court would undoubtedly interpose in such case, and relieve them; but in the present case nothing of that kind can be pretended.

These are my present thoughts upon this question: but as the counsel for the defendants have insisted upon having an issue tried, I readily agree to it.

Z z 3

And

And this being agreed to by the counsel for the Duke, an issue was directed to be tried at the bar of the court of King's Bench by a jury of Middlesex; which issue was this, viz. whether a general fine was due to the Duke of Somerset from the tenants of the manors of Cockermouth, &c. as next admitting lord, upon the death of the Dutchess of Somerset.

And in the beginning of this term, the issue was accordingly tried before Raymond Chief Justice, Mr. Justice Fortescue, and Mr. Justice Reynolds, (Mr. Justice Powys being absent).

Upon the trial three points came in question in relation to evidence.

Lords of customary manors disallowed as witnesses.

1. Whether lords of other customary manors should be allowed as witnesses. And it was resolved, that they should not, because the present question concerned the right of lords of such manors, who came in by settlement to their fines; and therefore they had a plain interest in the event of the cause.

It was allowed as evidence against the defendants, that other tenants had submitted, and paid, in court as to the lease, who may not be examined to prove the rent days of any such ten. by stating it was in similar circumstances.

2. The second question arose upon this; the plaintiff's counsel offered to give in evidence, that several other tenants who hold of the manors in question, under the same tenure as the present defendants, had submitted and paid their fines to the Duke: and this evidence was opposed by the counsel of the defendants, who insisted, that what was done by other tenants could not be given in evidence against them, for they were strangers to the defendants, and had submitted since the suit was commenced. It was said, that even if a verdict had been recovered against the other tenants, it could not be given in evidence against the present defendants, much less a matter in pais, which was so recent, that it could be of no manner of weight.

Carthew 181.

To this it was answered, that it being a custom which was now trying, it was very proper to give in evidence the acts and usages of the tenants of the same manors. And the case of the city of London v. Clarke in this court before Holt Chief Justice was cited, where (it was said) verdicts against former defendants who were in the like circumstances as the then defendants, were permitted to be given in evidence. So in the case of toll, where actions are brought for not paying it, the plaintiff is always allowed to give in evidence payment by others; unless it be made appear, that such payment was by collusion. So in the case of modus's this kind of evidence is always allowed,

The court held, that they never knew this kind of evidence denied; and the weight of it, and the recency of the fact, were circumstances circumstances entirely proper for the jury: so the plaintiff was allowed to give the evidence he offered.

3. The third point was the most material, and that arose upon the plaintiff's offering to give in evidence several instances of fines being paid in like cases, to lords of other manors.

Customs of other manors given in evidence.

May: 1
Angley
Lord Hatterton
10 Mes. New.
22d

This was opposed by the Solicitor General for the defendants, who insisted, that this kind of evidence could not be given; for the custom which was now in dispute, was used and confined to the manors in question; and therefore no custom which prevailed in other manors, could be any ways applicable to the particular custom now in dispute. Customs are different in different manors, and it would be of the worst consequence, and create the utmost confusion, if the custom of one manor should be allowed in proof to support the custom of another manor. Customs of particular manors are in their nature distinct, but if this sort of evidence should be allowed, the customs of all manors must become the same: in some manors heriots are paid, in some not; in some the fines are certain, in some arbitrary; but because a heriot is paid in the manor of A. is it therefore any reason that a heriot must be paid in the manor of B? Certainly no; for the custom of one manor can by no means be conclusive upon another manor; because each manor hath its particular customs, and they have no relation to one another, but by accident. Each manor hath its own customs, and the validity of those customs must depend upon their own strength, without having any assistance from the customs which prevail in other manors.

Serjeant Wynne of the same side said, that it had been the constant practice on the Northern circuit, where questions of this kind frequently arose, always to disallow of this sort of evidence; and he cited a case, in which Mr. Justice Reynolds ruled it so, the last assizes at Carlisle.

Serjeant Pengelly contra. The evidence we offer, is in order to shew the uniformity of the customs of these kinds of manors in general, throughout the whole county. We do not say, that because there is such a custom in one manor, that there must therefore necessarily be the same custom in another; no, we are only attempting to explain the nature and tenure of these customary estates, and are going to shew, that wherever these sort of estates prevail, the lords who have been tenants for life of such manors, have always, without any controversy received their general fines: and this must certainly be very proper evidence in the present question: it will prove, that it is the nature of these estates in all places where they prevail, to be subject to the payment of fines in like cases, and that is the undoubted privilege of like lords to be intitled to them. If there should be a question whether a copyhold can be entailed; the party would have liberty to give in evidence the custom of entailing in other manors. But I hope the court will have no difficulty in allowing this sort of evidence, since this very question hath been already determined upon a solemn trial at bar between Chapman and Atkinson, Mich. 24 Car. 2. B. R. 3 Keb. 90. where the question was, whether a general fine was due to an infant succeeding lord, during his minority; and upon the trial of this issue, the defendants gave in evidence, that other manors adjoining had the same custom not to pay to the lord till he was of full age; and the book says, that the court held this evidence to be good.

Attorney General of the same side, The present question concerns the nature of customary estates in general, and this is a tenure by which the greatest part of the estates in the Northern counties are held: it is not the custom of these particular manors, which the present question is confined to, but the question relates to these estates in general, and therefore it is very proper to examine into the tenure and nature of these estates in all other places where they prevail. The issue which is to be tried is not whether there is such a custom in these particular manors, but whether the Duke of Somerset, as next admitting lord, hath a right to these fines; so that the right is the thing in question, and to prove that he hath a right, we are going to shew, that it is the nature of these estates to be subject to a general fine in such cases. If any dispute should arise about Gavelkind lands which lie out of the county of Kent, (as some lands of that tenure do) can it be pretended, that the party would not be admitted in that case, to examine into the custom of Gavelkind in general? And it is no more that we contend for in the present case; we only desire that we may give evidence of what is the general custom of tenant-right estates.

Lutwyche of the same side, I have gone the Northern circuit many years, and I have always observed it to be the practice, to allow this sort of evidence (and in this Boote and Fazakerley who had gone the same circuit many years, and were of counsel with the Duke, agreed with him.) He cited the case of Relf, which was tried some years ago at Carlisle, and was thus: A. was lord of a manor, and was the last admitting lord, and sold the manor to B. afterwards C. one of the customary tenants of the said manor died, and B. admitted his heir; then A. who was the last general admitting lord died, and B. demanded a fine of the heir of C. and upon the heir's refusing to pay it, B. brought his action against him to recover it; and upon the trial B.

was permitted to give evidence of what was the custom of other manors throughout the county.

Raymond Chief Justice, I have always looked upon it as a settled principle in the law, that the customs of one manor shall not be given in evidence to explain the custom of another manor (1); for if this kind of evidence should be allowed, the consequence seems to be, that it would let in the custom of one manor into another, and in time bring the customs of all manors to be the same. I should readily admit that this evidence might be allowed, if the customs of tenant-right estates were the same in all manors; but it is plain that the customs of these estates are different in different manors: for these reasons I am inclined in my own private opinion, to disallow the evidence, which is now offered: but upon the authority of the case in Keble, and upon the credit of the Gentleman who go the Northern circuit, and affirm that it has been the constant practice to allow this kind of evidence there, I must submit, though against my own opinion.

Fortescue Justice, I think the evidence which is offered ought to be allowed; there is a great difference betwixt the custom of a manor, and the tenure of a manor; and the question which we are now trying merely concerns the tenure of the plaintiff's manors; therefore it is very proper to enquire, what are the qualities which attend other estates, which are held by the same tenure. And it must give great satisfaction to those who are to try the present question, to know how far this quality of paying fines in like cases, has attended the like tenure in other manors. I think the case in Keble is a plain authority, and we must follow precedents.

Reynolds Justice, I have been always of opinion, that the customs of one manor could not be made use of to influence the customs of another. And so it has always been held in cases where the dispute is concerning the intailing of a copyhold; where the customs of adjoining manors are never allowed, as evidence to support the custom of the particular manor in question. But upon the authority of the case which has been cited, and upon what has been affirmed by the gentlemen at the bar, I submit that the evidence that is offered shall be allowed, though it is contrary to the notion I have always had of the rules of evidence.

but they were up; however upon putting the case to them and the Barons of the Exchequer, they were all of opinion (as Judge Denton told me) that the evidence of other manors should not have been allowed, and said they had never known it (2).

Upon this, the plaintiff proceeded to give evidence of the customs of other manors.

And after a long examination of witnesses in relation to the customs, and what had happened in other manors, viz. that tenants in dower, jointresses, and tenants for life by settlements, had had general fines paid to them by their tenants; the jury, by the direction of the court, brought in a verdict for the plaintiff the Duke of Somerset.

And at the end of this term, the cause came on again before the Lord Chancellor, who decreed the tenants to pay their fines, and gave the Duke his costs.

(2) But the point here decided in B. R. was confirmed in Lowther v. Raw, in Dom. Proc. Fort. 44. Vide also Dean & Chapter of Ely v. Warren, 2 Atk. 189. & Furneaux v. Hutchins, Cowp. 807. in which it is laid down, that proof of a custom in other parishes is no evidence to affect the parish in question unless the custom is laid as a general custom of the country. See also Rudding v. Newel, post. 957.

A. is bound apprentice to B. who is a freeman of the city of London, and A. is bound and inrolled there, then goes and lives with his master in Middlesex. The justices of the peace for the county may discharge him. L. Raym. 1410. 2 Sess. Ca. 285. no. 223. Cal. of Sett. & Rem. p. 118. no. 161. S. C.

THIS was an order of sessions made at Hick's Hall, for the discharge of an apprentice to a freeman of the city of London, and who was bound and inrolled there: and the order being removed hither, there were three exceptions taken to it (1).

1. That the apprentice was bound and inrolled in London.
2. Not bound by the justices.
3. Not a trade within the statute, he being a glazier.

(1) The report in 1 Sess. Cases is inaccurate in its state of the case. It represents the apprentice as being bound in Middlesex, and yet makes the 1st objection to be that which is taken here, 'that the apprentice was bound and inrolled in London.' It then states the 2d objection to be "that he was bound by the justices," which independant of the contradiction, could never be a ground of objection at all. Indeed the answer given p. 287. shews that we should read the 2d objection there as it is put here; "not bound by the justices."

To

To these exceptions it was answered, that the clause of the statute 5 Eliz. c. 4. § 35. enacts, "That if any master shall misuse his apprentice, he shall repair unto one justice of the peace where he dwelleth, &c." And § 40. provides, "That the customs of London and Norwich shall be saved." Sec. 35. has always received a large construction in favour of the jurisdiction of justices, for though upon the master's complaint no power is given to the justices to discharge, yet in 21 Car. 2. 1 Saund. 313. 1 Vent. 175. Hawksworth and Hillarie's case, it is held, that it was reasonable, and within the intent of the statute, that an apprentice should be discharged from an ill master, as well as a master should be discharged from an ill apprentice; and in 1 Mod. Wilkins v. Edwards there is the same point, and in 1 Vent. 174.

1. The first and principal question is, whether the court of sessions at Hicks's Hall have any jurisdiction to discharge an apprentice to a freeman of London; or whether he is not to be discharged only by the mayor's court. It is found that the apprentice lived with his master out of the city of London, and within the jurisdiction of the justices of Middlesex.

To this exception it was answered, that the statute does not regard where the binding or inrolling is, but gives the jurisdiction expressly to the justices of peace where the master lives; and if this did not belong to the justices of Middlesex, where the master lives, there would be a failure of justice; for neither the chamberlain, or any other city magistrate, have power to compel the master's appearance before them.

2. To the second exception it was said, that it was immaterial where the apprentice was bound, for the same reason.

3. And to the third exception it was said, that formerly indeed it was a doubt, whether the statute did extend to all trades; but of late it hath been settled and agreed, that it does. Salk. 471. (2) Palm. 526. 2 Keb. 822. Rex v. Taunton, Hil. 6 Geo.

The court affirmed the order of discharge, and said they would not take away the jurisdiction of the mayor's court, but only give a concurrent jurisdiction to the justices of the peace for the county. And it would be very inconvenient, to have apprentices to a freeman of London, who are bound there, and who live in distant countries, obliged to come up to the mayor's court to get themselves discharged and the words of the statute are very plain; for they give the jurisdiction to the justices where the apprentice lives.

3 Lons. & Lat 344

ONE John Hall was possessed of a term for years in certain lands lying in the county of Middlesex, and granted an annuity of 40 l. to the plaintiff to be issuing out of the lands. The defendant being concerned for this Hall in the management of some of his affairs, knew that Hall had granted this annuity to the plaintiff, and had seen the deed, and paid him part of the annuity upon Hall's account: afterwards Hall purchases the reversion of these lands, and then the defendant purchases the term and the reversion of Hall. Hall dies, and the defendant refused to pay the plaintiff his annuity, because the deed by which Hall had granted it was not registered according to the statute 7 Ann. c. 20. which requires that all deeds or conveyances of, and all incumbrances upon, lands lying in the county of Middlesex, shall be registered within such a time at the office; otherwise every such conveyance shall be void against any subsequent purchaser for a valuable consideration. The defendant therefore insisted that he was a subsequent purchaser for a valuable consideration, and that the plaintiff's claim of an annuity could not affect him, because it was not registered.

The whole court were clearly of opinion, that the plaintiff was intitled to have his annuity out of these lands against the defendant, notwithstanding this statute. For the statute only intended to give such notice of former incumbrances to purchasers, that they might not thereby be defrauded; but if a man knows of his own knowledge, that there is a prior incumbrance, and notwithstanding that knowledge will be a purchaser, the statute was never intended to relieve such, though the first incumbrance was not registered. For where a man purchases with notice of a prior incumbrance, he purchases with an ill conscience; and in a court of equity his purchase shall never be established.

Therefore they decreed the plaintiff his annuity and the arrears.

Buckley vers. Nightingale. In C. B.

THE plaintiff as administrator of the goods and chattels of Joan Terry widow deceased, which were unadministered by John Terry deceased, who was the executor of the said Joan, brought an action of debt against the defendant as son and heir of Matthew Nightingale deceased, upon a bond executed by the said Matthew the father, for the payment of 200 l. to the said Joan. The defendant pleads, and admits that he is son and heir of the said Matthew (the obligor), but says that the said obligor his father in his life-time was seised of a messuage or tenement called Pryors, and in consideration of the sum of 300 l. demised the same to J. S. for ninety-nine years, reserving only a pepper corn yearly rent; and that the said defendant had not any lands or tenements by hereditary descent, nor had he ad diem impetrationis brevis originalis præd', or at any time after, except the reversion of the said messuage and tenement, and one messuage and three roods of land in R. being together of the value of 300 l. and no more: and then he sets forth, that the obligor his father, in his life-time, before his entering into the said bond upon which this action was brought, did become bound to one Thomas Poole in 120 l. which last bond at the time of his death was in full force and undischarged; and then goes on and sets forth in like manner three other bonds, each for the sum of 200 l. in which his said father was bound to three other persons; and shews that he died and left the said bonds standing against him in full force and virtue: then the defendant says, that long ante impetrationem brevis originalis præd' for the plaintiff, viz. upon the first of June 1720, he, the defendant, agreed with the several persons aforesaid to whom his father was bound, to pay them the several sums aforesaid, which in the whole amounted to 600 l. which he avers is more than the value of the said messuage and tenement and lands in R. and the reversion; et petit judicium si ipse ut filius et hæres ipsius Matthei patris de debito præd' virtute scripti præd' onerari debeat, &c. and then avers that the said Joan Terry, in her life-time refused to accept in satisfaction of her said debt, her proportion of the said sum from the defendant together with the rest of the said creditors. To this plea the plaintiff demurred.

And upon argument the whole court were of opinion, that the defendant's plea was good; for though it was the defendant's debt because his ancestor had bound him, yet he is liable no further than to the value of the land descended; and as soon as he has paid his ancestor's debts to the value of the land, he shall hold

THIS was an action upon the case for these words; "You are a thief, and I will prove you so." The plaintiff declared that by reason of the defendant's speaking them, one John Merry and divers others, who were his customers, left off dealing with him in his trade.

Upon the trial the plaintiff proved the speaking the words, and the special damage as to Merry; and would have gone on to prove by several others, that had likewise left off dealing with him by reason of the defendant's speaking these words.

But the defendant opposed this; because (as he insisted) he could not be supposed to be prepared to answer such uncertain kind of evidence.

The Chief Justice said, That in actions for words which are not in themselves actionable, and where the special damage is the gist of the action, this sort of evidence is allowed, though the particular instances of such damages are not specified in the declaration: but in actions for words which are themselves actionable, (as the present words are) particular instances of special damage shall not be given in evidence, unless particularized in the declaration. And therefore he thought the plaintiff could not be allowed to give particular instances of the loss of any other customer, except Merry. He said that he had known it ruled otherwise; but that this was his opinion: however he admitted the plaintiff to give general evidence of the loss of customers (1).

Marriot vers. Marriot. In Scaccario.

MARRIOT, Master of the Exchequer of pleas, made his will, and left his wife executrix and residuary legatee. His sons were plaintiffs in this case, and contended, that this devise of the residuum was gotten by fraudulent means, and by surprise. The wife produced the probate of the will; and the counsel in behalf of the wife the defendant contended, that the probate of the will was conclusive evidence touching this disposition of the residuum, and that a court of equity could not look into the same, but that it was merely of ecclesiastical jurisdiction, and to be determined there.

After probate of the will a court of equity may inquire into the fairness of a residuary devise of personal estate.

And in this question four things were considered by the court. First, How the jurisdiction of testamentary matters stood by the civil law.

The way of authenticating wills in the civil law was first before the prator, and afterwards before the magister census, for they reckoned wills to be in the nature of judgments or decisions that a man himself made touching his estate. And therefore they were shut up with the magistrate during the life of the person, for the quiet and repose of the family, but were opened after his decease. They were signed by the testator, and sealed by him, and by the witnesses, upon a thread, and carried in to the prator: after the death of the party the witnesses were called if living, to acknowledge their seals; if they were not living, then the seals were broke, and the will opened, in the presence of other sufficient witnesses; and the will was registered, and a copy of it delivered over to any person that would ask for the same. For it was reckoned as a matter of record, and therefore any person might have access to it. For this see Digest. lib. 28. tit. 1. Qui testamenta facere possunt, et quemadmodum testamenta fiunt: and Cod. lib. 6. tit. 32. Quemadmodum testamenta aperiantur, &c. When any legacy was disposed of to pious uses for the use of the church, or for monasteries, or for the poor, the bishops were to sue for the same, and see to the administration thereof. This appears by the Code, lib. 1. tit. 3. leg. 42. § 6. necessarium. § 7. § 8. and § 9.

Upon this the bishop began to intermeddle with the probate of wills, which was a temporal authority. But this Justinian would not endure, and therefore in his Code he puts the law against the bishop's probate of wills before the laws herein before mentioned: and it is afterwards said, eodem tit. leg. 41. Repetita promulgatione, non solum iudices quorumlibet tribunalium, verum etiam defensores ecclesiarum ecclesiarum hujus almae urbis, quos turpissimum insinuandi ultimas deficientium voluntates genus irrepperat, praeponendos esse censuimus, ne rem attingant, quae nemini prorsus omnium, secundum constitutionum praecpta, praequam magistro census, competit; absurdum etenim clericis est, immo etiam opprobriosum, si peritos se velint [ostendere] disceptationum esse forensium: temeratoribus hujus sanctionis poena quinquaginta librarum auri feriendis: datum XIII Kal. Tract. Tract.

uum, to. 14.
fo. 199. n. 88.

We come now, in the second place, to consider how things stood by the canon law. The popes, as their power increased, endeavoured to get the jurisdiction over testaments; and this appears by the decretal, lib. 3. tit. 26. c. 6. Si heredes iusta testatoris non adimpleverint, ab episcopo loci illius omnis res quae eis relicta est canonice interdicatur, cum fructibus et ceteris emolumentis, ut vota defuncti adimpleantur. And likewise Decret. lib. 3. tit. 26. de testamentis, c. 17. Tua nobis fraternitas intimavit, quod nonnulli tam religiosi quam clerici seculares, aut laici, pecuniam et alia bona quae per manus eorum ex testamentis decedentium debent in usus pios expendi, non dubitant aliis usibus applicare; cum igitur in omnibus piis voluntatibus sit per locorum episcopos providendum, ut secundum defuncti voluntatem universa procedant, licet etiam a testatoribus id contingeret interdici: mandamus quatenus executores testamentorum hujusmodi, ut bona ipsa fideliter et plenarie in usus praedictos expendant, monitione praemissa, compellas.

Pope Innocent the fourth upon this law, fol. 152. says, that the bishop may dispense this charity, if there be no executor appointed by the will, and if there be an executor and he does not fulfil the will, that then he may take it to himself. Decret. lib. 3. de testamentis, tit. 26. c. 19. Johannes clericus et P. laicus executores ultima voluntatis O. clerici sanctae crucis, qui venerabilibus et piis locis de bonis suis in ultima voluntate legavit, mandans insuper satisfieri creditoribus per eosdem, post mandatum susceptum per dioecesanum cogi debent testatoris explere ultimam voluntatem. Vide Innocent. in legem 153.

Pan. to. 4. fo.

Panormitan upon the law, Si heredes, says, that this matter of will, even where the devise is to pious uses, is mixti fori, and that the heir or executor is to have a year's time to fulfill the will, before he can be compelled to it by ecclesiastical censure.

Pan. to. 4. fo.
176.

Upon the law, Tua nobis, Panormitan says, that the bishop is to compel by ecclesiastical censure the executor to perform the will to pious uses, although the will itself says, that the bishop was not to intermeddle: for they look upon that as an irrational part of the devise, which is in itself void.

The last chapter, verbo Johannes; The case as Panormitan states it was, where after debts paid the residue was left to pious uses, and there the bishop was to compel the payment of debts, and afterwards to see the disposition of the residuum. I do not find that any of the canonists pretend, that wills are of ecclesiastical cognizance sua natura, but only such wills as were made for pious uses.

Pan. to 4. fo.

Lyndwood, fo. 174. verbo Approbatis says, that jurisdiction of the ecclesiastical courts touching testamentary matters is by the custom of England, and not by the ecclesiastical law.

[669]

We are thirdly to consider upon what foot the ecclesiastical jurisdiction stood by the law of England. In England the bishop and sheriff sat together in the county court, as it appears by the laws of King Edgar, cap. 5 de comitiis. Centuria comitiis quisque (ut ante præscribitur) interesse: oppidana ter quotannis habeantur comitia: celiberrimus autem ex omni satrapia bis quotannis conventus agatur, cui quidem illius diocesis episcopus et senator intersunt, quorum alter jura divina, alter humana populo edocet. Leges Canut. c. 17. de comitiis municipalibus. Et ter in anno habeantur comitia municipalia, et duo conventus provinciales, aut plures etiam, et illis interfit episcopus ac senator, et ibi ubique doceatur tam jus divinum quam humanum.

Wilkins 78.
Lamb. Saxon
Laws 69.

From these laws it plainly appears that the probate of testaments was in the county courts. William the Conqueror was the first that separated the ecclesiastical court from the civil. Selden in his notes upon Eadmerus 167. gives us the very charter of such separation. Propterea mando et regia auctoritate præcipio, ut nullus episcopus vel archidiaconus de legibus episcopalibus amplius in hundred. placita teneat: nec causam quæ ad regimen animarum pertinet, ad judicium secularium hominum adducant. This charter, as Mr. Selden has told us, was recited in a close roll of Richard the second, and then confirmed: but the charter of William the first does not mention matters testamentary, or the probate of wills, to be of ecclesiastical cognizance. It only says, that the crimes that were to be prosecuted pro salute animæ, were to be of that cognizance.

That which seems first to have given birth to the ecclesiastical jurisdiction, was the charter of Henry the first: which says, Si quis baronum vel hominum meorum infirmabitur, sicut ipse debet vel dare disposuerit pecuniam suam, ita datum esse concedo, quoniam si ipse præsentus

Mat. Paris, fol.

præventus vel armis vel infirmitate pecuniam suam nec dederit nec dare disposuerit, uxor sua, sive liberi aut parentes et legitimi homines sui, pro anima ejus eam dividant. This let in the several canons before mentioned into England: for since the personal estate was to be disposed of for the soul, they looked upon every will to be a disposition of the testator in a gratuitous or charitable manner: that whatever was left, was to be disposed of by the executor for the good of the soul: so that all the canons touching charitable dispositions were to take place in England.

In the time of Richard the first, when he was in confinement, the clergy got a confirmation from him of the ecclesiastical immunities: this is mentioned by Mat. Paris 161. Item distributio rerum quæ in testamento reliquuntur auctoritate ecclesiæ fiet, nec decima pars ut olim subtrahetur: si quis enim subitanea morte vel quolibet casu præoccupatus fuerit, ut de rebus suis disponere non possit, distributio bonorum ejus ecclesiastica auctoritate fiet. This charter is likewise mentioned in the same terms in Radolphus de Diceto, one of the Decem scriptores F. 658. And these ecclesiastical immunities were confirmed by the pope, and the confirmation appears in 1 Vol. Fædera 104. though there there is no express mention of a testamentary jurisdiction. Note also it appears by the charter, that the King releases the tenth, that used to be taken on the death of the tenant; and henceforward the King and his Lords only took heriots as an acknowledgement in lieu of such a decimation.

From henceforth the ecclesiastical court began to consider a proper method for the publication of wills; therefore when any person died, they summoned in the executor or next relation to take care of his soul, and the executor was obliged to bring in the will. And both executor and administrator were obliged to bring in an inventory of his goods, and the charges were heightened, by the canons, in order to bring every thing into the ecclesiastical court: Lyndw. 176. Canon of Simon Mephram. And it appears by the canon of Stratford, that the residue in the hands of the executor was to be distributed for the good of the soul. Lyndw. 178. And by the canon of Otobon an inventory was to be exhibited. Lyndw. 107.

Notwithstanding all this the jurisdiction of the county courts still continued, for this was acknowledged to be a matter mixti fori, and therefore they could not hinder the county court from proceeding, even according to their own canon law. But in order to get the whole jurisdiction, in the time of Richard the second, as is mentioned by Selden in his notes on Eadmerus, they got the right to publish the law of William the Conqueror, and confirm confirm the same; that no matters of ecclesiastical cognizance should be transacted in the county courts, this is in the charter of 2 R. 2. Membran. 12. n. 5. and is mentioned in Selden's Radmerus 168.

From henceforward the clergy had the whole jurisdiction of wills, because the county court could not receive the probate, and the King's court had never intermeddled with it; for by the charter of Rich. 1. herein before mentioned, and likewise by Magna charta, cap. 18. the King had granted the liberty to his own tenants, to dispose of their goods, and therefore the will touching personal estate never received any sanction in the immediate Court of the King.

This reconciles that case in Fitzherbert's Abridgment, tit. Testament, fol. 148. said by Fairfax, that it was but of late, that the church had the probate of wills, which was by an act, I suppose he must mean the confirmation, of Ric. 2. before mentioned, for there is no act of Parliament that gives them that probate, and he says, that in other countries the probate was of temporal cognizance, which Selden notes to be true in all countries, except France. And Tremaile in that case asserts the usage of proving wills in courts-baron, which certainly may be where the custom prevails.

In 11 H. 7. 12. Fineux asserts, that the probate of wills did not belong to the spiritual court by the ecclesiastical law, but came to them by custom and usage only: and these are the foundations on which my Lord Coke in Hensloe's case 9 Rep. fol. 38. concludes, that when the will is proved in the ecclesiastical court, that court has executed its authority; but the executors are to sue in the temporal courts, to get in the estate of the deceased.

Fourthly, we are to see what have been the several distinctions in our law touching this jurisdiction, which will fall under five heads.

1. That the spiritual court is the only court now, that has authority to receive the probate of wills, and to give a sanction to them; because the jurisdiction of the county court is lost by non-usage; and since Magna charta, cap. 18. the King's courts did not intermeddle with the goods of a deceased tenant. But here must be excepted all courts-baron that have had probate of wills time out of mind, and have always continued that usage.

Lyon v. Barron

2. The seal of the ecclesiastical court does authenticate the will, for there the will is to be brought in and proved. And therefore the case in Raymond 406, 407. is certainly good law, that the seal of the ordinary cannot be contradicted, because if there be no way in the temporal courts to prove the will relating to chattels, it must go on in the spiritual court, and the determination must there be final: for the temporal court cannot make a judgment concerning the will contrary to what was made in the ecclesiastical court; and therefore it is certainly good law, that if they shew a probate under the seal of the ordinary, they cannot give in evidence that the will was forged, or that the testator was non compos mentis, or that another person was executor (1), but they may give in evidence that the seal was forged, or that there were bona notabilia, because that is not in contradiction to the real seal of the courts; but it admits the seal, and avoids it. 1 Lev. 235. Vaughan 207. 1 Show. 293. And since the ecclesiastical court has the probate of wills now settled by custom, the temporal court cannot prohibit them in their inquiries whether the testator was compos mentis or not, or whether the will be revoked or not, because that is necessary for authenticating the will. Hardr. 131. 313.

3. If a temporal matter be pleaded in bar of an ecclesiastical demand, they must proceed in the ecclesiastical court according to the temporal law, or else the temporal courts will prohibit. As if payment be pleaded in bar of a legacy, and there is but one witness, which the ecclesiastical court will not admit; there the temporal courts will prohibit them, because it is a matter temporal that bars the ecclesiastical demand. Shutter et ux' v. Friend, 1 Show. 158. 173. 1 Vent. 291. 3 Mod. 283. But if upon the probate of the will they alledge on the other side, that the will was revoked, and they would prove the revocation by one witness, according to the resolution in Yelverton in the case of Brown v. Wentworth, fol. 92, 93. they might be prohibited from granting the probate; but that resolution, which was only of three Judges against two, and seems against the opinion of Rolle, 2 Abr. 299. seems to intrench upon their jurisdiction; for if they cannot judge by their law, whether the will is revoked or not, they cannot judge whether there is a will or no will: indeed the judges there say, that the revocation is a temporal matter, and therefore it is to be proved according to their law, by one witness; but then they will not be suffered to determine touching the validity of a will of personal estate, which every body allows to be of ecclesiastical cognizance. But if the spiritual court do admit a will, and yet will not give the probate out to an executor, because he cannot give security for a just administration, it seems that a mandamus will lie. And this was resolved in the case of The King v. Sir Richard Raines, Mich. Salk. 299. 10 W. 3. in B. R. For though they are to determine, whether there be a will or no will, yet if there be a will, the executor has a temporal right, and they cannot put any terms upon him but what are mentioned in the will; and therefore if they will not grant the probate, where they admit there is an executor, the court will grant a mandamus.

4. If a man give lands to be sold for the payment of debts, and disposes of the money to several persons, that cannot be sued for in an ecclesiastical court, but only in a court of equity, because that is not a legacy merely of goods and chattels, but it arises originally out of lands and tenements, and they have a testamentary jurisdiction touching chattels only. Hob. 365. case 345. 2 Rol. Ab. 285.

5. The courts of equity can hold plea concerning a legacy, and likewise concerning the devise of the residuum, which is but a legacy. They may in notorious cases declare a legatee, that has obtained a legacy by fraud, to be a trustee for another: as if the drawer of a will should insert his own name instead of the name of a legatee, no doubt he would be a trustee for the real legatee. As to the devise of the residuum, nothing can be more clear: for since the case of Foster v. Monk, wherever an executor had a specifick legacy, he was looked upon as a trustee for the relations in a course of distribution: and no body ever attacked these resolutions upon this head of argument, that they were contrary to the ecclesiastical jurisdiction. But in all such cases a court of equity must consider what is the real will of the testator, and they cannot declare a trust according to their own fancy, nor according to what the testator should have willed, for then they make the will, and not the testator. But they may, to answer the real intention of the testator, declare a trust upon such will, though it be not contained in the will itself; which is in these three cases. 1. In that of fraud upon a legatee before mentioned (2). 2. Where the words imply a trust for the relations, as in the case of a specifick devise to executors, and no disposition of the residuum (3). 3. In the case of the le-gatee promising the testator to stand as a trustee for another (4). And no body has thought, that declaring a trust in any of those cases is an infringement of the ecclesiastical jurisdiction (5).

The court being thus of opinion, that they had a power to relieve against the devise of the residuum, they directed proper issues to try the matters of fraud and surprize insisted on by the plaintiffs, against which decree the defendant brought an appeal, but before any thing further was done upon it, the plaintiff and defendant agreed to divide the residuum between them.

ON a mandamus to restore a recorder, they returned that he was only an officer at pleasure, and that upon due summons to chuse another, they did chuse another, et perinde the former was removed.

Where an officer is at pleasure, the choice of another is a determination.

It was objected, that this was only argumentative, and that returns to writs of mandamus must be certain to every intent. Et per cur', That is good general doctrine, but not applicable to this case. They needed not say any thing of his being removed, because the chusing another is a determination of their will, which is enough for them to shew.

Adjournatur. And at another day the Solicitor General objected, that the summons was only to elect a new recorder: and many a man, who would have appeared, had the summons been to remove, might absent himself when it was only to chuse a new one. Et per cur', We must presume people know the effect and consequence of their own acts, that in the case of an officer at pleasure a new election is an actual amotion. 1 Vent. 342 (1).

Then it was objected, that the letters patents are only said to be granted sub magno sigillo Angliæ, without sigillat'. Sed per cur', The word sub imports it; the other would be but a repetition. The return was allowed.

Pleading letters patent sub sigillo without sigillat' is well.

MANDAMUS to admit George Wannel to his freedom of the city of London: setting forth that he was bound apprentice to one Saniuel Vanreyoen of London, merchant-taylor, for seven years: that he had served out his time, and been admitted into the merchant-tailors company, and in due form presented to the chamberlain, who refused to admit him to his freedom.

The chamberlain returns, that London has time out of mind been a corporation, and consists of several societies, guilds and fraternities of freemen of the city; and that no person could ever be a freeman of the city, till he was a member of one of those fraternities. That time out of mind there has been a company called the joiners company. Then he returns a power to make by-laws, and that 19 October 6 W. & M. a by-law was made, reciting that several persons not free of the joiners company had exercised the trade of a joiner in an unskilful and fraudulent manner, which could not be redressed whilst such persons were not under the orders and regulations of the company; therefore it enacts that no person shall use that trade, who is not free of the company, under the penalty of 10*l*. That the plaintiff did exercise the trade of a joiner, and that at the time of his being presented to the chamberlain he was not free of the joiners company, and therefore he does not admit him to the freedom of the city.

Upon this return the question was, Whether this by-law, to oblige a member of one company to be admitted in another company, was good or not. And to prove it naught, the case of Robinson v. Gros court, 5 Mod. 104. was relied on, where a by-law to oblige all persons using musick and dancing, to be free of the company of musicians, was held void; and even there it did not appear that the person was free of any other company, as it does in this case.

On the other hand it was said, that this was a very reasonable by-law: since it tended to prevent frauds in trade. And of that opinion was the court, it being properest for such a person to be under the regulation of that company who understand the trade best. That the case of Robinson v. Gros court was adjudged upon the foot of a dancing-master's not being a trader; and there was no inconvenience to an honest man, in being free of this company rather than another.

But the Chief Justice started a difficulty, whether the plaintiff having seryed a merchant-taylor, could oblige the joiners' company to admit him, it not being so stated in the return; and without that be taken for granted, the by-law will be void. To which it was answered by Fortescue Justice, That the imposing the penalty of 10*l.* for not taking up his freedom, is the strongest implication that they are bound to grant it. Per cur' ulterius concilium.

It was argued a second time in last Trinity term by Mr. Reeve and the Solicitor General, much to the effect of the former argument. And now this term Raymond Chief Justice delivered the resolution of the court.

We are all of opinion, that this is a good by-law, being made in regulation of trade, and to prevent fraud and unskilfulness, of which none but a company that exercise the same trade can be judges. This does not take away his right to his freedom, but only his election of what company he shall be free; it is only to direct him to go to the proper company.

As to the objection, that it does not appear the joiners' company are bound to admit him; we are all of opinion, that it being said he shall take up his freedom in that company under the penalty of 10*l.* he will be intitled to have a mandamus, to prevent a forfeiture. Per curiam, The return must be allowed.
